THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to God, their own Father and Mother, and true Bible Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d.,

contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables Parents to teach one child or a family of twelve children, Teachers to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, Educated Ladies to teach all ages, or Ministers without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the

BIBLE VOICES can be had—Part I., 1d., or 7s. per 100; cloth, 2d. or 12s. Parts I. and II., 3d., or 18s. per 100.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.

Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

The Christian.

FILLED WITH THE HOLY GHOST.

THOUGHTS FOR WHITSUNTIDE.

ALL true disciples of the Lord Jesus have the Spirit, who leads them into the faith, and reveals to them the things of Christ, and causes them to know the ordinary life of a saint of God. But all Christians have not the special gift of the Holy Ghost, the gift of power. To be full of the Holy Ghost is to be full of the Spirit of God, to be full of the power of God.

The Holy Ghost is not only the gift of life, but of life more abundantly. He is the power to speak effectually; the power to work effectually the works of God. For the Holy Ghost is God in the man, and God Himself working through the man as He pleases, and showing that the words and the works are indeed of God, though through man as the medium. Those who are baptized of the Spirit, who are full of the Holy Ghost, are manifestly the chosen of the Lord for some special service, and they are in his hands as tools are in the hands of a workman, though the works are varied through different individuals, according to the will and working of the Lord (see 1 Cor xii. 4—11, 28, and Eph. iv. 11).

Every man and woman full of the Holy Ghost is wholly yielded up to the Lord, who is in them, and they know what He would have them to do in his name. They are simply the willing and honoured instruments of the will and word and work of the Lord Himself; and all is of the Spirit and not of the flesh.

When the Spirit was given to the seventy elders in the wilderness, "they prophesied and did not cease; and though two of them were not in their appointed place at the Tabernacle, but in the camp, they also prophesied" (Numbers xi. 25, 26). All the prophets "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter i. 21). And on the day of Pentecost, when the disciples of Christ "were all filled with the Holy Ghost," they spake "as the Spirit gave them utterance" (Acts ii. 4). When "the Holy Ghost fell on all them who heard the word" in the house of Cornelius, they "spake with tongues, and magnified God" (Acts x. 44—46).

In all these instances we see the result of the Holy Ghost being in them; the work was seen to be marvellous and beyond the power of man. It is written that such results were to follow the gift of the Holy Ghost (Joel ii. 28). Not that we are to seek to do marvels, for sometimes a quiet smile is owned of the Lord to effect great things. If we are true to the Lord in little things we are ready to be employed by Him in greater matters if He will.

Those who are full of the Holy Ghost know that "Jesus is the Lord" (1 Cor. xii. 3), and they yield themselves entirely to Him. They seek only his pleasure, and do it without saying a word, having real delight in Him and his will (Isaiah lviii. 13—14). They have no plan of their own, but are willing to be anything and to do anything that He may please. If occupied in some great work they are not angry should their attention and service be required in some little thing; like Philip, they can leave the city at the word of the Lord, and go into the wilderness to speak to one man (Acts viii. 5—40). They are living creatures watchful to know the Lord's will, and they do it immediately, like the cherubim mentioned in Ezekiel i. 18—25 and x. 17. They know that there is a time to "let down their wings" and listen to the voice of the Lord, as well as a time to fly and carry the word to those to whom He may send them. They never go till He says "Go," and when He says "Go," He always goes with them; and then the Lord's work is easy to them, and pleasant, and his word is spoken in freedom, for through such "flow rivers of living water" (John vii. 38).

It is a great honour when the Holy Ghost makes use of anyone in order to manifest his love and power, and teach and save and bless the children of men.

When the Holy Ghost dwells in any person, He does not excite the one in whom He dwells, but keeps him calm; He does not move him to speak and act in ignorance, but He reveals truth, and works effectually; nor does He exalt the creature, but Christ the Lord. The prophets and apostles of old were "nothing," and the people who knew the Lord regarded the words and the works as from the Lord Himself; they honoured the speakers, but only as instruments of the Lord.

Some of us need to ask ouselves, as individuals, "Have I received the Holy Ghost? If not, why have I not?" We need to examine ourselves, to see if the cause be in ourselves. We cannot say that we are full of the Holy Ghost till we have Him as our all and we are entirely yielded up to Him, every faculty of our being his: He ours, to do all for us; and we his, that He may do what He pleases with us and by us. When we really desire the gift of the Holy Ghost, really long to be chosen of the Lord, and are truly willing to be wholly his, for his service altogether, as He pleases, then let us, like the first disciples, wait for Him to take full possession of us, and make use of us as He will.

There seems to be no uniform way of obtaining the gift of the Holy Ghost. The ordinary mode in the days of the apostles was by the laying on of hands, though God did not confine Himself to any one course in imparting his Spirit of power. The Holy Ghost "fell" on those in the house of Cornelius without any prayer, and even before they were baptized; but the disciples at Ephesus, who had been baptized of John, were re-baptized in the name of the Lord; then "when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues and prophesied" (Acts xix. 1—7).

If we know of any hindrance that we can remove, we are to seek grace to remove it. We are called on to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit" (2 Cor. vii. 1); each to be "a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work" (2 Tim. ii. 21).

We are not to seek for any feeling of the Spirit within ourselves, but always to live in his presence by faith, and expect Him to make use of us, to speak his own words through us, and to do his own work by us when and where and as He pleases. We must know that we can do nothing, and yet believe in Him to do everything. And when He does any great thing by us we must give to Him all the glory, for we are simply his instruments, prepared by Himself for his service.

Do we really desire the Holy Ghost? If so, he has given to us that desire; and let us remember that God has promised the Holy Ghost; the passages are numerous, and the promise is fulfilled to us in the Lord Jesus Christ.

This gift is of grace, and is through Christ, as Peter said on the Day of Pentecost (Acts ii. 33). Our Lord Himself said: "He that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water" (John vii. 38). Are we, then, really believing on Jesus Christ, really yielding ourselves up to Him as our Lord, and expecting Him to fulfil the promise in our experience? If not, why are we not believing? Christ once said to some in his presence: "How can ye believe, who receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour that cometh from God only?" (John v. 14.) So few seem really honestly willing to give to God all the glory, and to receive glory from Him alone. Alas! such know not what they do; they know not what they lose.

I have just been reading the following dream; it was written and published many years ago:—

"I sat down in an arm-chair, wearied with my work; my toil had been severe and protracted; many were seeking the pearl of great price, and many had found what they sought.

"The church wore an aspect of thrift and prosperity; joy, and hope, and courage were the prevailing sentiments on every hand. As for myself, I was joyous in my work. My brethren were united, my sermons and my exhortations were constantly telling on my hearers. My church was crowded with listeners. The whole community was more or less moved with the prevailing excitement, and, as the work went on, I had been led into exhausting labour for its promotion.

"Tired with my work, I soon lost myself in a sort of half-forgetful state, though I seemed fully aware of my place and my surroundings. Suddenly a stranger entered the room, without any preliminary tap or 'Come in.' I saw in his face benignity intelligence, and weight of character; but, though he was passably well attired, he carried suspended about his person measures and chemical agents and implements, which gave him a very strange appearance.

"The stranger came towards me, and, extending his hand, said, 'How is your zeal?'

I supposed when he began his question, that the query was for my health, but was pleased to hear his final word; for I was quite well pleased with my zeal, and doubted not the stranger would smile when he should know its proportions. Instantly I conceived of it as physical quantity, and put my hand into my bosom, and brought it forth and presented it to him for inspection. He took it and placed it in his scale, and weighed it carefully. I heard him say, 'One hundred pounds.' I could scarce suppress my audible tone of satisfaction, but I caught his earnest look as he noted down the weight, and I saw at once that he had drawn no final conclusion, but was intent on pursuing his investigation. He broke the mass to atoms, and put the crucible into the fire. When it was thoroughly fused he took it out and set it down to cool. It congealed in cooling, and when turned out on the hearth exhibited a series of layers or strata, which all, at the touch of the hammer, fell apart, and were severally tested and weighed, the stranger making minute notes as the process went on. When he had finished he presented the notes to me, and gave me a look of mingled sorrow and compassion, as without a word, except 'May God save you,' he left the room. I opened the 'notes,' and read as follows:—

Analysis of the zeal of Junius, a candidate for a crown of glory.

Weight in mass, 100 lbs.; of this, on analysis, there prove to be—

Bigotry	10	parts
Personal ambition	23	,,
Love of salary	19	,,
Pride of denomination	15	,,
,, talent	14	,,
Love of authority	12	,,
Love to God—pure	4	,,
,, Man—zeal	3	,,
	100 lbs.

"I had become troubled at the peculiar manner of the stranger, and especially at his parting look and words; but when I looked at the figures my heart sank as lead within me. I made a mental effort to dispute the correctness of the record, but I was suddenly startled into a more honest mood by an audible sigh—almost a groan—from the stranger, who had passed into the hall, and by a sudden darkness that had fallen upon me, by which the record became at once obscured and nearly illegible. I suddenly cried out, 'Lord, save me!' and knelt at my chair with the paper in my hand, and my eyes fixed upon it. At once it became a mirror, and I saw my heart reflected in it. The record was true. I saw it, I felt it, I confessed it, I deplored it, and I besought God, with many tears, to save me from myself, and at length, with a loud and irrepressible cry of anguish, I awoke.

"I had prayed in years gone by to be saved from hell, but my prayer to be saved from myself was now immeasurably more fervent and distressful. Nor did I rest or pause till the refining fire came down and went through my heart, searching, probing, melting, burning, filling all its chambers with light, and hallowing my whole heart to God.

"That light and that love are in my heart to-day, and when the trials and tears of my pilgrimage shall be at an end, I expect to kneel down in heaven, at the feet of the Divine Alchemist, and bless Him for the revelations of that day, that showed me where I stood, and turned my feet into a better, higher, narrower path.

"That day was the crisis of my history; and if there shall prove to have been in after years some depth and earnestness in my convictions, and some searching and saving pungency in my words, I doubt not eternity will show their connection with the visit of the Searcher of Hearts, at whose coming my sins went to judgment before hand, and I was weighed in the balances, and found wanting."

"Seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not" (Jer. xlv. 5). "Seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God" (Col. iii. 1). And while on earth, seek to save poor sinners; and "seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the Church" (1 Cor. xiv. 12). In order to do all this effectually, seek to be filled with the Holy Ghost! K.

THE REVISED VERSION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

WITH our many contemporaries, we have received an early copy of the long expected Revision of the Old Testament, which, before these lines are read, will be in the hands of the public. There is, of course, not time to do more than to convey to our readers a general impression of this great work from a necessarily hasty perusal of it. From the examination which we have been able to give, we rejoice to find that its accord with the venerable Version of which it is a revision is much greater than many would have expected. Taken as a whole, it is much nearer to the Authorised Version than the Revision of the New Testament has been; we value this because it will less disturb the faith of those who have not knowledge enough to understand fully what Revision means, and whose confidence in the Word of God is apt to be shaken by frequent changes. We also rejoice at the confirmation thus afforded to the substantial accuracy of the translation which has for nearly three hundred years satisfied the need of English-speaking Christians throughout the world.

We have examined chiefly those passages where vital truth is set forth. On turning to Isaiah liii. it is cheering to find that the advanced Hebrew scholarship of the present day can find little to alter in such a passage. The following three verses are wholly untouched:—

> "Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted."
> "But He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with his stripes we are healed."
> "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquty of us all."

The last three verses of the chapter are likewise almost as they stood before.

The few alterations to be noticed in this chapter are either changes of tense, such as, "He was despised and rejected of men," "To whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?" or changes to greater conformity with the Hebrew, such as "He was oppressed yet He humbled Himself, and opened not his mouth;" "As one from whom men hide their face He was despised, and we esteemed him not."

There is one very decided gain to the Christian reader in the revisers' translation of verse 8: "Who shall declare his generation?" was always a difficult text to explain. It now runs thus: "And as for his generation, who among them considered that he was cut off out of the land of the living? for the transgression of my people was he stricken," or, as the latter words are rendered in the margin, "to whom the stroke was due." The American Revision Company, whose suggestions are given in full, as in the New Testament, very happily suggest carrying on the interrogation to the end of the verse, and adopting the marginal reading, and so would read it: "As for his generation, who among them considered that he was cut off out of the land of the living for the transgression of my people, to whom the stroke was due?"

Turning to the earlier Books of the Bible, we find some interesting alterations for the better in those that set forth the Levitical ceremonial system. It has been long known that in the phrase "Tabernacle of the Congregation," the word "congregation" is not the right translation of the Hebrew word which it represents, and so we have now the more accurate rendering, "Tent of Meeting." This gives a new idea altogether to the object of the tabernacle or tent, which was not set up that they might meet one another, which is suggested by the word "congregation," but meet God, and this is confirmed strikingly by Exodus xxix. 42: "It shall be a continual burnt offering throughout your generations at the door of the tent of meeting before the Lord; where I will meet with you to speak there unto thee, and there I will meet with the Children of Israel."

The "meat offering" of our Old Version has always sounded strange in the light of the fact that it was of "fine flour." The Revisers have happily altered it to "meal offering."

The Revisers have not seen their way to alter the word "atonement," which was an unhappy rendering of a word which means propitiation or appeasement. The word itself in former times meant "reconciliation," and in the only place in which it occurs in the New Testament (Rom. v. 11) it represents the Greek word "reconciliation." But probably they thought that, mistaken as our Authorised Version is in having ever used it, still the usage of nearly three centuries is not lightly to be set aside. So the sixteenth of Leviticus and other similar passages retain the familiar word, which we can only now explain by saying that its meaning is now altered from what it expresses "at-one-ment," or reconciliation, and now, by long usage for the Hebrew word "propitiation," must be regarded as having acquired that meaning.

It has long been known to those acquainted with Hebrew, that however true the description of the human heart given in Jer. xvii. 9 may be, the words "desperately wicked" are stronger than the original will warrant, there being no idea of wickedness in the Hebrew word, but rather of sickness. So it is not to be wondered at that the Revisers have made it, "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately sick." How much light this throws on a verse which closely follows, "Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed, save me and I shall be saved: for Thou art my praise."

The familiar text, "Thy shoes shall be iron and brass," is rendered, "thy bars shall be iron and brass," retaining, however, the latter clause, "and as thy days so shall thy strength be."

An interesting instance of a more accurate translation of a Hebrew word throwing light upon a passage in the New Testament, is to be found in Isa. xli. 9—"The seed of Abraham, my friend, thou whom I have taken hold of." This is evidently what is referred to in Heb. iv. 16, "He taketh hold of the seed of Abraham." (R.V.)

In looking at the prophetic portions of Daniel we see some changes that may assist prophetic students in their study of that wonderful book. Of the little horn, in the seventh chapter, it is said in the twenty-fourth verse that "he shall put down three kings," instead of "subdue," which will be a relief to those who hold the papal fulfilment of this prophecy, as the Pope has never been a warrior, though he has been an intriguer, and a very potent one too. It is to be regretted that the rendering of the old version is retained in vii. 25, "he shall speak words against the Most High" when the orginal Chaldee is very distinctly "at the side of the Most High," implying an assumption of equality. In the famous prophecy of the seventy weeks in the ninth chapter there are some slight alterations. Messiah is rendered "the Anointed One." "But not for himself" is altered to "and shall have nothing," whereas "and it is not for him" would be both more literal and more true to the event.

So far as our examination has extended, there seems abundant cause for thankfulness that the alterations are so few, and such as there are seem to be on the whole judicious and sanctioned by the authority of scholarship. We rejoice that there is little to disturb the faith of the simple reader in the accuracy of his well-known Bible—nay, that the fact of its standing such a Revision as this with so little to be found in it to be altered, is a most valuable confirmation of its truth. The following notices of the Revision from some of the leading daily papers will be of interest to all Bible readers :—

FROM THE TIMES.

Regarded from the English reader's point of view, the task of the Old Testament Revisers was at once easier and yet more delicate than that of the New Testament Company. On the one hand, few English readers are as familiar with the bulk of the Old Testament as with the New. Few will be capable of detecting small changes without actually comparing the new version with the old, and consequently they will be less likely to take exception to the changes. On the other hand, it is in the Old Testament that there are to be found those great poetical and oratorical passages which exercise all the subtle charm of an original poem or composition, to touch one word of which seems almost sacrilege, even though they are acknowledged not to give the true sense of the original, and though it is only by the help of our imagination that we can extract a meaning from them. Some of the most eloquent orators of our day have testified to the influence of the English Version of the Old Testament on the formation of their style; poets have borrowed its words unchanged. No one who reads or hears can well remain wholly unmoved by the breath of the inspiration.

From touching this literary heirloom of the English people the boldest of Revisers might well have shrunk, and, before all things, the public will inquire how they have performed their task from the literary point of view. First impressions, at any rate, are reassuring. It would be too much to expect that every rhythm and turn of expression should at once commend itself. Familiar cadences cannot lightly be surrendered. But for the most part the alterations harmonise admirably with the language of 1611. In a large number of instances the changes will not be detected by any but those who are exceptionally familiar with the Authorised Version until an actual comparison is made. Yet the changes are neither few nor unimportant. We turn instinctively to such a passage as Isaiah ix. as the severest test that can be found. Old associations cluster round it. The words of the Authorised Version have, as Mr. Matthew Arnold vigorously puts it, "a magnificent glow and movement." But, as he is forced to admit, it cannot be denied that much of the passage is not only mistranslated, but hopelessly unintelligible. How have the Revisers treated it?

> "But there shall be no gloom to her that was in anguish. In the former time he brought into contempt the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali, but in the latter time hath he made it glorious, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the nations. The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light; they that dwelt in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined. Thou hast multiplied the nation, thou hast increased their joy; they joy before thee according to the joy in harvest, as men rejoice when they divide the spoil. For the yoke of his burden, and the staff of his shoulder, the rod of his oppressor, thou hast broken as in the day of Midian. For all the armour of the armed man in the tumult, and the garments rolled in blood, shall even be for burning, for fuel of fire. For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and of peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to establish it, and to uphold it with judgement and with righteousness from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the LORD of hosts shall perform this."

There is not a verse in which there is not some change; but no change has been made without good cause. All are required by scholarship, or for the sake of clearness and emphasis. The whole passage reads intelligibly. It may lack something of the sonorous grandeur of the old version. It certainly lacks the mysterious magic of obscurity. It can never possess for this generation the indefinable charm of the old words, with all the memories which they awaken. But the poetry and fire of the passage are there, and it is intelligible. The new version is no unworthy successor of the old.

We have taken this as a test passage of acknowledged difficulty, but it is a fair sample of the work. In many passages, even in the Prophets, fewer changes have been requisite. In Isaiah xl., for example, there are but some eleven changes in as many verses. One of them, "O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion," already stood in the margin of the Authorised Version, and is at least as familiar to us through the Messiah as the text itself. But it is at any rate allowable to wonder why the Revisers did not keep the emphatic order of the Hebrew in verse 3, simply altering the punctuation of the Authorised Version to "In the wilderness prepare ye the way of the Lord." It is at least as rhythmical as their version, "Prepare ye in the wilderness the way of the Lord," which somewhat halts.

The historical books present, so far as the original is concerned, a comparatively easy task. They were undertaken in 1611 by the first Westminster Company, which executed its work with singular felicity. Yet not a few blemishes remained to be removed, and it is only by a close study that the reader will discover what care the Revisers have expended upon them.

The crux of their task was the Book of Job. Parts of this marvellous poem are hopelessly unintelligible, parts of it grievously misrepresented, in the Authorised Version. A flood of light has been thrown upon the book since 1611 from the study of Arabic and the cognate languages. In parts the work of the Revisers amounts, as it was inevitable it should, to a new translation. Much must remain doubtful, much obscure; but on the whole the Revisers have risen to the occasion, and produced a version worthy of the poem. It must, however, have been in a moment of desperation that they adopted the rendering "effectual working" in chapter vi. 13, and elsewhere.

In dealing with the Psalter, the Revisers have taken the Bible version rather than the Prayer-book, as the basis of their revision. The latter, which, though derived immediately from the Great Bible, is, in substance, the work of that consummate master of rhythmical prose, Bishop Miles Coverdale, is, indeed, the more melodious version of the two, and, as such, is probably the more popular, but what it gains in respect of poetry and pathos it often loses in accuracy and vigour of expression. Compare, for example, the Prayer-book version of Psalm cxx., verse 7, "I labour for peace, but, when I speak unto them thereof, they make them ready to battle," with that of the Bible version, "I am for peace: but when I speak, they are for war." We need not say that the latter is adopted verbatim by the Revisers, nor do we see how they could have improved upon it.

So much for the general style of the revision. We venture to think that the Revisers may be congratulated on their success, and we believe the public will be well disposed to welcome their work. A few words must be added respecting the language and diction. They rightly, as they tell us in their preface, "thought it no part of their duty to reduce the language of the Authorised Version to conformity with modern usage, and have therefore left untouched all archaisms, whether of language or construction, which, though not in familiar use, cause a reader no embarrassment and lead to no misunderstanding. They are aware that in so doing they will disappoint the large English-speaking race on the other side of the Atlantic, and it is a question upon which they are prepared to agree to a friendly difference of opinion."

In fact, a considerable number of the final points of difference between the English and American Companies, appended to the revision in accordance with the original agreement, are nothing but modernisations of the English. The American Revisers, for example, would have substituted "before" for "afore" and "or ever;" "frighten" for "fray;" "refine" for "fine;" "which" for "the which," and the like. On the general question there will be no difference of opinion in this country. Unquestionably our Revisers have worked on the right lines. The American changes would have gone far to destroy the archaic colouring which we justly prize. We should as soon think of scraping the exterior of Westminster Abbey as of modernising the English Bible. But there will be some division of opinion in this country as to the details of the Revisers' procedure. Archæologists will justly complain that the English language has been impoverished by the removal of one of the most interesting words in our language, the verb "ear." "The oxen likewise and the young asses that ear the ground," &c. (Isaiah xxx. 24). This word, which occurs also in Shakespeare, is of special value, as being the root of the word earth—that which is eared or ploughed—as aro is of arvum; its removal from the Revised Version is the loss of a word of great philological value, and not difficult of apprehension to any educated person who stops for a moment to consider its meaning. For the benefit of less educated readers the word till, which has been substituted for it in the Revised Version, might have been very properly placed in the margin. But archæologists can hardly complain of the disappearance of words which have so completely changed their meaning, as "artillery," "leasing" (how puzzled country folk who were familiar with this word in the sense of "gleaning" must sometimes have been at the Psalmist's indignant invective against those who "seek after leasing"!), "nephew" (in the sense of "grandson"), "peep" (for "chirp"), and the like.

On the other hand, clergymen and teachers who are concerned with the practical use of the Bible for religious instruction among the comparatively uneducated, will wish that terms in current use had been substituted for not a few of the archaisms which have been retained. The Revisers' principle of removing unintelligible and misleading archaisms was right, they will say, but it has been imperfectly carried out. Could no intelligible substitute have been found for "ouches," "amerce," "conversant," "occurrent"? If a concession of "woe worth" must of necessity be made to the antiquarians, why should "sith" be retained in a solitary instance? Are not "amiable," "inward" (for "intimate"), "fats," "shroud," "tired," to be reckoned among misleading archaisms?

Considerable additions have been made to the vocabulary of the Bible. But the words have been chosen with extreme care, and are either words which justify themselves by their appropriateness and the necessity of the case, or words which the reader is surprised to find were not employed by the translators of 1611. We have noted down, among other new words, the following, taken at random, as specimens :—Caravan, claim, confines, cavil, consternation, clasp, chirp, godless, harass, castanets, crawling, baggage, porcupine, reservoir, startle, exult, pinions, askance, basilisk, memorable, gaunt, rabble, signature, indictment, assailant, soar, muscles, tubes, rival, foray.

The English reader's first thought and anxiety will be for the style and language of the revision; but he will be no less anxious to know whether it meets the requirements of scholarship. Is it a faithful representation of the original? Have all the changes which the advance of learning and scholarship demand been introduced? The composition of the Revision Company, including all the best Semitic scholars in the country, should be a guarantee for the soundness of the scholarship. But we incline to think that a prophecy uttered by the Bishop of Durham fourteen years ago has received a certain amount of verification. "If there be any reasonable grounds for apprehension," he wrote, "the danger is that the changes introduced will be too slight to satisfy the legitimate demands of theology and scholarship." We cannot help thinking that scholars will feel that the Revisers have been somewhat too timid and conservative. To secure a majority of two-thirds in favour of a change must have been constantly a matter of difficulty, and in cases of doubt it was certainly well to leave the old rendering in the text, and only to admit the alternative to the margin. It is no advantage to substitute one uncertainty in place of another. But in not a few cases the general verdict of modern scholars would be in favour of placing in the text as decidedly more probable the rendering which the Revisers relegate to the margin.

Again, two familiar and well-sustained charges against the Authorised Version are that it creates artificial distinctions which have no place in the original, and obliterates real distinctions which exist there. The translators of 1611 did not, to use their own quaint language, "stand curiously upon an identity of phrasing." We are far from thinking that it would be advisable to render the same Hebrew word by the same English word throughout. This would be the merest pedantry. No one word can be the exact equivalent of another in all connections and contexts. But the English reader who studies his Bible diligently, as multitudes do, with the help of a concordance, naturally supposes that varieties of expression point to differences of meaning. The principle may degenerate into a worship of the letter, and be pressed to false conclusions, but it is true in the main. The Revisers, however, have not carried out the principle of uniformity of rendering, in cases where there can be no question of the identity of meaning; and of distinction of rendering, where there is a clear difference in the original. Thus the same phrase is rendered in one place, "I am the Lord which sanctify you," in another, "I am the Lord which hallow you." Two distinct Hebrew phrases are confused by the same rendering—"breath of life" in Genesis ii. 7, vi. 17; though when they occur in combination in chapter vii. 22, they can be rendered "the breath of the spirit of life." Distinctions which did exist in the Authorised Version have in some cases been obliterated. "Living substance" may not have been a satisfactory rendering for the peculiar word employed in Genesis vii. 4, 23, but it at any rate distinguished it from the word used in chapter viii. 1, which the Revisers' rendering, "living thing," does not. These instances, it may be said, are of no particular importance. Possibly not, but they serve to indicate the principle on which the Revisers have worked; and there are cases in which distinctions of importance are wholly ignored. Our language does not possess different words for "God" like Hebrew, but it would have been easy to indicate in the margin when "God" is the equivalent of "El," and not of the common "Elôhîm," and to note that a special form "Elôah" is used in the Book of Job and a few other passages. The various words for "man" might also, we venture to think, have found distinctive renderings, or, at least recognition in the margin. As it is, three Hebrew expressions are concealed under the common rendering "Blessed is the man," in the Book of Psalms.

The rendering of the Hebrew tenses is constantly a perplexing problem to the translator. They do not correspond precisely to the English tenses, and delicate shades of meaning, suggested by the original, could often only be represented by a clumsy paraphrase, quite unfit for a popular version. Yet surely it might have been possible to express more clearly that the tenses in Genesis xxix. 2, 3, describe the habitual practice of gathering the flocks and rolling the stone from the well's mouth, and do not merely refer to the single occasion. Again, in the account of Isaiah's vision (Isaiah vi. 1—3) the distinction between the participle and the imperfect ought to have been expressed. The force of the latter tense in verse 3 ("And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts") is wholly obscured by the rendering "cried;" it denotes repetition, not a single act. The more accurate rendering would have shown the connexion of the passage with the words of the Te Deum, "To Thee . . . Seraphim continually do cry."

The treatment of the sacred name "Jehovah" was one of the most difficult questions which the Revisers had to decide. The American Company would introduce it as a proper name wherever it occurs; our Company have followed the usage of the Authorised Version, and substituted "Lord" or "God" in accordance with Jewish tradition in all but a few cases. We cannot but think that it would have been a substantial help to the better understanding of Old Testament theology if our revisers had been bolder, and introduced the name "Jehovah" somewhat more freely. There are strong reasons against introducing it universally, but in cardinal passages, such as Exodus iii. 15 ff., it is extremely important that the proper name should appear.

The Revisers' marginal notes deserve particular attention. They are considerably more numerous and more important than those in the Authorised Version, and in certain quarters the Revisers will no doubt be severely taken to task for casting doubt upon the reading and rendering of so many passages. The most important contents of the margin are as follows:—

(1) "The renderings of such variations in the Massoretic text as appeared to be of sufficient importance. These variations are distinguished by the technical names of K'ri (read) and C'thib (written), which denote that the K'ri, or reading in the margin of the Hebrew Bible, is to be substituted for the C'thib which appears in the written text." The K'ri is, in fact, the authorised Jewish text; but it by no means always gives the best reading, and the Revisers have rightly chosen whichever reading appeared to be the best, following the example of their predecessors of 1611, and have placed the alternative in the margin if it represented a variation of sufficient importance.

(2) Alternative renderings, which "are either different meanings of the word or passage, or serve to connect it with other renderings elsewhere." Exception will, no doubt, be taken to the number of alternatives. "Some, peradventure," to use the words of "the Translators to the Reader" in 1611, "would have no variety of senses to be set in the margin, lest the authority of the Scriptures for deciding of controversies by that show of uncertainty should somewhat be shaken." They argue the point at some length with singular wisdom and good sense, and modern cavillers will do well to ponder their conclusion that "diversity of signification and sense of the margin, where the text is not so clear, must needs do good, yea, is necessary, as we are persuaded."

(3) The "changes of text made on the authority of the ancient versions," the "readings from ancient versions," and the "renderings of the Hebrew consonants as read with different vowel points, or as differently divided," stand on much the same footing. The Hebrew text is not infallible, and when an ancient version offers a various reading of obvious importance, though not sufficiently supported to be introduced into the text, honesty requires that the fact should be stated in the margin. The margin of the Books of Samuel will supply numerous examples. We are surprised to see that the American Revisers, who in many respects are bolder than our own, would prefer to omit from the margin all renderings from the ancient versions.

Marginal references to other passages are really of the nature of commentary, and are very properly limited to "passages which are either strictly parallel or serve the purpose of illustrating or justifying a particular rendering." Every one will be grateful for the explanations of proper names, the meaning of which is referred to in the text, and is necessary for the understanding of it.

The form in which the Revised Version appears has become somewhat more familiar to the public through the Revised New Testament than it was formerly. The customary gaps at the end of every verse disappear, and the text is printed in paragraphs accommodated to the sense. This is an immense gain, and it is in substance only a return to the fashion that prevailed in our early versions. The printing of the poetical books in lines, "exhibiting the parallelism which is characteristic of Hebrew poetry," is also a great advantage. The use of italics differs widely from the custom of the Authorised Version, and has rightly been reserved for those cases in which words have been added "in order to give completeness to the English expression." Words, the insertion of which is required by the difference of idiom between the languages, are very properly printed in common type.

The instructions originally issued to the Company directed them to revise the headings of chapters. This part of their task they prudently abandoned, "as involving questions which belong rather to the province of the commentator than to that of the translator," and the headings of the chapters have disappeared altogether.

It is an ungracious task to point out blemishes, and serious blemishes are not numerous. Unnecessary changes are few and far between; wanton changes hardly to be found. But we feel utterly at a loss to know how the Revisers came to insert such a meaningless rendering as "Dammesek Eliezer" in Genesis xv. 2, without even a hint that "Dammesek" is only the familiar Damascus. There is, it is true, a paronomasia in the original which depends on the form of the word, but that, of course is wholly lost in English. The passage is obscure and may be corrupt, but, in default of anything better, the American Revisers are certainly right in retaining the rendering of the Authorised Version, "Eliezer of Damascus." We are not a little astonished, too, to find that "Belial" survives as a proper name (the American Revisers are clearly right in getting rid of it), and that, although the "unicorn" and the "cockatrice" disappear, the "satyr" and the "dragon" survive.

But these are trivial blemishes compared with the excellence of the work as a whole. Some few familiar phrases we miss. Who can fail to regret the loss of the magnificent metaphor, "Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?" in the description of the war horse in Job; or the triumphant ring of "He will swallow up death in victory?" They are magnificent, but they are not translations. They must disappear from the Bible, but we shall treasure them in our memories nevertheless.

But the gains far outweigh the losses. It is not too much to say that parts of the Old Testament, for example some chapters of Job, have received a connected and intelligible meaning in place of a disjointed obscurity. Great passages, like Isaiah lii. 13—liii., though they required less change, gain substantially in perspicuity and force. What light is thrown on the geography of Palestine by more accurate rendering in such a passage as Deuteronomy i. 7: "In the Arabah, in the hill country, and in the lowland, and in the South," in place of the vague and confusing nomenclature of the Authorised Version. Botany and zoology receive, perhaps, less elucidation than we might expect, for in cases where the identification is doubtful, and such cases are numerous, the rendering of the Authorised Version has been allowed to stand. But a just appreciation of the advance made by the Revised Version in details can only be gained by prolonged and patient study.

It is impossible to forecast the ultimate destiny of the Revised Version. Will it eventually become the household Bible of the English-speaking peoples? Will it be used merely as a book of reference, or will it sink into comparative obscurity? Of this at least we may be sure, that the older version will not be superseded in the affections and memories of the generation which has been familiar with it from childhood.

The Authorised Version was at once "appointed to be read in churches," and so took the place of its official predecessor, the Bishops' Bible, almost immediately. But the Genevan Version continued to be the Bible of the home and the closet for many years, and was not finally displaced till about the middle of the seventeenth century; and the Revised Version will find it infinitely harder to make its way than did the Authorised Version. The Genevan Version had been in use no more than half a century; it had exercised no influence on literature, and but little on theological language. The Authorised Version has the prescription of use for two centuries and three-quarters; it has exercised an unparalleled influence on our language, our literature, our theology. It has permeated our national life and become part of it. Millions of copies of it have been circulated for tens of the Bibles of the sixteenth century. There is no doubt that the chances of acceptance of the Revised Bible as a whole in place of the Authorised Version have been greatly imperilled by the very numerous and trivial alterations which the New Testament Company thought it their duty to make. The much more cautious procedure of the Old Testament Company should go some way to redress the balance. It may be, however, that a further revision will be required before a Bible is produced which can be substituted with general acceptance for the Authorised Version. But whatever may be its ultimate fate, the Revised Version ought to give, and surely will give, a strong stimulus to the study of the Old Testament in this country. The endeavours of the Revisers will, to use the words of their own preface, "with the blessing of Almighty God, tend to a clearer knowledge of the Old Testament Scriptures," and if this be so their labours will not have been spent in vain.

FROM THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In touching upon details we can hardly do better than take as representative passages some of the verses which literary taste most admires or religious feeling deems especially precious. It will then be seen how far the grave and stately music of the Authorised Version has been interfered with. For the passages desired we turn, of course, to the poetical books or the lofty and impassioned prose of those wonderful Hebrew prophets. The magnificent diction of the Book of Job, all Bible readers will be glad to know, remains much as it was. Some changes, however, are to be noted, and of these some affect the sense more than the sound. Thus the familiar line, "Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth?" now reads, "Is there not a warfare (margin, 'time of service') to man upon earth?" As regards poetic expression the change from "When shall I arise and the night be gone?" to "When shall I arise? but the night is long," may, perhaps, be looked upon as an improvement, though different opinions will prevail respecting the substitution of "Though He slay me, yet will I wait for Him," for "Though He slay me yet will I trust in Him." The following also reads strangely, however beautifully: "For I know that my Redeemer (marg. "vindicator") liveth, And that He shall stand up at the last upon the earth; And after my skin hath been thus destroyed, Yet from (marg. "without") my flesh shall I see God." The part of the poem in which the hand of the Revisers most often appears is that containing the words put into the mouth of the Divine Being. But nothing has been done to abate the splendour or the power of the language. A few examples in proof will be of interest.

We now read: "Canst thou bind the cluster of the Pleiades, Or loose the bands of Orion? Canst thou lead forth the Mazzaroth in their season; or canst thou guide the Bear with her train?" Instead of, "Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacocks, or wings and feathers unto the ostrich?" we now have, "The wing of the ostrich rejoiceth; But are her pinions and feathers kindly?" The reader is, perhaps, impatient to know how fares the famous description of the war-horse. Here it is, according to the new version:—

> "Hast thou given the horse his might?
> Hast thou clothed his neck with the quivering mane?
> Hast thou made him to leap as a locust?
> The glory of his snorting is terrible.
> He paweth in the valley and rejoiceth in his strength;
> He goeth out to meet the armed men;
> He mocketh at fear and is not dismayed,
> Neither turneth he back from the sword,
> The quiver rattleth against him,
> The flashing spear and the javelin.
> He swalloweth the ground with fiercenes and rage;
> Neither believeth he that it is the voice of the trumpet.
> As oft as the trumpet soundeth he saith, Aha!
> And he smelleth the battle afar off,
> The thunder of the captains and the shouting."

To our mind, we have here all the beauty of the older version with something of beauty in addition. The passage will still stand as an unequalled example of word-painting.

Turning to the Psalms—which are properly divided into five books—we are certain to be followed by the anxiety of many pious souls, who find in those ancient outpourings of religious emotion their greatest comfort and joy. Here, as far as a necessarily hurried comparison shows, few important changes have been made, and those with scrupulous care. The beautiful 23rd Psalm, "The Lord is my Shepherd," remains untouched, as does the passage in Psalm xxiv., beginning, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates!" But in Psalm xxxvii. the wicked man no longer spreadeth himself "like a green bay tree," but "as a green tree in its native soil;" nor in Psalm xlv. is the King's daughter said to be "all glorious within," the Revisers preferring "The King's daughter within the palace is all glorious." But how as to Psalm li.?—that priceless expression of self-humiliation and repentance? It is satisfactory to answer that the most important change is of no greater consequence, as the new reading of verse 16 shows: "For Thou delightest not in sacrifice, else would I give it; Thou hast no pleasure in burnt-offering." A well-known verse in Psalm xcii. now reads:—

> "The days of our years are threescore years and ten,
> "Or even by reason of strength fourscore years;
> "Yet is their pride but labour and sorrow,
> "For it is soon gone, and we fly away."

The poetic gain in this case is not commensurate with the improvement in fidelity to the original. A more important emendation appears in Psalm xcv. 7, where we now read, "For He is our God, And we are the people of his pasture and the sheep of his hand. To-day, O that ye would hear his voice!" The rendering of this passage by the Authorised Version is, however, retained in the margin. Only slight changes have been made in the beautiful Psalm cxxxvii.: "By the rivers of Babylon there we sat down;" and in no case is its poetic charm abated; but musicians may be concerned to know that in Psalm cl. the word "organs" disappears, and is succeeded by "the pipe." By the way, Jubal no longer figures in Genesis as "the progenitor of all such as handle the harp and the organ," his fatherhood being given to players upon "the harp and the pipe."

The Revisers have thought proper to arrange the Book of Proverbs in the same manner as the poetic books, and are no doubt justified in so doing by the many parallelisms of the original text. In this case also they have interfered as little as possible with the older translation, while some instances of change present decided improvement. Take an example from chap. viii.: "Doth not Wisdom cry, And Understanding put forth her voice? In the top of high places by the way, Where the paths meet, she standeth; Beside the gates, at the entry of the city, she crieth aloud." Here we have an obvious gain of beauty and force, the equal of which appears in not a few other instances in the same book. When dealing with the Song of Songs, the Revisers did not see their way to indicate as an interpolation the sensuous, or perhaps we should say sensual, passages in chapter vii., and thus put themselves in line with modern criticism. The lovely poem has come from their hands uninjured, even in places where a great change occurs, as, for example, in viii. 6, which reads in the old version: "For love is strong as death; jealousy is cruel as the grave: the coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame;" in the new, it appears thus: "For love is strong as death: Jealousy is cruel as the grave: The flashes thereof are flashes of fire, A very flame of the Lord."

Over the prophetic books curious eyes will range, looking for new renderings of famous passages that belong to the folk-lore of Anglo-Saxon Christendom. Here we will limit ourselves to Isaiah's rapt and lofty utterances, and especially to those which gave him his title as the "Evangelical Prophet." Turning to chapter liii., the passage in the Authorised Version, "We hid as it were our faces from Him; He was despised, and we esteemed Him not," now stands thus: "As one from whom men hide their face He was despised, and we esteemed Him not." This important chapter suffers no more serious alteration than that just shown. In chap. xl. the Revisers prefer "And shall gently lead those that give suck" to "Those that are with young;" while in chap. ix. they give a different reading altogether of the sonorous verse: "For every battle of the warrior is with confused noise and garments rolled in blood; but this shall be with burning and fuel of fire." In the new Version we have: "For all the armour of the armed man in the tumult, and the garments rolled in blood, shall even be for burning, for fuel of fire." The passage loses in grandeur by the change, but gains in appositeness. It now fitly precedes the verse which proclaims the advent of the "Prince of Peace." It should be added that the Revisers drop the definite articles in the verse beginning "For unto us a child is born," making part of it read, "and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace."

Pending the more careful examination which the new version demands and deserves, the foregoing comparison of important and well-known passages serves to show how cautiously the Revisers proceeded, with a view to the retention of the poetic beauty of the Jacobean Bible, while making necessary improvements in translation. Our first impression of their work is to the effect that learning and taste, under the control of reverence, have achieved a great success. The grand old music rings out strong and true, and many an obscure passage has been made clear. Such results are well worth the fifteen years of labour that produced them.

FROM THE STANDARD.

What may be called the mechanical readjustment of the text is considerable, and, on the whole, we should say, is likely to be acceptable. It is now divided into paragraphs, and the Psalms are divided into five books. Those portions of the Bible which we have hitherto distinguished as songs, or Lamentations, or Elegies, are given in a metrical form, and gain both in clearness and effect by the metamorphosis. The Prophets, however, have been left in their original prose, though how capable they are of being thrown into a poetic form has been shown by Bishop Lowth. We do not observe that the Revisers have found it their duty to introduce any such amendments, either verbal or grammatical, as would seriously affect the meaning of the Sacred Books, either in the narration of events, the description of miracles, or the record of prophecy. In the account of the Creation each day seems to be marked off from the other more distinctly than the Old Version. "And there was evening and there was morning one day." "And there was evening and there was morning a second day," and so on throughout, allowing the impression to be made of long intervals between each. Of the flight out of Egypt, the passage of the Red Sea, the sojourn in the wilderness, the conquest of Canaan, and the reigns of the Kings of Judah and Israel, we find nothing whatever in the present translation to modify the received account, nothing to justify or excuse any such objections as those raised by the Essayists and Reviewers or by Bishop Colenso. Joshua's miracle is given as a quotation from a ballad, but it is still a miracle—

> "And he said in the sight of Israel:
> Sun stand thou still upon Gibeon,
> And thou moon in the Valley of Ajalon.
> And the sun stood still and the moon stayed > Until the people had avenged themselves on their enemies.
> Is it not written in the Book of Jasher?"

The intention here is certainly to record something quite abnormal. The more or the less can have no place in the miraculous. One event cannot be half natural and half supernatural.

Some few passages seem to have been needlessly altered, and altered for the worse. "Vanity and vexation of spirit" is turned into "vanity and striving after wind." Now, suppose the original translators to have made some confusion between the words "wind" and "spirit," still, whatever the preacher may mean, the new translation is inelegant. If the Revisers are right, he probably means the pursuit of something as empty as air—a mere phantom. No man strives after wind. In another passage of Ecclesiastes we think they have been ill-advised. At chapter xii. 13, it is written, "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man." The Revisers write, "This is the end of the matter: all hath been heard; fear God, &c." Now, we do not want here the "all hath been heard." The Revisers were not being examined for a scholarship or fellowship, when it is necessary to show that nothing in the text has escaped the student. Having secured the right meaning, and the whole meaning, their next object was to secure the brevity, simplicity, and directness which are the distinctive characteristics of the Authorised Version.

As much may be said, we think, of the passage in Job, "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold and not another." Why transform them into "But I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand up at last upon the earth?" Here literal accuracy seems to be gained, if it is gained, at a considerable sacrifice of form. Between "stand" and "stand up" there is a marked difference; the latter suggesting that he had previously been lying down; the former denoting his arrival from no earthly sphere, in an attitude of dignity and command.

The question will naturally be asked how the Revisers have dealt with those passages in the Bible which have long been stumbling-blocks to the fastidious, and whether they have to any extent accommodated the unvarnished narrative of the historical books to the taste of modern times. To this question we can return only a simple negative. They have left most of these passages as they found them, and, in doing so, we must say that we think they have exercised a sound discretion.

It is by the more purely poetical passages of the Old Testament that the literary merits of the Revised Version might be most fitly tested; but here its authors have practically declined the contest, and have made no attempt to improve on the work of their predecessors. In the Prophets, in Ecclesiastes, in the Song of Solomon, and in the Psalms the Revised Version is, to all practical intents and purposes, the Old Version. A few words are transposed here and there; an epithet is changed, a metaphor has a slightly new turn given to it; but there is nothing which either augments or detracts from the beauty which has so long been familiar to us, which brings out any latent meaning, and gives new force and point to that which is already understood.

There is no doubt that in Job xxxix. the Revisers have introduced necessary corrections, though not without, in one instance, impairing the poetry of our own version. The "quivering mane" (ver. 19) is a poor exchange for "thunder," and it might not be impossible to show that there is a certain propriety even in the latter word. Still, the former was clearly an inaccuracy, and one of a kind that could not be overlooked on account of its grandeur. The "leap as a locust" instead of "afraid as a grasshopper" is an obvious improvement, almost, indeed, making sense out of nonsense.

The Revisers have probably succeeded in doing all that they undertook to do. But the general public may have formed vague expectations which it was as well to moderate at once. The Revisers' Version is a good, useful, and learned work; its chief value is to show how excellent and, on the whole, how faithful a rendering of the Old Testament we have in the translation which for more than two and a half centuries has been received amongst us as the Authorised Version.

A SERMON IN SHOES.

SAM HINES was a character, one of those shiftless ne'er-do-weels which are found in every New England village. He had his good qualities—who has not? He was kind to children, ready to accommodate a friend, good company, ready for a joke, and quite equal in wit to any stranger whom he might meet at the country tavern. He seemed to have plenty of faculty and gumption, as the Yankees say, but he never got on, he was always out at elbows. He always could coax the fish to bite, he filled his game-bag when every one else hunted the woods in vain, he knew how to tinker up all sorts of things, and was a handy man to have about in any emergency.

But Sam Hines was a bad man, for all these engaging qualities. There was much about him you could not help admiring, but you could not disguise the fact that he swore unceasingly, he blasphemed without regard to the company he was in, and he never refused a drink. He hardly ever appeared the worse for liquor, and many a man had become a hopeless drunkard because of his example. If he had been ugly and quarrelsome, a terror to the community, his influence would not have been nearly as bad; but every one liked Sam, they could not help laughing at his witty sallies, and Deacon Noah Higgens, labouring with him, once gave it up in despair, telling the brethren privately "that nothing but the grace of God could save him." The deacon really thought that Sam was past help.

He was Gospel-hardened. He knew what was meant by salvation, he could discuss theology, and pin the saints down to close argument, often driving them into a corner; but he was an outsider, he believed in nothing, he scouted the idea of becoming religious. He rather enjoyed ridiculing the church, and making witty remarks about the members. Esquire Perce, who kept one of the village stores, was called "middling close" at a bargain. In fact, he was hardly morally honest. He was one of the pillars of the church. Sam said, "They were purty hard up for timber when they sot him in;" and Sam would detail some of his fresh bargains in the bar room, suggesting "that a saint was a curious critter in a trade." All this was a sorrow to Christian people; they knew Sam was a ring-leader among his cronies; he had quite an influence for evil.

The good people of Red Bank laboured on; the Dominie sowed the seed with prayer and tears, often discouraged and sick at heart; the bar room drew its crowd of loafers; the skating rink called the young people; and the prayer-meeting was thinly attended. It seemed as if Satan was winning the day, and the church had lost its power. But God's purposes ripen slowly; the bud is often bitter when the flower is sweet.

Among the humble members of the Red Bank Church was "Aunt Mehitable," a maiden lady who sewed among the families of the town. She was a quaint soul, a little lame, bright and cheery, bringing sunshine wherever she came. She was the Gospel in shoes; every one loved her; she had an intimate acquaintance with God; people believed in religion when they saw her; she was one of the evidences of Christianity.

Aunt Mehitable had the habit, unknown to anyone, of praying for particular people, no matter how hopeless the case might be. She put her heart into her petition, when once they were on her book; and fortunate the soul who was written in that book of life. Aunt Mehitable's prayers were the kind that availed much. She had kinship with Jacob; the holy of holies received her; she knew what it was to ask much and receive much. She believed in the old-fashioned idea that God heard prayer in this later age.

Aunt Mehitable had been praying for Sam Hines for a long time. She almost hesitated to put his name in that little red book. He became one of her family then, was adopted into the kingdom, and she only waited for God to ratify the act. She was reading one day in the Word of the "brands plucked from the burning." Sam was certainly all afire with sin. Could he be saved, plucked from destruction by her hand? After that, day after day she remembered him, crying "that this blackened fagot might be quenched in the blood."

The spiritual destiny of a community may hang on one woman's prayers. The spiritual forces of life are not always what we count them. Preaching and Bible study are blessed of God, but the cloud of mercy is often discerned by the eye of some waiting woman who is listening to God's voice.

The bar-room crowd was startled one day by Sam's refusal to drink, and he did not swear either—the two circumstances were unheard of. He did not seem to be ashamed of it. "Boys," he said, "I have drank as much whiskey as any of ye; more's the pity; but I've quit. I could swear with the hardest—I'm done; you know me; hear what I tell ye; the Lord has condescended to save my miserable soul." The men were thunder-struck. Sam Hines get religion? refuse a drink without swearing? You might hear a pin drop in the room. The men left their glasses full; they could not understand it.

But Thursday night the church people were astonished to see Sam in the prayer-meeting. They thought he meant mischief. The minister read about the Prodigal Son. Sam listened eagerly. The Dominie seemed somewhat disconcerted, but when the meeting was opened to all Sam got up amid the profound silence of a crowded house. Many of his companions were there—the meeting was full for once.

"Friends, you never saw me at this place before—my meeting has been over yonder (pointing to the tavern), but I'm a prodigal son. I've lived among the swine in a far country. I'm not worthy to come back home. You don't need I should tell ye what I've been, my mates here can tell ye; but I come to myself just like this fellow in the story. I started for the Father's house, and He met me." Here Sam's voice choked a little. "Ragged, dirty, miserable as I was, He took me right in and gave me a clean robe. Will ye pray for me, friends, that the devil don't get me? I'm a poor, weak crittur—nobody but Sam Hines."

When Sam sat down Deacon Scott began to pray, and he often had an unction from on high. His voice was suspiciously shaky at first, but he gathered himself, and soon that waiting people were carrying this lost sheep to the feet of the Master. Clearer and fuller grew the Deacon's voice as the pinions of his faith carried him on. Scripture rose to his lips with rare felicity, and he asked "that this brand plucked from the burning might yet become a flaming torch to light souls to heaven." When the Deacon closed others followed, and there seemed a new power in the prayers. People were visibly moved. They were awed at the mighty power of grace. The angels of God rejoice over one sinner that repenteth. Many were the congratulations and kind wishes offered Sam at the close of the meeting. Warm hearts surrounded him, and everyone was ready to wish him God-speed.

But the prayers of Aunt Mehitable, the closet of this holy soul, the red book with its hidden name of Sam Hines! God and his angels knew what relation they had to this brand plucked from the burning. A great revival began in one woman's closet. The most hopeless case was saved, and society was permeated with a new and divine life.

"Come, fellows," said Sam to his companions, "I have been with you for years, now go with me; I have got something you need; I was blind; now I see."

Dominie Morehouse had been sowing the seed for years, but there had been no harvest; but here was a sermon in shoes. Sam Hines had got religion, and wherever he was there was preaching, prayer, and praise. He served the Lord as zealously as he had Satan, and many brands were plucked by him from the burning for the Master.—New York Observer.

MISSIONARIES FOR EAST AFRICA.

THE Hawarden Castle, which left London for the Cape on May 13, took six missionaries for the Church Missionary Society's Missions in East and Central Africa, three returning to their posts, and three going out for the first time. Of the latter, one was Mr. Douglas A. L. Hooper, B.A., of Trinity Hall and Ridley Hall, Cambridge, a friend of Mr. Stanley Smith and Mr. Studd, and one of the most active of the Cambridge men in evangelistic and missionary work. He goes out to Africa at his own charges, and also pays the expenses of a companion and assistant, a young gardener from the Men's Night-school at Mildmay.

Mr. Hooper took leave of his Cambridge friends at a meeting held there on Saturday evening, May 10, when Rev. Handley C. G. Moule presided, and addresses were given by Rev. R. Lang, Mr. Eugene Stock, and by Rev. C. Warren, from Japan. On the Monday morning sixty gownsmen joined Mr. Hooper in observing the Lord's Supper at Trinity Church (once the church of Charles Simeon). Mr. Handley Moule delivered an earnest spiritual address. Dr. Westcott, Regius Professor of Divinity, was present. A large number of friends saw the party off on the Wednesday from the East India Docks. A Praise-meeting was held on board, "All hail the power of Jesu's Name" being sung, Psalm cxxi. read, and several friends leading in prayer and thanksgiving.

Another of the party, Mr. A. J. Copplestone, who had been out before as far as Uganda itself, and who has since been studying medicine at Edinburgh, was taken leave of at the Edinburgh station by two hundred fellow-students. The others were the Rev. A. Downes Shaw and Mrs. Shaw (a niece of Frances Havergal), and a young schoolmaster.

Mr. Hooper is hoping to go into an entirely new country, Chagga, under Mount Kilimanjaro, the Switzerland of Africa. The country was discovered by the Missionary Rebmann in 1848, and is described in Mr. Joseph Thomson's recent book, "Through Masai Land."

Our friend and contributor, Rev. J. Pearce Clark, of Leith, sends to us a communication describing at some length the parting scene with Mr. Copplestone at the Waverley Station, Edinburgh. We regret not to have space for these details, but quote the following portion of his letter, which will be read with thankful interest.

"Some three years ago Mr. W. Dunn, evangelist, addressed a small gathering of students one Saturday afternoon, in the drawing-room of Mrs. Young's, Lochein House, Edinburgh. The meeting was so successful that Mrs. Young invited those present to come freely every Saturday. This resulted in a permanent meeting, which has continued ever since, and has received most remarkable proofs of the Divine favour. The writer can testify, along with scores of others, that the glow of Christian brotherhood, the holy gladness and liberty, the pure missionary zeal, the joy in the Lord Himself, and the delights of thanksgiving and spiritual worship, which scercely ever fail to characterise that gathering, entirely surpass anything he has ever experienced elsewhere. The great proportion of the young men habitués (for many others besides young men attend) are foreign missionaries so far as spirit and purpose go. Accordingly, when one of our number leaves for the foreign field, brotherly love and missionary zeal grow intense, and the leave-taking comes to be a thing never to be forgotten."

A HOME FOR DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

AN interesting event in the history of rescue work among discharged prisoners took place last Friday evening, when the new Home in connection with the Holborn branch of the St. Giles' Christian Mission was formally opened. For years past Mr. Wheatley has done wonderful things in Brooke-street in enabling these unfortunate brethren to make a fresh start in life. So successful has he been, indeed, that the premises became much too strait for the demands upon it. Happily a larger house was found on the other side of the same street, and it has been admirably adapted to the purposes of this Mission. It transpired at the meeting that the most of the alterations had been done by the discharged prisoners themselves.

Mr. F. A. Bevan took the chair at the meeting on Friday evening, and there were present many sympathisers, as well as a number of the men who are the special objects of the Mission's care.

Mr. Hatton's statement of the methods and spirit of the work was a gratifying record of rescue work attempted and done. It was no small thing to be able to say that since the beginning of the effort over 30,000 men had accepted the invitation to breakfast at the gates of the three great London prisons (Clerkenwell, Holloway, and Wandsworth), and that out of these 13,000 had signed the Temperance pledge. Coming down to the present Mr. Hatton mentioned the striking fact that the building in which they were now met was formerly a sink of iniquity, a training ground for crime. Some of the rescued men said they knew the nature of the house only too well. After describing the steps that had been taken to secure it as a place of temporary refuge for those who have been down but who wish to rise again, Mr. Hatton said the alterations had cost £650, of which over £500 had been subscribed. Mr. F. A. Bevan, the treasurer, had given £20, and Mr. J. Monro, the Assistant Commissioner of Police, had given a like amount.

Mr. Wheatley followed with a short speech, in the course of which he scouted the prevalent idea that the police are given to hunt down discharged prisoners. It was utterly false. They had, of course, to do their duty in repressing crime, but it was also their delight to do all in their power to help those who were anxious to lead a better life. [Notwithstanding this kindly vindication, we think, with Sir William Charley, that where there is opportunity for tyranny or malice, it will at times be manifested. We discredit alike all wholesale praise and blame of entire classes or bodies of men.—Ed.]

In an admirable and hearty speech the Chairman said the work carried on by this Society was a most practical exhibition of true Christianity. Its spirit was that shown by God Himself, who freely forgives the penitent sinner and restores him to favour.

Sir William Charley, the Common Sergeant, said this Society had really become an integral part of the machinery of his Court; he could as little do without the grand jury or the ushers of the Court. The operations of the Society were simply invaluable in helping both the confirmed criminals and those who are on the threshold of such a life. In some detail Sir William showed how in most practical ways he was able to utilise the help of Mr. Wheatley in dealing with those brought before him. As to the action of the police, he felt that, notwithstanding the statement of Mr. Wheatley, there was a substratum of truth in the complaints made by discharged prisoners about the difficulty of retaining situations when under police supervision. He therefore, never, on any account sentenced a man to police supervision. In the case of young criminals he invariably invoked the aid of Mr. Wheatley with the happiest results. The worthy Judge could not restrain his emotion as he told how, in the case of orphan lads convicted of crime, Mr. Hatton and Mr. Wheatley were really second fathers, in caring for them and providing for their future welfare.

In a lively address Mr. Flowers, one of the Bow-street magistrates, pleaded for more lenient sentences for those who had come within the grasp of the law, in order to give them some chance of recovery. He rejoiced to occupy the position he did, where he had the opportunity of showing sympathy with the unfortunate, and doing something to raise them from the degradation into which they had fallen.

Mr. Howard Vincent, late Director of Criminal Investigation, was as warm as those who had gone before in his commendation of the work, and paid a tribute to the aid rendered in the rescue work by the Christian women who share in it. Mr. Vincent's successor, Mr. J. Monro, said that he would vouch for the sympathetic help of the police force in doing all they possibly could to give the criminal another chance. He personally made it a rule to investigate not only every complaint made, but every published report of harsh dealing, where no complaint was made. It was a fact that during the last ten months in no single instance in which such inquiry had been made had the result shown that the police were in fault.

Mr. Chance, another magistrate, briefly spoke in praise of the Mission, and the Chairman completed the chorus of praise in some further remarks. We hope the general public will show its appreciation of the disinterested labours of Messrs. Hatton and Wheatley by liberal support.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN IRELAND.

AFTER the troubles that have for so long visited Ireland, and from which she has scarcely yet emerged, it is refreshing to know that God has graciously visited several parts of the island with manifestations of the power of his Holy Spirit. I might refer to the visits, eighteen months ago, of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, whose praise is now in almost all the churches. No doubt the missions conducted by them have had a far-reaching influence, encouraging and stimulating residents in many localities to seek and expect similar pentecosts, and leading many evangelists to increased effort.

To some of these efforts I am happy to be able to testify. The first was at Maryborough, the assize town of Queen's county, where, in the month of January, Mr. Thomas Houston, blind evangelist, laboured for eight or ten days with great liberty and power, in preaching and singing the Gospel. Hearers came several miles, night after night, seeking and finding blessing. The power of the Lord was present to heal. It is believed that fully one hundred souls received definite blessing. This evangelist next visited Portarlington, where the power of the Gospel was again manifested.

On February 21 Mr. Houston (having engaged for three months with the Irish Evangelisation Society) arrived at Abbeyleix, accompanied by a true fellow-labourer, Mr. William Smith (formerly of Burton-on-Trent), who has been for about six years in connection with this society. The labours of these two brethren were greatly owned of God. Overflowing congregations came to hear the word. And at the conclusion of the mission, which lasted sixteen days, upwards of sixty persons of various ages gave in their names as having shared in the spiritual revival. From Abbeyleix the evangelists proceeded to Rathdowney. There the church placed at their disposal was insufficient to contain the congregations, and a hall capable of seating about 350 persons was taken for the Sunday meetings. This was filled on three successive Sabbaths. Much Divine power was felt; the evangelists, as at other places, preached in turn. Here they stayed for three weeks. Nearly ninety persons subscribed to cards expressing a purpose to follow the Lord henceforth.

On April 1 a mission at Durrow was opened by the same labourers. There, as in other places, the Lord graciously drew souls to himself on the first night of the mission; and this continued night after night. Here also nearly ninety names were recorded of those who testified to conversion or restoration. The singing of the Gospel by Mr. Houston, the deep spiritual teaching of Mr. Smith, and the powerful appeals of both, will be long remembered. In some cases whole families, or almost the entire family, have declared themselves on the Lord's side. Praise meetings were held at each of the three places. The last one will be ever memorable; upwards of one hundred testimonies were uttered. Will not all who read of this blessed work pray that the converts may, by the power of the Divine Spirit, be "strengthened, stablished, settled"?

Queen's County.

BROOKLYN.—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has celebrated its eleventh anniversary. The secretary reported that during the past year over 18,000 people had been present at the meetings and that the pledge has been signed by 265 persons,

MURMURING AND THANKFULNESS.

SOME murmur when their sky is clear,
And wholly bright to view,
If one small speck of dark appear
In their great heaven of blue.

And some with thankful love are filled,
If but one streak of light,
One ray of God's good mercy gild
The darkness of their night.

In palaces are hearts that ask,
In discontent and pride,
Why life is such a dreary task,
And all good things denied.

And hearts in poorest huts admire
How love has in their aid—
Love that doth never seem to tire—
Such rich provision made.

MR. HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

THE tenth week of the evangelist's stay in Glasgow has been one of the most remarkable for the meetings that have been held. Every night Paisley-road Free Church was filled above and below. A great many have professed to receive benefit—a larger number than in any other locality where Mr. Hammond has held a week's meetings. On Saturday week, with a large company of workers and singers, Mr. Hammond held a meeting in one of the churches in Saltcoats. A Glasgow minister remarked to his congregation that it was one of the most solemn and effective meetings he was ever in. The ministers of the town entered heartily into the work. Nearly all the congregation remained to the inquiry-meeting, many of them bathed in tears. Before the meeting closed very many professed to find peace.

Last week was Mr. Hammood's closing week in Glasgow. On Monday he had a meeting in Martyrs' Free Church, Stanhope-street, and every other night during the week in Trinity Free Church, Charlotte-street.

We have received an account of Mr. Hammond's farewell meeting in Glasgow on Saturday last, but we are obliged to reserve it for our following issue. The evangelist devotes the present week to work at Alexandria, Vale of Leven, and afterwards enters on a seven weeks' mission in the populous city of Sheffield.

HYDE-PARK SERVICES.

WE have closed the Metropolitan Music-hall services for the season, after a most successful series of meetings during the past seven months. This closes our ninth year of these services, and has been, we think, our best. During a three weeks' mission held at Hyde-park Hall, over one hundred new converts were brought in, as many as four and five in one house having been blessed, whilst there were nine instances in which husband and wife were converted.

We have begun the Hyde-park opening campaign, and hope to continue the meetings almost nightly. Mr. John V. Farwell, of Chicago, was with us on opening night. Mr. John Creer and Mr. Gawin Kirkham are to be with us during May and June. I shall be glad to welcome any preacher who has a voice suited for open-air work. Our gathering may easily be distinguished by our new large gold and blue banner, with its text, "We preach Christ crucified." CHARLES COOK.

Hyde-park Hall, W.

EVANGELISATION IN SICILY.—The Sixth Annual Report of this work, carried on by Signors Varnier and Scuderi, tells of the widespread good which these two evangelists are doing, so that "inveterate prejudices as well as gross superstition and thraldom are disappearing in the presence of Gospel light and liberty." At Messina an ex-monk has come out boldly for Christ, and is now voluntarily doing the work of an evangelist. At Nizza also many of the converts have evinced unflinching courage amid persecution from popish priests. Mr. Donald Matheson, 120, Queen's-gate, S.W., is the Hon. Secretary.

MISSION WORK IN SPAIN.

DEAR SIR,—Last year you kindly inserted a letter from me in behalf of Senor Antonio Martinez, who is working at Reus and Tarragona, and the villages round Reus. He was collecting for a mission hall and schools, as the priests had turned them out of one hired place after another.

I have just heard from him, asking me to let your readers know that this little building is now erected, and will be dedicated to the work of God on Thursday, May 14. Will all who are interested in this work in Spain join in prayer on that day that many souls may be won to the living Saviour, whose Ascension we that day remember.

Might we not give a thank-offering, as we think of Christ's intercession, ceaseless since that day? A good many expenses are connected with furnishing and fitting, and I should be most grateful for any help, so that there may be no pressure of money needs to hinder the pastor. He is a most whole-hearted worker, and cannot cease from preaching wherever he finds an opening. The Mission Hall is at Reus, which will thus be a permanent centre for the Gospel. The converts are very poor, but have given large sums, for them, to the building. Reus itself did not suffer from the earthquake, but Pastor Martinez's sister in Andalusia was one of those who had to camp out in tents during that terrible time.—Yours sincerely,

SOPHIA M. NUGENT.

REVIVAL IN SOUTH-CENTRAL FRANCE.

AN important religious awakening has been at work and is still operating in the mountains of Tarn (centre south of France), near Vabre, Viane, and Esperansses. The revival broke out just a year ago amongst descendants from the old Huguenots. It was begun in Vabre by a Free Church minister—a stranger to the place—but whose soul had been blessed in the contact with a warm salvationist gentleman from Nismes. Soon after a large open-air meeting was held in a central spot, called "La Dorelier." From all parts people flocked to it, and about fifty conversions took place. Men and women began to tell in their own dialect of the wonderful works of God. The Free Churches of that region which welcomed the revival had the number of their members doubled in a short time. For months meetings were held every evening, and without any apparent weariness.

A year has elapsed, and a new outpouring of the blessing has come on these picturesque valleys. During twenty-one consecutive days we have had forty-four meetings—about twenty for consecration and prayer, and the others for evangelisation and appeals. Several anxious inquirers rose up at each meeting to be prayed for. Never have I listened to more earnest, more agonising prayers from fathers, mothers, husbands, wives, brothers, sisters, sons, and daughters in behalf of their loved ones still unconverted. The Lord during these blessed days has shown to many unhealed sores and hidden sins. Cries of anguish and repentance have gone up. We had two special meetings for children. The one at Viane was very affecting. Grown-up people have been brought to Christ by the very sight of these dear children crying out on account of their sins.

We hear that such a blessed revival is extending itself towards the south-west. Let our British friends entreat the Lord that it may spread all over France!—Truly yours in Him,

ELIE VERNIER, Itinerating Pastor.

Valence, Drome, France.

A COMFORTABLE HOUSE has been open for the last few years at St. Boswell's, on the Tweed, where Edinburgh missionaries and Bible-women may enjoy a season of rest and refreshment during the summer months. Lodging is kindly provided by the proprietor of the house. Help towards the expenses of board and travelling will be thankfully received by Mrs. Henry Dundas, Craig Royston, Davidson's Mains, Midlothian.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—On Thursday evening, May 7, the quarterly meeting of this Mission was held at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., some 230 preachers having been entertained at a social gathering. The company subsequently assembled in the Lecture-hall, where Rev. J. Jackson Wray delivered his lecture, entitled, "George Whitefield: the Prince of Preachers." The entire scope of the great preacher's life and labours was skilfully traversed, while the closing scene was referred to with pathos and solemnity.

MISSION TO THEATRICAL EMPLOYES.

A GATHERING of an interesting and varied character took place on Saturday last in connection with the Theatrical Mission. Between 300 and 400 ladies and gentlemen, many well known in the fields of Christian enterprise, gathered on the site of the new building in Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, to witness the laying of four memorial stones.

A choir of children, many of whom have been blessed through the classes of the Mission, led the singing. The venerable evangelical rector of the parish, Rev. S. F. Cumberlege, having offered prayer, Mr. Courthope Todd gave a brief and most interesting statement of the work, which included an abstract from "Marvellously Helped," the new Report, and a record of steps taken to extend the operations of the Society. The laying of the four stones was most graciously performed by the Countess of Aberdeen, Miss Fowler (on behalf of the Lady Mayoress), Mrs. Bond-Capell, and Mrs. Marshall. Mr. Horace B. Marshall spoke on behalf of these ladies, presenting at the same time, in the name of himself and Mrs. Marshall, the sum of £100. Mr. Spencer Chadwick promised a like amount. While the choir sang, "There's a Friend for little Children," the collection was taken up, amounting to £249, cheques and promises being rapidly passed to the platform, which raised the total to £392. The building fund for the New Institute now exceeds £1000. £3000 is still needed before the close of the present year.

Excellent addresses followed by Rev. Dr. Bennet, Pastor C. Spurgeon of Greenwich, Rev. Darlow Sarjeant, Rev. Dr. Whittemore, and Dr. McKillian. All must have joined heartily in Rev. Gosset Tanner's dedicatory prayer for the speedy completion of the new building. Help towards the cost will be gratefully received and acknowledged from the present Mission premises, 21, King-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

BISHOP TAYLOR.

WRITING to Rev. H. Price Hughes from St. Paul de Loanda, West Coast of Africa, on March 18, the Bishop says:—

"I spent a month in Liberia, preached about fifty-five sermons, from Muhlenburg on the north to Cape Palmos on the south, had over sixty sinners converted to God, and a good quickening among the believers. We had a pleasant session of the Liberia Annual Conference. I joined my party of missionaries at Cape Palmos, February 22, on the s.s. Biassa, and we are arrived here in good health and glowing gratitude to God, this morning. I sent Dr. Summers and Eli Chatelain, two of my men, on to this place a month in advance, to prepare the way for our reception. In response to my letters to the Governor of Angola, presented by Dr. Summers, His Excellency assured him that he would be glad to have us found missions in any and all places in Augola that we may choose to select, and that he will do his utmost to assist us in every way possible. Our friends, Messrs. Newton & Bent, of the firm of Newton, Carnegie & Co., are grandly advancing our cause here, and rented a house with twenty rooms, high and healthy, where we can all get shelter while remaining in Loanda. We number thirty men and women, and sixteen young people and children. My son, Ross, and family, from California, are here with us well."

THE FEMALE PROTECTION SOCIETY (159, Marylebone-road, N.W.) continues to use every effort not only to rescue the fallen, but to lead them into a better life. The testimonies borne by the girls who have received permanent spiritual good is most cheering and encouraging. Sixty-four young women have been received during the year, most of whom are now in situations, or have been restored to their friends.

THE NURSERY FOR HOMELESS INFANTS, BRISTOL.—The little report of this institution narrates some examples of Divine leading and interposition, and proceeds to illustrate the great need of the institution and the good it is doing. "The saddest case we ever had was Maggie, a child of two years old, who was constantly calling, 'Do give me a drop of gin,' varied with 'A pint of beer!' We had to treat this poor child as a drunkard, and appease the unnatural craving with milk and chemical food." The treasurer and secretary, Miss Marriott, Oldbury House, St. Michael's-hill, Bristol, is grateful for £100 recently received through an appeal in THE CHRISTIAN, but regrets to say that the current year has closed in debt.

MIZPAH BANDS.

GLASGOW.

On a recent Sabbath evening it was arranged to hold a praise and testimony meeting in our City Hall. Nearly 3000 were gathered together, and hundreds could not get in. In those circumstances it was thought well to select the largest building in the city, the St. Andrew's Halls, which, when crowded, can accommodate about 4000 of an audience. This meeting took place on the evening of Sabbath, April 26. Mr. R. Hunter Craig, president, occupied the chair. It was truly a cheering sight to look upon that great sea of upturned faces. This feeling was enhanced as you turned round and looked into the bright countenances of the choir, who numbered about 400. To hear them sing with such perfection and spirit, the beautiful Gospel hymns of Mr. Sankey and Mr. McGranahan, was no ordinary treat, and proved the great efficiency they had attained under the leadership of Mr. William Moodie. Between the hymns, two or three brethren were allowed four or five minutes each to tell to the praise and glory of God how He had met them, saved them, and kept them. A large proportion of those who testified gave special thanks for not only having the drink appetite taken away, but having been completely delivered from the habit of using tobacco.

A church in the immediate neighbourhood of the hall having been placed at the disposal of the band, at the close of the public meeting all Christian workers, and those who were inquiring the way of salvation, were invited thither. Several hundreds went, and for upwards of an hour inquiring souls were pointed to the Lamb of God. A number professed to accept Jesus as their Saviour.

The regular work of the band consists in carrying on, in various districts of the city, weekly evangelistic meetings. In these meetings many interesting cases occur. Let me relate one. It having reached the ears of the band that a man in the neighbourhood was lying on his death-bed, who was violently opposed to religion, these brethren called on his landlady. She said it was all but certain that he would give them a cold reception. To their delight, however, they were met with civility. Gradually and wisely they brought before him the great importance of salvation. He listened, and after one or two visits became deeply anxious. One morning early, the light and love of the Lord Jesus broke in upon his soul, and such was his overwhelming joy, that nothing would satisfy him but that his landlady should send for the friends who had been pressing the Gospel upon him. They went and found him rejoicing in his Saviour. His history was somewhat interesting. He had gathered together about £300, and was on the eve of investing it in opening a whisky shop, when the Lord laid him down upon a sick-bed, which proved to be his dying-bed. After his conversion, he lived for several weeks, and bore unbroken testimony to Jesus, as an all-efficient Saviour in the dying hour.

Another important branch of work is being carried on both in and around the city for several miles, by the choir dividing themselves in sections of twenty and forty, for the purpose of singing and testifying at the various churches and mission stations to which they are invited.

DEPTFORD.

Before closing, let me refer to the fact that four or five Mizpah Bands were formed in London in connection with Mr. Moody's work. The first annual report of one of them, the Deptford Mizpah Band, reached me a few days ago, from which I take the following extracts. Let me add, from personal knowledge, that this company of working men, having little funds among their band, have yet wrought most faithfully during the past year to win souls for the Master. In doing so they have incurred a small debt, which they feel in their poverty to be a heavy load. I hope your readers, especially your London readers, will follow my example in sending to your office a donation to aid the brethren of the Deptford Mizpah Band, in wiping out their small debt. The report says:—

"This Band was started as a mission to men by singing the Gospel, and thus trying to win souls to Christ. The committee made every effort to secure a place, and no place could be found but a very old house and shop in Wellington-street, Deptford, the most poverty-stricken part of the town, a street which most decent folk would never venture into. At our next meeting we decided to take the house and commence work at once. The brothers worked with a will and made forms, and other alterations were made, and the old shop was turned into a very nice Mission Hall, which was opened to the public on Sunday, March 23, 1884. We have had some very good cases of conversion, and a very large number have received our pledge-cards to abstain from drink, so we have every reason to believe that God is blessing the efforts and labours of his servants in this sin-blighted neighbourhood. During the year we have had a great many open-air services, as many as three nights a week being devoted to this part of the work. We have started a Junior Mizpah Band for children, and we have nearly 100 children on the books. A mothers' Dorcas meeting was commenced, and a very great success it has been."

For the Young.

NOTES ON THE
SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

MAY 21.—PSALM LXVI. 1–9.

v. 4.—"All the earth shall worship Thee, and shall sing unto Thee."—All the sorrow there is in the world arises from forgetfulness of God. Men have cast off his fear, they do not worship and serve Him; and so sounds of woe are more frequent than songs of joy. If you want to sing for joy of heart, you must know and love the Lord. Look at Isaiah lxv. 13, 14. This will be a happy world ere long; Jesus is coming to drive Satan out of it, and to fill the earth with the knowledge and glory of the Lord, then all mankind will sing unto his name.

MAY 22.—PSALM LXVI. 10–20.

v. 18.—"If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me."—This shows us why so many people, young and old, pray without receiving an answer to their prayers. God sees that their hearts are not right with Him, so his Spirit is grieved, and He has to withhold the blessing. A little girl once said to her father, "Father, you won't love me if I am not good, will you?" He looked at her tenderly, and said, "Yes, I shall love you, only it will be with a grieved kind of love that hurts me." So it is with our heavenly Father. (Isaiah lix. 1, 2; and Job xxii. 21—27.)

MAY 23.—PSALM LXVII. 1–7.

v. 4.—"O let the nations be glad."—This psalm is a prayer for the heathen. Dr. Moffat's hymn for children will guide you in this duty:—

"Can I, a little child, do anything for those Who are by sin defiled, to lighten their sad woes?
I cannot see the reason why
I should not, if I really try.

"First, then, I would implore the Lord to change their heart,
Then from my little store I freely will impart,
That some kind teachers may be given
To point out Christ, the way to heaven."

MAY 24.—PSALM LXVIII. 1–18.

v. 5.—"A Father of the fatherless."—What a beautiful title this is for God to be known by, and how true it has always been. Beside the numberless private cases which there are to testify to God's care for the orphan and the destitute, we have only to think of Mr. Muller's great institution at Bristol, Dr. Barnardo's Homes, Miss Macpherson's efforts, and a host of other similar works of mercy, to see how the Lord cares for the young who are left without earthly friends to help them. He it is who has put it into the hearts of his people thus to care for those who are comfortless. As David said in another place, "When my father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up;" and so also the Prophet: "In Thee the fatherless findeth mercy."

MAY 25.—PSALM LXVIII. 19–35.

v. 28.—"Thy God hath commanded thy strength."—"I was requested," said the late Dr. Macleod, "by a brother minister to go and visit a dying boy. He was eleven years of age, and during three years of sickness and excruciating pain had manifested the most patient submission to the will of God. I went to visit him. For years he had not known one day's rest. I gazed with wonder at the boy. After speaking some words of sympathy to him, he looked at me with his blue eyes—he could not move, it was the night before he died—and breathed into my ear these few words, 'I am strong in Him.' The words were few, and uttered feebly; they were the words of a feeble child in a poor home, but they seemed to lift the burden from the very heart, and to make the world more beautiful than it was before; they brought home to my heart a great and blessed truth. May all of us be strong in Him."

MAY 26.—PSALM LIX. 1–18.

v. 5.—"O God, Thou knowest my foolishness, and my sins are not hid from Thee."—Linnæus, the celebrated botanist, placed over the door of the hall in which he lectured, Latin words, which may be translated, "Live guiltless! God observes you!" Well is it for us all to keep this solemn fact in view. There is only one way for our sins to be hidden from God's sight, and that is for us to trust in Jesus Christ as our Saviour and Redeemer. Then our sins are blotted out, freely forgiven, and God remembers them no more against us for ever. Oh, how earnestly we should seek to "walk in the light;" then "the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanses us from all sin," and God looks upon us with delight.

MAY 27.—PSALM LXIX. 19–36.

v. 36.—"They that love his name shall dwell therein."—Rev. Mark Guy Pearse tells a story of a little girl who once went to him and said with tears in her eyes, "Please, sir, it's a dreadful thing, but I don't love Jesus." "And how are you going to love Him?" he replied. "I don't know; please, sir, I want you to tell me." She spoke so sadly, as if it were something she could never do. "Well, the disciple John, who loved Jesus almost more, perhaps, than any one else ever did, says that 'We love Him, because He first loved us.' Now if you go home to-night saying in your heart, 'Jesus loves me,' I am sure that to-morrow you will say, 'I love Jesus.'" She looked up through her tears, and said very softly, "Jesus loves me." She began to think about it, as well as say it—about his life and his death on the cross—and began to feel it too. The next evening she came to Mr. Pearse again, and with a bright, happy face said, "Oh, please, sir, I do love Jesus to-night, for He does love me so!"

BIBLE ACROSTIC.

(1) Who was it overheard a dream, and so fresh courage took?

(2) What was he called whose mother's name prefaced a sacred book?

(3) Who was the grandson of the man the second answer gives?

(4) What little word begins a verse declaring Jesus lives?

(5) Who is it that all space pervades, we have it, not our own?

(6) What was it Moses Israel gave, from Sinai's top made known?

(7) Of what place was a certain priest of whom we early read?

(8) Give me the name of one, a queen, not of the chosen seed.

(9) What word does Luke in Acts record descriptive of a feast,
Near to the time a king would have a prisoner released?

The answer is a truth we read,
Made manifest in word and deed;
A truth the heavens aloud proclaim,
The teeming earth prolongs the strain,
The Gospel says Amen, amen!

PADDINGTON-GREEN CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL.—The committee of this institution record thankfully its continued prosperity. A commodious iron waiting-room has been erected at the cost of the Chairman; the number of beds in use has been increased; more than 400 casualty cases have been attended. There has been a grand total of nearly 30,000 attendances during the past year. The working men in the neighbourhood took great interest in the recent bazaar, and in the hospital generally, raising among themselves £258. Twice the number of beds would soon be filled with poor sick children if the funds permitted. Mr. George Hanbury, 21, Portman-square, W., is the treasurer. The hospital is supported entirely by voluntary contributions.

Notes and Comments.

WE give this week four additional pages in order to furnish our readers with some opinions of the press on the Revised Old Testament. A number of interesting articles and reports are withheld till our next issue.

A correspondent who has read the article in a recent issue on "Misapplied Wealth," considers that a good deal of wealth which might be more profitably applied goes in beer for the servants' hall. Many servants, he asserts, would be only too willing to receive an equivalent in money instead of the beer, and would thus escape the temptation to fall into drinking habits. Our correspondent says that he is in an establishment where four imperial pints of beer per diem are allowed him, at an annual cost of £12 3s. 4d. He would gladly take £5 in lieu of this, and there would be an annual saving to his employer of the £7 3s. 4d.

Easter and Whitsuntide have a vital connection. The Resurrection of the Lord is the beginning of "the last things;" Pentecost sets apart the Church as the channel whereby the world shall be prepared for "the fulness of the times." Christ, by his resurrection and exaltation, penetrates all ranges of history and providential development. The coming of the Spirit secures the ever-deepening hold of Christ upon humanity. The first of these Christian commemorations shows Jesus invested with the power of the Father; the second places the faithful in habitual dependence on the grace and monitions of the Spirit of the Father.

The great gift of Pentecost was that of "tongues." The fathomless love of God in the Cross, the unlimited hope for sinful man in the glorification of the Redeemer, must be told by human lips, and in the languages of all men "wherein they were born." It has been this emphatic lesson that the arch-adversary has taught men to deny. In one great Church for more than a thousand years prayers have been repeated in a tongue the people are ignorant of. Even in Reformed Churches preaching has been disparaged and Christianity made a service of music, of spectacle, altars, and vestments. What a different world would ours have been had every teacher of religion, baptized by the Holy Ghost, adopted Peter's language at Pentecost, and said to men, "Give ear unto my words."

Another of the huge perversions of the teachings of Pentecost is that during long centuries an official class has claimed to be the sole ministers of religion. These have not even regarded that which an apostle inculcated as a prime qualification, that there should be "aptness to teach." There is evidence of a growing reaction against such notions, when we find in the Bampton Lectures for 1883 a dignitary of the Episcopal Church affirming that there can be nothing more fatal to mankind than to call one set of persons religious and another secular; or to suppose that the clergy alone represent religion; and that to treat clergymen after such a manner may be to exalt them, at the cost of enfeebling and destroying the Church. This is the language of Canon Fremantle, of Salisbury, and gives some promise of the return of the Church to Apostolic Christianity.

The fight against the demons of impurity that are stalking abroad through the land is not only a hard and constant, but a costly one. Yet we do not know how a Christian's money could be better spent than in supplying the needful sinews of war to those who are waging this fight. The young "Gospel Purity Association," which has already through its agents done far more than would justify its existence, stands in need of pecuniary support. We commend its operations to the hearty sympathy of all true Christian patriots. The secretary is Mr. J. B. Wookey, 31, Paternoster-square, E.C.

Dr. G. F. Pentecost, who lives in many English hearts since his visit last year, has commenced a monthly periodical, entitled, "Words and Weapons for Christian Workers," which may be obtained from the publisher, Henry T. Holt, 59, 119-121, Nassau-street, Brooklyn, N.Y. Subscription, one dollar per annum.

We summarise one of the practical leaderettes in the first number:—

> "Paul said, 'I am determined,' 'One thing I do.' If all Christians would adopt this rule there would be more and better work and less backsliding. Too many Christians live in their moods and frames of mind. They have no settled plan of service for Christ, but do what they may be moved to do, or what they feel like doing. If they do not feel like doing anything, they don't. They have not determined. . . . If we are to be saved we must continue faithful to the end. And this we will not do unless we are determined in the strength of the Lord to live and do for Him according to his Word; not according to our changeful feelings and fluctuating moods."

While politicians and newspapers are so concerned about our prestige, a few words by a heathen Chinaman in America may be profitably taken to heart by baptized heathens in England:—

> "Attend to your business carefully and conscientiously, no matter how humble it may be. Let the citizens of this metropolis know how honest and capable our race is. They will find ere long that, however superior they may be to us in the art of war and of machinery, we still can teach them lessons in that morality and fair play which in the long run rule the world."

Translated into Christian ethics this may read, "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord."

If a "heathen Chinee" has faith in the inevitable effect of conscientiousness, honesty, and good morals, in the long run to rule the world, how much more should the followers of God's Christ be assured that they can best contribute to maintain the prestige of their country by walking in the footsteps of the Holy One? The prestige of England is in the hands of her saints. Sodom though she be, the righteous in her prevent impending judgments. The prestige of a country righteously governed, by the impartial administration of equal laws, would be irresistible throughout the world.

"That we be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." Notwithstanding the general diffusion of intelligence and information, few people nowadays think deeply on what they read, so that there is peculiar danger of being tossed to and fro and carried about by every wind of doctrine. But it was not only against cunning and crafty men (like the Mormons, for example) against whom the Apostle found it necessary to warn the Church at Ephesus; not only should grievous wolves enter in among them, but of their own selves should men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after THEM.

Mr. G. O. Barnes, whose wild and erratic utterances, mingled with truths received by all Christians, have left a legacy of trouble in every place he visited in this country, is now in India. A very moderately-written article in the Bombay Guardian indicates clearly enough that he will cause similar difficulties there, and some that will be peculiar to the conditions of Hindoo society. He preaches against requiring Hindoo native converts to be baptized or to break Caste. The Guardian says that whenever Caste has been allowed a footing in the Church it has been found impossible to eradicate it afterwards without rending the Church.

But Mr. Barnes is not without followers here. A Mr. Carty has arrived from America. He came "by revelation" to communicate to Mr. Barnes the new teachings he had received; but ere he arrived the latter had sailed for India. We know not whether Mr. Carty will follow him. We should think Mr. Barnes would rather not, for we understand that Mr. Carty testifies that Mr. Barnes is wrong, and does not go far enough in the crudities which they both teach. The extravagancies of Mr. Carty are, we are assured, extreme. He expounds the "thieves and robbers" who came before Jesus (John x.) to be Moses and the prophets; and he has other notions still more absurd.

The incarnate God was called Jesus because He should save his people from their sins; and as their risen Priest He is able to save them to the uttermost who come unto God by Him; to keep them from falling; and to present them faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy But those who have adopted extreme views as to fleshly perfection and faith-healing—claiming the elimination of sin and deliverance from dying—fail to see what were the effects of the fall upon man in his first creation, and to understand that through death and resurrection not only will the fatal effects of the fall be remedied, but that this body o our humiliation will in resurrection be made like unto the glorious body of the Son of God

A friend of ours was recently told by one who had the misfortune of a deformed body that he was sure he should not die. He wa asked if he thought that he really had already received his new body; he replied that h had. Said his interrogator, "If that be the case, I confess that I should be greatly disappointed."

Paul the aged exhorted both his sons in the faith, Timothy and Titus, to avoid foolish and unlearned questions, knowing that they d gender strifes (2 Tim. ii. 23; Titus iii. 9) He would have the saints at Rome not only avoid the foolish questions, but the foolish men who raised them. Almost the last words of his Epistle to the Romans were these: " BESEECH you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned: and AVOI THEM." There have been times whe Christians have forgotten grace in their zea for truth; now a good many gracious person are receiving and following men who hav the gift of speech, but who in importan respects pervert the truth. Paul beseeche the saints to "avoid them."

Dr. Saphir's recent sermon on "Christia Perfection," from which we gave copiou extracts at the time of its delivery, is no published. (Shaw & Co., 6d.) We observe that the preacher has carefully revised the discourse, so that it may be regarded as the matured and deliberate expression of his views as to the teaching of Holy Scripture on this most important subject.

Last week we commented on the flagrant burlesque of justice in imposing on the notorious procuress, Mrs. Jeffries, a fine of £200, a trifle which could be subscribed in a minute by her patrons—dignities against whom we bring no railing accusation concerning the bodies and souls whom they destroy; but to whom, in the words of Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, we say, "The Lord rebuke you!"

We mentioned in our report another case of the same kind, and now we quote from a daily paper the way in which it was dealt with by the same Assistant-Judge:—

CLERKENWELL v. CHELSEA.

At the Middlesex Sessions on Thursday, before Mr. P. H. Edlin, Q.C., Assistant-Judge, James Barrett, 28, describing himself as a dealer, pleaded guilty to keeping a disorderly house in White Lion-street, Clerkenwell. The prisoner's offence was aggravated by previous convictions. His lordship now passed sentence of six months' imprisonment with hard labour, and ordered the prisoner at the expiration of his sentence to enter into his own recognisances in the sum of £50 and to find a surety in a like sum for his future good behaviour."

We do not complain that the sentence on James Barrett was too heavy, but we affirm that his offence was light compared with that of Mrs. Jeffries. Her offence had not, indeed, been "aggravated by previous convictions," and if the authorities could have had their way she would not have been convicted now. But she had been for many years a wrecker of young lives, and had carried on her infernal business in about a dozen houses. If her sentence was right, a fine of £20 would have been a sufficient penalty for Barrett; but if it was right (as it was) to sentence him to six months with hard labour, Mrs. Jeffries ought to have been sent into penal servitude. God hates the unequal balance, and what is sown in unrighteous adjudication shall be reaped in the righteous judgment of God "whether it be done against a nation or a man only; that the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be ensnared."

"Many of the Lord's people from various causes are cut off from much active work in his vineyard, but many amongst these are set apart to be his "remembrancers," and their lives are lives of prayer. The priestly work of intercession is theirs. As of old, so now, when they hold up their hand Israel prevails. With them lies the secret of many of the glorious revivals we read and hear of week by week. Through their prayers the power seems to be in some way set free which liberates and saves souls. They know what it is to stir up themselves to take hold of God (Isaiah lxiv. 7), and upon them is poured out, in a special way, the "spirit of supplication." How God needs such people! how we need them, who may be going forth, sword in hand! The writer asks if some who are thus set apart will seek to lay upon their hearts some meetings to be held in July next, of widespread interest and deepest importance, for which united, sustained, prevailing prayer is the one thing needful. She would be glad and thankful to communicate on the subject with any who may be led to respond to this appeal. Address, Mrs. Rowan, 29, Eaton-terrace, Eaton-square, S.W." [We believe that the meetings here referred to are the ladies' meetings in connection with the Keswick Convention.]

News is received of the safe return of Rev. G. Grenfell, F.R.G.S., in the Baptist Missionary Society's steamer Peace, after a voyage on the Upper Congo River, from Stanley Pool to the Stanley Falls, a distance of 1060 miles. It is gratifying to learn, says Mr. Bentley, writing to The Daily Telegraph, that this great river can now be peaceably navigated, and such exploratory journeys conducted in safety. The trip occupied five months, having altogether accomplished 4000 miles, one-third of the distance being entirely new ground, not previously visited by the white man. The whole River Congo is proved to be open to civilisation, commerce, and missionary enterprise.

Amid the heat of debate about Disestablishment and kindred topics, which are a specialty of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, we are glad to observe that in the recent Synod meeting in Edinburgh, the weightier matters of evangelism, home and foreign, were not forgotten. At the missionary sederunt Rev. John Smith, late of Berwick, now of Edinburgh, thrilled the meeting with his appeals on behalf of home evangelisation:—

"It was a maxim of warfare that if they were to extend their operations abroad they must strengthen the base of operations at home. What were they doing to carry forward mission work at home? Their own city, and many other places all over the land, were not without wastes of desolation. Still further, he could point to distinct and very marked tendencies of thought and life within their own nation, within and without their Church, fitted to awaken more grave apprehensions than the accomplished facts of religious declension. What were they doing for the different classes of the community—for the drunkards, for the indifferent, and for the unbelieving? He knew there were many doing much. But they found that all, in attempting to grapple with this heathenism, were overburdened. They were lost in the mass of heathenism that they were seeking to overcome; and even with this progress, and closely connected with their churches, they found that a great majority of the members of these churches—and sometimes the great majority of the office-bearers—took little or no part in the work. And so, while they were gathering tens here and hundreds there into their little mission churches, round about them there was a great seething sea of human waste, horrible to behold. What did they need to make these desolate places fruitful? They did not need so much money, nor did they need special organisations. His conviction was—and he stated it boldly—that they should economise personal expenditure to the utmost in order to meet growing claims; and, further, that they should release every man they could spare to go to the heathen abroad."

At one of the United Presbyterian Synod meetings two valuable papers were read on "Hindrances to Christian work arising from the intellectual and social atmosphere of the times." Dr. Leckie, evidently having Professor Drummond's book in his view, said they must not seek to get rid of any difficulty by asserting the identity of law in mind and matter; their appeal must be to spiritual facts. Another speaker, in dealing with the same subject, said there was nothing to fear from the mental activity of the age. The onward march of the Church could be traced in the past by the slain remains of vanquished infidelities. They must meet agnosticism by dogmatism, not of the doctrinal but of the supernatural kind. Let Christians live out the truth they professed, and scepticism would be powerless.

Principal Cairns well remarked, in the course of the discussion, that "unless they had a living Bible perpetually being produced, and exerting its divine influence anew in the living Church, they would fail in their work."

Tuesday week was a specially interesting day at the Central Noon Prayer-meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street. Mr. J. Merry pressed home with great earnestness the claims of the heathen world. As a practical commentary on the address, a young convert from Brahminism pleaded with intense fervour for more labourers to carry the light of the Gospel to the millions of his benighted countrymen. Mr. J. Cameron, of the China Inland Mission, having completed his medical course at Philadelphia, and taken his degrees, is now on the way back to his far-off field of labour. He was present at this meeting to say good-bye, and to ask a continued interest in the united prayer of Christians at home.

We ask the special attention of our readers to the International Convention on Faith-healing in London during the first week of June. There is so much of truth and blessing mixed up, as we think, with so much of mischievous error, that we hope many Christians of spiritual experience, sound judgment, well-balanced mind, and well taught in the Scriptures, will make an effort to attend as many of the meetings as shall enable them thoroughly to understand the teachings and to weigh the testimonies that will be given. For ourselves, we believe implicitly in the efficacy of the prayer of faith and in gifts of healing; but we entirely discredit some statements and principles which are set forth in connection with this subject, and which, so far as we are able to judge, are not only unsupported by, but antagonistic to, the word of truth.

A few weeks ago we quoted from a letter written in Sweden and printed in England, the statement that three thousand persons had been healed in Sweden through the faith and prayer of a godly peasant named Boltzius, including blind persons whose eyes were said to be growing again. We are able to state, on reliable authority, that the growth is not that of new eyeballs but of fungus. With regard to Dr. Moon, whose system of embossed reading has conferred so great a benefit on the blind, we have reason to believe that no real approach towards sight has yet resulted from his visit to Sweden. We, who see, can little appreciate the yearning of the blind for sight, and we are not surprised that this honoured servant of God should have gone to Sweden in the hope of restored vision; but it is possible that the few years of service which may remain to him at the age of sixty-six might be hindered more than helped by the restoration of his sight. It would probably distract the attention of himself and others from those inventions which have been his beneficent life-work, and lead the blind and others vainly to look for wonders and signs.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION IN PARIS.—This Mission, under the direction of Rev. Wm. Gibson, has fourteen stations in various parts of France. A report lately issued, while lamenting the evident increase of scepticism and atheism, says that the meetings give much encouragement and fill the hearts of the workers with joy. The report is worth reading for its exposure of Mariolatry, as well as for the interesting cases of conversion it records. The office of the Mission is 4, Rue Roquépine, Paris.

DALRYMPLE HOME FOR INEBRIATES, RICKMANSWORTH.—In a report before us, the committee express thankfulness for results far beyond what they had ventured to hope for. More than half the patients have recovered, and been enabled to again fulfil the duties of life, while 75 per cent. have been decidedly improved. Total abstinence from all intoxicants is insisted upon. Additional accommodation is urgently needed, which will be undertaken when funds are forthcoming. The hon. sec. is Dr. Norman Kerr, 42, Grove-road, Regent's-park, London.

May Meetings.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

THE present Lord Mayor has frequently displayed the interest he feels in missionary work, and particularly in the work connected with the Thames Church Mission. That interest was again shown on Monday week, when the anniversary of the Mission was held in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House. The attendance was one of the largest ever known at an annual meeting of the Mission.

The Secretary (Mr. E. J. Mather) read the report, enumerating the diversified experiences found amongst sailors and fishermen, bargemen and watermen, dock labourers and navvies, soldiers and emigrants, with whom the missionaries come into contact. The Gravesend district, embracing that section of the river extending from Greenhithe to the Nore, specially under the charge of the chaplain, the Rev. Henry Bloomer, presents peculiarly interesting opportunities of service. Here the large ocean liners, the sea-going ships and steamers, are met; here the long-voyage sailors are chiefly reached. Off Gravesend, these large vessels, whether outward or homeward bound, usually lay for some hours, and the chaplain is thus enabled to reach the crews. Permission being obtained of the chief officer—and rarely, indeed, is it denied—Testaments, books, tracts, and papers are distributed amongst the seamen, library bags are placed in the fo'csle under charge of one or other of the men, and in most cases a service is held. These services are generally short, but pointed and pithy words spoken at the right moment seldom fail to find their way to some weary, aching heart. Again and again these fo'csle services have proved times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The work on board the transport ships has been of the greatest importance, as it has cheered the soldiers bound for the seat of war, and the word of the Gospel has been brought to them at a time when it is most likely to be acceptable to them. The army of navvies, numbering about 6000, who are engaged in constructing the new docks at Tilbury, have proved a fine field of labour for the missionaries. The men have been most willing to listen to the word of the Gospel, and the work has been very prosperous. Over 700 of them have signed the pledge, and have donned the "blue" by way of open confession. The committee have insisted upon keeping to the sound commercial principle of making the income of each year pay for the expenditure of that year. This has only been done during the past year, by selling out stock to the amount of £600, and leaving 1885 to bear the liabilities therein incurred. The committee hope that this cause will recommend itself to the subscribers.

The Lord Mayor said the Society was one they could heartily support. When it met there last year it was in a double capacity—with the deep-sea fishermen and the sailors and others on the Thames. The work of these two branches was now divided, and they had only to consider that portion of the field of labour which laid in the Port of London. It was a very important work to visit the large number of men who frequented the ships on the River Thames, and they should do all in their power to encourage the missionaries engaged in that work. Prebendary Whittington said he had been acquainted with the work of the society for some time, and he knew the great results it was working amongst the seamen of this country. They were a body of men for whom their best sympathies should be awakened. And they were a body of men who were very susceptible. They were ever ready to listen if any-one approached them in a proper manner. Then they would carry the Word of God to distant parts of the earth. Mr. Ellice stated that during the many years he had been acquainted with the work of the society he had formed the highest opinion of the usefulness of its operations. It had a distinct claim upon the people of London.

Three missionaries of the society gave interesting accounts of their experiences of the work. Mr. John Lowman (who had been in the service of the society since its foundation in 1844) said he had had both his arms broken, and his legs in bandages for months together, in the prosecution of his duties as a missionary. Mr. George Symons said that he was engaged amongst the navvies at Tilbury, and he rejoiced at the success which was attending the work there. Captain Barnes also gave some interesting information. A stirring address was delivered by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston. Jack, he said was a splendid fellow. He was very susceptible, but as much for evil as for good; and if they were not up and doing, the sailors would fall into evil ways.

The "personal testimonies" given at the annual meeting at the Mansion House aroused so much interest, that, in response to a generally expressed wish, it has been decided to hold a special meeting in Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, the 27th inst., at three p.m., when facts and incidents in connection with their work over fifty-six miles of river will be narrated by the society's missionaries. Boys from one of the training ships (with their band), seamen, bargemen, and others will attend the meeting.—Rock.

Y.M.C.A. BREAKFAST.

MAY DEW is a recipe which has often been prescribed for the continuance of maidenly beauty. But for a long time past the Christian young men of the city have discovered its virtues and periodically essayed its power to develope, not their beauty, but their moral and spiritual stamina. We were glad last Friday morning once more to see the ceremony repeated, and at the early hour of six a.m. to sit down to breakfast with the members of the Aldersgate Branch of the Y.M.C.A. The railway brought them in from north, south, east, and west, and to their honour be it said they came not alone. Mr. George Williams, the worthy President, set the example by bringing his good wife; a number of the young men followed suit by bringing one another's sisters. There was indeed a goodly gathering.

By seven o'clock the physical requirements were fully met, and the meeting settled down to enjoy a repast of a higher nature. After some words of welcome from the President, he put the question: "To what purposes were our Associations being used by God?" He proceeded to answer it from facts that had come under his own notice. Only the previous night they had received into fellowship a young man who said he had given his heart to the Lord at a meeting of the Association lately. The other day a young man had told him that he had decided for Christ at the great Exeter Hall meeting, when the young China missionaries said farewell. There were present a gentleman from Switzerland, and another from Italy, whose experience of their Association confirmed him in the conviction that God was using them largely in bringing young men into the Church, who should greatly strengthen it, for many of them devoted themselves to the work of the missionary and the ministry. He believed this would continue so long as spiritual good, and not mere secular improvement, was the chief aim; as wings to the bird, the sail to the ship, or fire to the engine, so was love for souls the secret of their success.

"The Model Young Man" was the theme chosen by Pastor Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, who, to make sure of punctual attendance, had come up to town the previous night. He said that when he was in business in the city, a ship broker had told him he did not care for a young man who could not look another in the face and tell a lie. That was not his idea of manliness. He believed in having a model set up, even as the Romans set the busts of their most noble citizens in the vestibule of their houses, and the best model for all of them was the Master Jesus. Copying Him, one would have the courage of his convictions, he would have a consistent life which would be a useful one, for it would be consecrated to God's service. There need be no concern about the future, for the home they looked forward to was in truth a grand Young Men's Christian Association.

Mr. Clark, from Spezzia, gave a few valuable thoughts on "Influence," illustrating it by events in his own family life, which happened fifty years ago, and the results of which seemed to him to him to be now opening out into an abundant spiritual harvest. The information he gave regarding these was of the most interesting character. Then came Mr. John Haywood and Mr. J. Pearce, the latter on "Individual effort." Mr. Kirkham, of the Open-air Mission, chose for his subject "Bible Study." The worthy secretary, Mr. Robert Burn, drew most excellent lessons from the circumstances of the meeting. This would not be a true and faithful chronicle if we failed to add that the sacred solos sung by Miss Williams and Miss Kirton were everything to be desired. The Young Men's six o'clock May Breakfast, 1885, was so good that it ought not to be soon forgotten.

TURKISH MISSIONS AID SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held at Exeter Hall, Sir William Muir presiding.

Rev. T. W. Brown (secretary) read extracts from the report. The Society is a Missions Aid Society, not for Turkey alone, but for all the Bible lands. Reference was made to the difficulties with which the missionaries in the East have to cope—such as the corruption of so-called Christian churches, the low morale which prevails, the ordeal of social persecution to which an inquirer is exposed, the prevalence of infidelity, and the influence of Jesuitism. Yet the work went on. Much stress was laid on the educational aspect of the mission work. The report appealed to Christians throughout the country for increased support.

The Chairman said the Society deserved success, both from its constitution and the object it had in view. Being undenominational, it failed to carry with it the special prestige attaching to societies connected with particular churches. Its pure, simple object was to forward the cause of the Gospel, and it deserved large support. Mr. R. N. Cust, having just returned from a visit to Egypt, Syria, and Persia, said he felt much encouraged in seeing in how many places the American missionaries had planted their missions. In Egypt there was a chain of mission stations, and the work of evangelisation and education was going on vigorously. Rev. Dr. Strickland said the Society was valuable because it was endeavouring to influence the people through the native Christians. He believed that a great conflict would take place, and it was desirable that they should take advantage of the convulsion to carry to those people a nobler faith. Rev. Newman Hall, Rev. Dr. Paterson, Rev. Dr. Dennis (Beyrout), and Dr. Hogg (Antiab), all spoke highly of the work, some of them from personal observation.

CRIPPLES IN MARYLEBONE.

THERE is a family of lame lasses living in Marylebone-road. They have been gathered together from many strange places, yet one event has happened to them all. They, who more than all others require loving hands to tend them, yet stand in need of all that is included in the words "parental care." Thirty-five years ago a true woman was led to think practically on this subject. At that time little cripples were to be found at the corners of our streets trading on their infirmites; in some cases they were actually the source of income to dissolute parents. This lady found kindred spirits ready to help her to form a committee, and two of the number who then founded the Cripples' Home and Industrial School for Girls are still engaged in the loving work. Their family has been a large one, numbering in all nine hundred, and the committee of to-day have to bear all the responsibilities of a household of 108 girls.

Every year there is held a kind of Christmas gathering, but, as it is more convenient, it is held in the merry month of May. All the friends make a point of being present, and family matters are talked over. On this occasion the head of the household, the dear old Earl, was present in spirit only, much to the regret of all; but Mr. T. A. Denny made an excellent Chairman. Some loving words from Rev. Canon Leigh were first spoken. Then a very old friend, Mr. J. M. Weylland, entered into details showing how the blessing of God had followed them all the years. We were glad to learn that the family is in a degree self-supporting, for its members are very busily engaged in straw work, so much so that £500 worth of goods were sold during the past year. The handy-work of the girls have been in request at homes, asylums, and schools, to a number exceeding a hundred. That fact may be worth noting, as it may be accepted that Marylebone hats and bonnets are made in the most approved fashion. Those in charge of large families are sometimes heard to say, "girls need so much, you know," and the income of this household last year fell short of what was required by £300, so that larger contributions are expected during the current year.

Mr. Holmes White unfolded with new light the old æsthetic leanings of religion that deformity is more attractive than beauty, to those who have real spiritual insight, and Dr. Donald Fraser elucidated the same from a different standpoint. Last of all, Dr. Routh, whose disinterested labours for the Home must be gratefully acknowledged, briefly recommended the Marylebone house, and the Convalescent Home at Bognor, to all friends of poor friendless cripple girls. We do the same with all our hearts.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.

IN presiding over the thirty-sixth annual meeting, Captain the Hon. FRANCIS MAUDE, R.N., said it was impossible for them to assemble on this annual occasion without recollecting who occupied the chair last year. For himself he felt this so deeply that he could hardly venture to occupy the place so often and so well filled by the lamented Earl Cairns. Ireland, he said, was undergoing a considerable change, and all the confusions and troubles of recent times were really turning towards the furtherance of the Gospel.

Rev. HORACE W. TOWNSEND reported that during the past year efforts had been made to increase the efficiency of several departments of the Mission with marked success; this had especially been the case with regard to mission schools. Those in rural districts had of late been remarkably free from persecution, but systematic petty persecution had greatly increased in Dublin. In spite of this, however, the Society's schools had been well maintained, and at the recent anniversary in Dublin not less than 1060 children appeared to take their usual part in the public meeting. Greater interest than usual had been taken in their public examination in April last, when the Bishop of Derry presided. The examiners, with one exception, were all strangers to the children, and the answers given in religious and secular knowledge were such as to amaze both the examiners and visitors, who openly expressed their gratification.

Rev. E. W. MAKINSON spoke with great feeling of the impression made upon him by what he had seen of the Society's schools and missionary operations in Ireland. He was convinced that the Society were proceeding on the sound line that "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Interesting addresses were given by Rev. F. Baldey (Southsea), Rev. T. Goad (Dublin), Rev. Canon Fleming (Ballinakill), and Rev. H. Fishe (superintendent of the Dublin Missions).

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

AN excellent report of good work done, was presented to the recent annual meeting of this Society in Exeter Hall. In the course of his secretarial statement, Rev. L. B. White said that the publications of the Society were now to be had in 172 languages, and had reached a total of nearly seventy-one millions. The following items respecting the work of the year will be read with interest:—

> "The excess of grants over the missionary receipts, amounting to £19,719 8s. 10d., has been supplied from the trade funds, which have also borne the entire cost of management both of the business and missionary departments. Tracts and books have been granted during the year to the amount of £28,914 8s. 1d. Every branch of home mission work has thus been helped; and books and libraries have been granted to Sunday-schools, parishes, and congregations; to benevolent institutions of all kinds; to Temperance rooms and coffee-houses; to ministers on ordination, to city missionaries, evangelists, and theological students. Tracts have been liberally supplied for mission services and to individual distributors. Colportage societies in England, Scotland, and Ireland have been assisted by supplies of tracts and of books at reduced prices. The promotion of Biblical education in Board schools has continued to grow. The series of 'Present-Day Tracts,' intended to meet modern forms of unbelief, and to help believers in giving a reason for the hope that is in them, has been continued. Many testimonies have been received to their usefulness. Tracts of a smaller size on the same subjects have also been published, and have been gladly welcomed. Grants have been made in aid of Foreign Missions in Europe, Asia, Africa, America, Australia, New Zealand, and Polynesia."

The speeches of the evening were in keeping with the important work of the society. Mr. F. Peek (chairman) spoke well on the value of a good tract, and of the worthy share the Society takes in promoting Bible distribution in Board Schools. We have elsewhere reproduced some very timely words he spoke on the war spirit that pervades a section of the modern Press. A graceful and grateful tribute to the valuable aid rendered in foreign mission work by the Society was rendered by Rev. R. W. Thompson, of the London Missionary Society. Mr. R. N. Cust contributed the impressions of a Christian traveller to the widely diffused operations of the Tract Society. Dr. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow, was not only unusually facetious for a staid Scotchman, but said some weighty things as to the value of printed truth as supplementing the influence of the spoken word, and counteracting the evil that is done by the myriad issues of the Satanic Press. Rev. J. R. Wood and Rev. F. C. Lillingston, both of Holloway, had additional reasons to offer for a hearty support of this great Tract propaganda—a support which it is to be hoped will increase with the growing needs of the age.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

THE sixty-seventh annual meeting of the London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions, recently took place in the Council Chamber of Exeter Hall, Mr. J. E. Mathieson presiding. The report, as presented by the Rev. J. Henry, Sec., spoke of the loss the Association had sustained in the death of their patron, Earl Cairns. Bishop Perry expressed his deep interest in the operations of the Missions. The Bishop of Antigua, Rev. B. La Trobe, and Rev. E. Peek (Church Missionary Society), Rev. J. T. Edghill, Missionary from Barbadoes, Rev. Dr. Burghetvink, Missionary from Madagascar, added their personal testimony to the value of the Missions.

The annual sermon of the Association was preached on the morning of the same day at St. Michael's Church, Chester-square, by the Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

THE Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol presided at the annual meeting of the Missions to Seamen at Willis's Rooms. The Bishop of Hong Kong, Right Hon. Lord Robert Bruce, Admiral Sir W. King-Hall, Canon Fleming, and Reverends R. B. Boyer, M.A., and J. S. Flynn, M.A., were amongst the speakers. The gross income for the year was £26,368 19s. 8d., being £3,334 more than in the previous year. Notwithstanding so many seamen being out of work and out of wages during the year 1884, nearly 2000 more Bibles were bought by them at the full price than in the previous year; nearly a 1000 more seamen, fishermen, and bargemen pledged themselves to total abstinence from intoxicating drinks than in the year before; the attendances of seamen at Divine worship, conducted by the Missions to Seamen agents, showed a large increase, not only on Sundays, but also at the daily mission services.

It now occupies forty-nine seaports, at home and abroad, with its sixty-eight chaplains and readers, &c., who are furnished with two steam mission-yachts, eight sailing vessels, and many boats, with twenty-one churches and institutes, and seventeen mission-rooms.

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury presided at the recent annual meeting of this Society at the Polytechnic Institute, Regent-street. The report, read by Rev. T. T. Waterman, stated that the open-air lecturing, which was just commencing, was more important and extensive than formerly. Instances of conversion from secularism were given—one of a man who for thirty years had avowed himself an Atheist. Lectures had been given in the hall of the Ball's Pond Secular Club, in the Mildmay Conference Hall, at Lambeth Baths, and many other places in London and the provinces. In connection with the London Church Mission a series of lectures had been delivered in different churches. The examination in works on Christian evidences had been highly satisfactory.

The Archbishop urged the importance of the work, especially in the present day. This was not merely a Society to do ordinary missionary work at home, but it was a scientific Society, whether it addressed people of the highest rank and of the highest education, or those able men in the ranks of our artisans in this country, among whom there was a great spirit of inquiry. They had to show to men of all classes and all kinds and amounts of cultivation, that there was evidence for the Christian belief and for the books in which that belief was embodied. They must be very careful to present the true evidences of Christianity to their hearers, because what was ridiculed was not really true Christianity. If they attempted to refute opposing scientific doctrines they must be careful thoroughly to understand those doctrines. Everything he had seen of the masses exhibited a truth-loving attitude. The Dean of Windsor also contended that the Society was never more needed than at present, although he did not believe that there was a decrease of the true faith, but rather because they had to work amongst men who took an intelligent interest in public matters of every kind. The comparative number of Christians to infidels in the present day was out of all proportion. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., testified to the warm sympathy he felt in the Society, and to the important function it performed. Rev. Dr. Rentoul, Prebendary Anderson, Professor Redford, Rev. Dr. Edghill, and Mr. W. P. James also spoke.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

MANY friends of this Mission met in Exeter Hall on Friday evening, Dr. Sinclair Paterson presiding. The hon. secretary, Mr. T. B. Bishop, stated that services had been held at forty watering places during the past year.

Mrs. Reaney spoke on the possibilities of the spiritual life in Christian workers and in children. She urged that children can not only be saved, but, in their measure, be filled with the Holy Ghost. Great care should be taken in the selection of family governesses. The question of total abstinence was pressed on parents for their children's sake. Mr. W. Shrimpton gave an account of a visit during the past year to the Colonies, especially New South Wales, Queensland, Victoria, and New Zealand. All kinds of schools had been opened to him, both public and private, and many scholars had joined the Union. The Chairman said there were in his Church some members as young as ten to twelve years of age. He had generally found that those who confessed Christ when young stood best. Mr. Arrowsmith (who had only that day come from Oxford, where he is holding meetings) spoke of the great ignorance on spiritual matters existing in the families of some of the upper classes. But God was working, and the children show greater interest than ever in the efforts made on their behalf. During the coming season nearly forty men from Oxford and Cambridge will be working in connection with the children's services. Mr. Arrowsmith appealed for help in the work, and urged parents to select for their summer holiday places where services would be held.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

THE friends of the Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution had an excellent annual meeting in Lower Exeter Hall last week. The attendance was large, the report encouraging, and the addresses of the speakers to the point. As in former years, a large company of the society's friends first sat down to tea together, and for half an hour previous to the meeting there was very earnest prayer offered on behalf of the work and workers, mingled with thanksgiving for the success which had crowned another year's labour.

Mr. Frank A. Bevan, who presided, in opening the public meeting, said they had met to hear what the Lord is doing by the ministry of his servants in a most difficult and trying sphere of Christian effort. It requires, perhaps, more patience, more delicate tact, more of the Spirit of the Master, and more of the grace of the Holy Spirit, than any other form of service which the Christian is called upon to undertake. In proceeding, the Chairman spoke with deep feeling of the increase of juvenile depravity, and very strongly indeed upon the action of the House of Lords, who, notwithstanding the bold and outspoken words of the Archbishop of Canterbury, had not seen their way to extend the protection of the law to girls up to sixteen years of age. Christians must protest most earnestly against this, and elicit a strong expression of opinion upon it from the country at large.

Mr. E. W. Thomas, secretary, gave an interesting account of the work of the year. 237 new preventive cases had been dealt with, and 267 reformatory cases; 211 young women had been temporarily readmitted when out of situations—a provision which had been found to work most beneficially. Altogether over 1,000 cases had been brought under the influence of the Institution.

Rev. F. Hastings, in moving the adoption of the report, referred to a meeting which had been held on the preceding day at the house of Mr. Samuel Morley, when, in reference to the visits of children to public-houses, it was stated that one publican, to meet their convenience, had had a step made all round his bar, in order that poor children, who were not tall enough to reach his counter when sent by their parents for beer and spirits, might stand upon it to get what they wanted. Rev. H. J. Berguer insisted upon the necessity of having stronger preventive measures. He was followed by Captain Thorn, of the London City Mission, who referred to touching cases which came under the notice of the society's missionaries. Mr. Haig Miller also said a brief word on the need of more hearty Christian co-operation. It is intended to hold a conference in the autumn similar to that over which Mrs. F. A. Bevan so admirably presided last year.

THE GOSPEL FOR THE JEWS

THE annual meeting of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews was held last week in Exeter Hall. Mr. George Williams presided, and delivered an excellent address. Rev. J. Dunlop read the report, which stated that upwards of one hundred workers had done good work during the year. It was a wonderful Providence which led the treasurer and the secretary to South Russia last spring, and it had been the occasion of the inauguration of that movement among the Jews Christward, which seems destined to herald the dawn of a glorious day for Jew and Gentile alike.

The meeting was also addressed by the Treasurer, Revs. Dr. Saphir, W. M. Statham, Ossian Davies, C. Spurgeon, Isaac Levinsohn, W. K. Rowe, J. Newman, and Dr. M. Laseron. The collection, including fifty guineas given by the Chairman, amounted to £66 4s. 9d.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE CONVERSAZIONE.

THIS interesting gathering of the friends of Christian union was held, as in former years, at Regent's Park College, and was largely attended. Sir H. Verney, M.P., who presided, said it was matter of thankfulness that the principles of the Alliance were spreading all over the world. Russia at present was almost the only exception. He hoped that soon there would be a branch of the Alliance there. He referred to that which might be called the business of the Alliance, the remedying of any infractions of religious liberty that might take place in foreign countries. There was now the strong power of public opinion with which Governments could be moved in favour of freedom. He could remember the time when the Bible could only be read in Rome at midnight and in secret, now a very different system prevailed. During the last year the society has been endeavouring to extend freedom in Hungary. A suggestive address followed by Rev. F. Sulivan on "The fulness of Christ for his people," based on the construction of the golden candlestick in the temple. The thoughts of unity, dependence, guidance, the Headship of Christ, and his anointing for service, were successively stated and amplified by Mr. Sulivan, and shown to be peculiarly in the line of the distinguishing principles of the Evangelical Alliance. Is there anything in any of us, he asked, that can hinder the manifestations of the Church's union before the world? Whatever grieves the Spirit must hinder the flowing out of the fulness of Christ, so that testimony and witness bearing will be feeble.

Rev. Dr. M. Lang directed attention to the supplementary truth taught in Ephesians—the Church, Christ's body, "the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." The Church is represented as the fulness of the Universal Filler; through it He pours his life to the world; through it He lives and works. The being and power and responsibility of the Church are all embodied in this. The life is something different from the body, and without the life the body is dead, inert matter. So it is with the Church. It has no life and no power apart from the Lord. When the Church leans on anything else but the power from on high it leans on a broken reed. The Church is most powerful when she is least "the Church," and lets the life of the Great Filler be seen. Dr. Lang proceeded to urge that the defence and diffusion of Evangelical truth was something that needed special attention in these days. He alluded to the forthcoming autumn meeting of the Alliance in Glasgow, and said it was greatly hoped that the moderating, sweetening power of the Alliance gulf-stream would be happily felt in the cold North.

From the foreign delegates present two briefly addressed the meeting, Rev. William Muirhead, of China, and Mr. Clarke, of Spezia. Mr. Muirhead said that branches of the Alliance had been formed at Pekin and Shanghai. He could bear testimony to the loving accord that prevails among all the Protestant missionaries throughout that vast Empire. They meet for prayer and conference from month to month, and missionaries of different bodies stand side by side, proclaiming the Gospel to the masses of the people. The Chinese Christians are exceedingly fond of union, and cannot understand our Church differences. In Shanghai the converts of all the churches meet together once a month for mutual comfort, and if there were no hindrances on the part of the foreign missionaries, native Christians would immediately form themselves into one united Church.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

IT is evident to those who consider the case of the poor children of London, that the Ragged School Union is not being superseded by any other agency. The School Board is nobly pressing forward in its great work, but need we say that no Act of Parliament or Government Department can supply loving, sympathetic hearts that shall undertake the duties of a parent to our destitute and friendless children? This is the essence of the Ragged-school work, and the more vigorously it is prosecuted, so other avenues open up by means of which its aims may be more effectually forwarded.

It was with a stronger case than ever that its indefatigable secretary, Mr. J. Kirk, appeared before his friends at Exeter Hall last week, to present a report of the work of the past year. He and his committee must have been thankful to see the hall filled to overflowing. As the Union is known to be a pet of Lord Shaftesbury's, it was known that he would make the utmost effort to come. Almost at the last hour he was compelled to say that for the first time in forty-one years they would require to accept his apology. Sir Robert Carden, also an octogenarian, and a friend of the poor children, accepted service in his stead. Those who attended the schools in former days and have remained in their situations for a year receive a handsome book as a present. As many as 814 were found eligible this year.

Mr. Kirk's report is a most interesting document, which we hope will receive a wide circulation. A new departure is in the form of a holiday house, where fortnightly relays of children are sent to enjoy green fields, the blue sky, and fresh air. It is on Thursley Common. The Sunday-school—morning, afternoon, and evening—is the central work, and over 40,000 children thus receive Christian teaching at 269 services; 112 Bible-classes exist for the senior scholars. Children's services, mothers' meetings, and ragged churches are also vigorously conducted, and the daily educational work supplies all the necessary elements to 5000 boys and girls; 69 schools maintain industrial classes. The army of workers in this noble cause is made up of 210 paid teachers and monitors, and 3291 voluntary labourers, and it is said there is not one too many; nay, there is abundant work for as many more.

Stirring speeches were delivered by Revs. Burman Cassin and H. J. Berguer, who are well known in philanthropic work; in the Rev. J. M. Gibbon we recognise a new friend from the Principality, who promises to take a prominent place on the platform of religious effort.

SERVICES IN THEATRES AND MUSIC HALLS.

THE Lord Mayor recently presided over a meeting of the Committee for special religious services to the people in London theatres, halls, and mission rooms. The report of the twenty-fifth series stated that 549 services had been held, attended by about 334,800 persons. The number of theatres and music-halls in which services had been held was thirteen, and the committee were indebted, with one exception, to the missionaries of the London City Mission, acting as managers of the several buildings, for the reports which had come under their notice. Twenty-six City mission rooms have been opened, or kept open, by means of grants of money during the past season. The committee appealed for additional funds to carry on the work which had been so successful in the past.

The Lord Mayor said that the problem must present itself on all hands as to which was the best way of reaching the lower classes in this great metropolis. It was not only the working classes which they had to reach; there was a lower stratum still. He knew how valuable church agency was in its own way, but it did not reach this lowest stratum of the population. With a view to remedy in some way this state of things, a committee more than a quarter of a century ago was formed to hold religious services in theatres and music-halls. It was the only way in which some people could be got at. They went readily to a theatre or a music-hall. They were accustomed to go there during the week, and had no hesitation in attending on Sunday. The winter before last he had had an opportunity of attending some of these services, and he had been glad to see good congregations assembled. He warmly commended the work to Christian sympathy and support.

Resolutions were afterwards passed expressive of confidence in the work and the desirability of increasing it.

"I IN THEM, AND THOU IN ME."

John xvii. 23.

WE are thine, O great Creator,
  Thou the Source from whence we came,
Thine the Eternal Godhead ever—
  Maker of the world's vast frame.

Thou art ours, O gracious Father,
  Ours to love and to adore;
Thou, who art the Fount, the Giver,
  Of all good for evermore.

As the drops within the ocean,
  So are we, O Lord, to Thee;
We are lost, yet safe for ever
  In thy great Infinity.

We are thine, O tender Saviour,
  Life and joy and peace we owe Unto Thee, who didst redeem us
  From a life of endless woe.

Thou art ours, O King eternal,
  Thou our Shield, our Guide, our Friend;
Thou hast loved and Thou wilt love us,
  Love us even to the end.

We are thine, O Holy Spirit,
  Whispering words of truth and love;
Leading God's tired, wandering children,
  To their Father's home above.

We are thine, our Friend and Father,
  Hid in Christ's own deathless life;
By the Comforter protected,
  'Midst the world's vain sin and strife.

We are thine, and nought can harm us,
  Nought can tear us from thy side;
Christ has bought us, and will keep us,
  Safe in Him the Crucified.

POLICE AT THE CONFERENCE HALL.—About 500 men of the S, Y, N, and G Divisions assembled at the Mildmay Conference Hall on the 12th inst., to hear addresses and to take tea together, a custom which has now been observed for twelve consecutive years. Mr. James E. Mathieson said there were now 191 members of the Policemen's Christian Association in these four divisions. Rev. Burman Cassin, in an earnest address on John i. 29, preached the Gospel very clearly and affectionately. Mr. Alfred R. Pennefather, Receiver to the Force, discoursed sensibly on "Neglect." Mr. Superintendent Walker, who had been connected with the Force for thirty-five years, gave some personal reminiscences, and emphasised the drink as standing in the way of a policeman's well-being. Then came a presentation to Mr. P. S. Badenoch Secretary to the Conference Hall, and conductor of a Christian Policemen's Association. The men had purchased Trapp's and Scott's Commentaries, eleven handsome volumes, which were presented amid great enthusiasm. After tea a meeting of the Christian Policemen's Association was held.

NOON-DAY SERVICES IN BIRMINGHAM.—During the last few weeks mid-day addresses have been delivered by Rev. F. W. Macdonald on various aspects of "Christian Citizenship." In urging the duty of prayer for those in authority, attention was drawn to the nature and extent of the influence that individual character and conduct exercise over the welfare of whole nations. Prayer, frequent and earnest, for those who direct public opinion, and shape events on which a thousand moral issues depend, was among the first duties of a Christian citizen The question of New Testament morality, and its application to public life, was another topic of address. There is but one morality, as there is but one moral agent. Christ deals with man as man, not at one time in his private and another in his public capacity. That conduct can be permissible or praiseworthy in politics while it is only just tolerable in business and base in private life, is a prevalent but false and mischievous notion. In one address Mr. Macdonald took for his text, "God hath made of one blood all nations of men," &c., and spoke with much earnestness of the unity of mankind in sin and in redemption, in the Fatherhood of God, and in the Incarnate and Redeeming Son, the Saviour of the world. The meetings have been characterised by manifest devoutness, and the prayers that were offered met with deep and fervent response from congregations composed of persons of nearly all Christian denominations.—Methodist Times.

Letters to the Editor.

AN ADVERTISING GRIEVANCE.

DEAR SIR,—I am writing about a little grievance to which the unfortunate answerers of advertisements are subjected. It is this, that when you answer an advertisement, and enclose a stamped, addressed envelope for a reply, you seldom or never get one.

Now, I do not think it is honest. No doubt advertisers are often inundated with applications from those living at a distance, but I think it would be only right if they just wrote on the inside of the envelope, "Filled up," and posted it. Perhaps some retain the stamps in order to defray the cost of their advertisement, at the expense of many who can ill afford even the loss of a penny stamp. Christians cannot be too particular, even in a trifling deviation of this kind.

ONE SEEKING A SITUATION.

THE OUTPOURED SPIRIT.

"I will pour water on him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground."—Is. xliv. 3.

SIR,—The great majority of Evangelical Christians, would, no doubt, join without hesitation in the opening prayer of Montgomery's hymn:—

"Pour out thy Spirit from on high; Lord, thine assembled servants bless;"

or, in the words of the collect for the Sunday after Ascension Day, "Send to us thine Holy Ghost to comfort us, and exalt us unto the same place whither our Saviour Christ is gone before." But there are those who see in such prayers an ignoring of the fact that the Holy Spirit has been already sent on the day of Pentecost, to abide with the Church for ever.

The objection seems to arise from not duly considering that all such expressions as "sending," "coming," or "outpouring" are, when applied to the Holy Spirit, figurative phrases; and are not, therefore, to be made a basis for logical deductions, as if they were literal statements. The Holy Spirit, being God, is necessarily present at all times in every place, and cannot, therefore, literally go from one spot to another. "Whither," says David, "shall I go from thy Spirit, and whither shall I flee from thy presence?" Hence, that which literally took place on the Day of Pentecost was, not that the Holy Spirit left heaven, where he had been, and came into the world, where he had not been before, but that his presence began to be manifested, and his power exercised on earth in a degree surpassing all that had been known previously.

Bearing this in mind, there does not seem to be the least reason why every new manifestation of the Spirit's presence and power should not be spoken of as a new "outpouring" of the Spirit. St. Luke, as we know, tells us that, long after the Day of Pentecost, the Holy Ghost was "poured out" upon the congregation in the house of Cornelius. And why may not the same expression be applied to the disciples at Ephesus, upon whom the Holy Ghost "came" when Paul laid his hands upon them? Or why may we not say that there was a second "outpouring" of the Spirit upon the apostles and brethren, when, in answer to their prayers, "the place was shaken where they were assembled together, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost?"

It is noticeable that in Rev. v. 6. the words, "sent forth into all the earth," are the translation of the present participle in the Greek, and might therefore be translated, "which are being sent forth into all the earth." And this seems to lead us to regard the Holy Spirit, not as sent once for all, but as being continually sent from the Father and the Son; sometimes in larger measure, sometimes less abundantly.

If we compare the Holy Spirit to rain sent upon the parched ground (compare Ps. lxviii. 9: prophetic of Pentecostal blessing), may we not rightly compare his present influences to the rain falling time after time, now in one place, and now in another? Or, if we compare Him to the stream flowing from the smitten rock (1 Cor. x. 4; xii. 13), is He not like the stream, in continuing to flow from our rock day after day? Perhaps the illustration which comes nearest in resemblance to the reality is that of light and heat coming from the sun. For, in this case, as men of science tell us, there is no transference of any substance from one place to another, but only the vibration of an impalpable ether which is omnipresent, so far as our knowledge goes. Yet no man of science objects to speak of the sun as pouring down its light and heat upon the earth.

May the "Sun of Righteousness" pour his rays ever more and more into our inmost hearts; and may we know what is the outpouring of the Spirit, not merely by theory, but by blessed experience.

H. NOEL.

PURITY OF LIFE.

DEAR SIR,—I was much interested in reading the recent letter on "Purity of Life, by "M. B. G." It is a subject that many parents sadly neglect. Very often through ignorance and thoughtlessness much mischief happens which, if children were better informed and guarded, would never come to pass.

My own father was a man of few words upon these subjects, but he took good care to give practical lessons that, as long as life lasts, will not be forgotten.

Mine has been a country life, and when ten years of age—now nearly forty years ago—my father took me to London with him. After he had taken me to the top of the Monument and of St. Paul's we got into a cab. When going in the direction of Lincoln's Inn Fields, he remarked, "My boy, I am now going to take you to a strange place, but don't be afraid, nothing will hurt you." We were soon inside the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons where, as we walked round, my father pointed out many objects of sad and fearful interest in waxwork, or else preserved in spirits in glass jars. I was thankful to get from such a place, and on our way back all the remark he made was, "My boy, never let the thought of what you have now seen go entirely from your mind, but, as you grow towards manhood, ponder it over and let God and reason direct you aright."

I have been in many parts of the world since then, and have mixed with very various company, but never since that day have the sights of that museum faded from my memory. By God's help, and the lessons then learnt, I have been preserved and kept from falling, and I have felt it my duty to my only son to warn and instruct him of the dangers he has to face. God help every such true-hearted writer as "M. B. G.," and give them grace to do their utmost in these matters of such deep importance to the young. H. J.

THE GROCERS' LICENCE.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to mention one reason why many Christian householders, who would really much prefer dealing at shops in their own neighbourhood, continue to get their supply of groceries from the stores?

Ever since the introduction of grocers' licences to sell wines and spirits, the character of that once respectable centre, "the grocer's shop," has greatly changed. It is no longer a place to which we care to send our young servants: we do not like to have the man calling every day for "orders," with his cart at the door filled with bottles: we do not wish to have Christmas-boxes and other bribes sent into our kitchens in the form of bottles of wine and spirits. To avoid all this contamination, many of us obtain our groceries from the stores. I am, of course, aware that stores as well as shops sell intoxicating liquors; but in the former there is a distinct department for this purpose; neither we nor our servants need have any personal contact with it. The indictment against grocers' licences as having mainly contributed to the spread of female intemperance, and, consequently, to our miserably-neglected homes, is heavy enough; but we must add to this the moral and physical deterioration of grocers, and the withdrawal of numbers of their most respectable customers.

Any grocer who will not take out a licence for the sale of intoxicating drink has to contend with the underselling of men in his trade who, from their large profits on these articles, can afford to ask a lower price for other things. It is therefore of great importance that whenever a man has the courage to renounce these profits, and is also an honest tradesman, supplying articles of good quality, Christians and abstainers in his neighbourhood should unite to give him their custom, even at the cost of paying a fraction more for some of their groceries than would be charged at stores or other shops.—Yours truly, MARY BAYLY.

NORTH EVANGELISTIC CHOIR.—This choir held its tenth annual meeting on Saturday, 9th inst., at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, Mr. J. E. Mathieson presiding. The report stated that thirty services had been conducted by the Choir during the winter session, commencing in October last. All have been purely evangelistic in their character. Mr. Mathieson gave a short address to the choir. Mr. Godfrey continues as leader, and Mr. Howe, 5, Baronsmere-road, Finchley, N., is hon. secretary. The Choir now numbers about 130 voices, but fresh members will be welcomed, especially tenors and basses, on applying to either Mr. Howe, as above, or to Mr. Godfrey, Clooneaven, Chingford, E.

TEMPERANCE ITEMS.

SUNDAY closing in Ireland, it is asserted, has led in five years to a decrease in expenditure on intoxicants of five and a half millions.

PROFESSOR FOSTER says that two-thirds of the drinking and drunkenness in the United States are traceable to the prevalent custom of treating.

THE hotels in a district of New Zealand have been closed by the action of the people. There has not been one case of drunkenness before the court since the licences were taken away.

IN the Great Western Railway Temperance Union there are now 709 abstaining and 205 non-abstaining members. The Coffee Tavern in Westbourne Park-road has proved a great success.

A NEW INEBRIATES' HOME for gentlemen will shortly be opened in the neighbourhood of Richmond, Surrey, under the sole management of a medical man who is well known as a Temperance advocate.

IN The Nineteenth Century for May, Archdeacon Farrar writes a trenchant rejoinder to Lord Bramwell's pamphlet on "Drink"; he had little difficulty in demolishing the specious arguments of the law lord.

IN the Congregational body the abstaining ministers are said to outnumber the non-abstainers by 200. In the thirteen colleges out of 353 students 303 are abstainers, and out of 94 ministers newly appointed 85 are declared total abstainers.

"AN Amateur Emigrant," who has been describing some experiences in The Pall Mall Gazette, states that on the ship in which he sailed the supply of liquor is sternly restricted. He also speaks in high approval of the arrangements for conserving morals among the emigrants.

THE drink bill of one School Board candidate at New Cumnock, N B., is said to have amounted to £50! It is said that the local justices, instead of condemning the disgraceful treating and drunkenness, actually encouraged them by granting four special licenses for the night of the election.

CIVILISATION has brought many little comforts and conveniences to the Lapps of Norway. They are naturally a most peaceful people, and enjoyed the almost unique reputation of never employing or even possessing weapons of war; but in the present day it is a painful fact that, maddened by drink, they sometimes quarrel and struggle among themselves.

SOBRIETY AMONGST SEAMEN.—The Temperance movement seems to be progressing by rapid strides in the Mercantile Marine and amongst fishermen. The Missions to Seamen Society enrolled last year 9,667 total abstaining members of its branch of the Church of England Temperance Society, making 42,387 seamen, fishermen, and bargemen so pledged by its chaplains and readers during the last six years.

A CAPITAL idea has been adopted by the Surrey Licensing Justices. They have decreed that the outer door and window of the bar and public room shall be glazed with clear glass within four feet of the level of the path or footway outside, immediately adjoining the licensed premises, and that the view from the street be kept clear and unobstructed. This arrangement, properly carried out, must tend to diminish the practice of drinking on the sly.

THE beer-drinkers' demonstration in Trafalgar-square last week was probably the worst affair of the kind ever held. One of the processions from the East-end to the square was composed of a band, four men with a banner, and fifty "stewards," each with a smaller flag, marching one deep without any followers. It is, nevertheless, asserted that the meagre show—which was suggested originally by Mr. Cavendish-Bentinck, M.P., and paid for by brewers and publican—cost nearly a thousand pounds. The publicans misunderstand their customers. Men drink whisky and beer, but they have no real enthusiasm in the cause. They do not care to assemble "in their thousands" to agitate for more alcohol.—Echo.

OCCASIONAL LETTERS FROM SPAIN.—The current letter gives a deeply interesting account of the evangelical mission established at Zaragoza, five years ago, by the American Board of Missions. The narration of the persecution of the Christian teacher and his band of scholars, reads more like a story of the worst days of Popish ascendency than of to-day. Truth and fidelity, however, won the day, and the Jesuits were put to open shame. Rev. W. H. Gulick, the writer, whose residence is Avenida de la Libertad, San Sebastian, Spain, greatly hopes that the good work may not decline through lack of funds.

DR. JOHNSON'S FAITH HEALING.

SIR,—Having recently seen and heard of the many wonderful results of healing in connection with the "House of Rest" at Winchester, I think it may be of interest to those who are meditating on these things, to become acquainted with the following incident in the life of Dr. Samuel Johnson, who was certainly no visionary or fanatic.

The extract is from a work termed "Johnsoniana; or, Supplement to Boswell," (Murray, London, 1836), and is a quotation from Sir John Hawkins, Johnson's literary executor, who wrote his life in two volumes, published in 1787. The edition of "Johnsoniana," from which I make the extract, is now very scarce; the more recent editions appear to have omitted the incident, although they contain, in several of his letters, reference to his recovery. The event recorded took place on the 20th or 21st February, 1784, after which he again went into society, and visited Oxford; he died on December 13 of the year following, at the ripe age of seventy-five years. Yours, &c.,

London. BENJAMIN SCOTT.

EXTRACT.

Sir John Hawkins writes: "A few days after the remnant of the Ivy-lane Club had dined with him [February, 1784], Dr. Johnson sent for me, and informed me that he had discovered in himself the symptoms of dropsy; and, indeed, his very much increased bulk, and the swollen appearance of his lips, seemed to indicate no less. It was on a Thursday that I had this conversation with him [Feb. 19, 1784]; and here let not the supercilious lip of scorn protrude itself while I relate that he declared his intention to devote the whole of the next day to fasting, humiliation, and prayer, and such other devotional exercises as became a man in his situation.

"On the Saturday following I made him a visit, and upon entering the room observed in his countenance such serenity as indicated that some remarkable crisis of his disorder had produced a change in his feelings. He told me that, pursuant to his resolution, he had spent the preceding day in an abstraction from all worldly concerns; that, to prevent interruption, he had in the morning ordered Frank (his servant) not to admit any one to him; and the better to enforce the charge, had added these awful words, 'For your master is preparing himself to die.' He then mentioned to me that, in the course of this exercise, he found himself relieved of that disorder which had been growing on him, and was becoming very oppressive—the dropsy, by a gradual evacuation of water, to the amount of twenty pints,* a like instance whereof he had never before experienced; and he asked me what I thought of it?

"I was well aware of the lengths that superstition and enthusiasm will lead men, and how ready some are to attribute favourable events to supernatural causes; and I said that it might savour of presumption to say that, in this instance, God had wrought a miracle; yet, as divines recognise certain dispensations of Providence, recorded in the Scriptures by the denomination of 'returns to prayer,' and his omnipotence is now the same as ever, I thought it would be little less than criminal to ascribe his late relief to causes merely natural, and that the safer opinion was that he had not in vain humbled himself before his Maker. He seemed to acquiesce in all that I said on this important subject; and several times while I was discoursing with him, cried, 'It is wonderful, very wonderful!'"

The above may be verified at the Reading-room of the British Museum, by reference to "Johnsoniana," Press mark, 633, i. 23. London: 1836, 8vo. edition.

* In a letter of Johnson's he says that he was relieved of twenty-two pints.

SLAVERY.—A German paper states that the French Government is seeking to put down slavery in its colonies, more especially by forbidding the purchase of new slaves.

THE PRESS AND WAR.

BY MR. FRANCIS PEEK,

At the Annual Meeting of the Tract Society.

IF it had been absolutely necessary that we should be going to war on this Afghanistan question, still the way in which the subject has been treated by a large portion of the Press, and some even of the religious Press, has been perfectly fiendish. Ladies and gentlemen, they have imported a horrible French word which has no English synonym. It means neither honour, nor duty, nor character. It is a word for which I cannot find any meaning, except a concrete opposition to all the teaching of Christ. It is that word "prestige." Why, it would hurl us on to blood and fire and ruin. What do they mean when they talk so lightly of going to war for "prestige"? What is war? It means that hundreds of thousands of our fellow-men shall rush to stab and hack and hew hundreds of thousands of others whom they never saw and who never harmed them. Peaceful valleys are left desolate. Homes and hamlets once full of happiness are nothing but a mass of ruins steeped with blood. And then consider the devilish spirit that war provokes. We know how, when we make a quarrel, every evil spirit is evoked. And then look at the misery which war causes, and which falls for the most part on poor women and children who can bear it least.

Ladies and gentlemen, I say that, except in the last extremity, war is one of the most devilish things by which the earth is afflicted. I am no "peace-at-any-price" man, but I should weep at the thought of war; and yet we see it spoken of jauntily, as if it were a mere holiday, instead of the most fiendish work in existence. Why, I say, the greater part of the Press has for the last two months been given over to devil-worship. What we want are periodicals, and papers, and a literature that will put the right spirit into our people and will teach them what is noble, and what is just, and what is right, and which will not preach about prestige, but will preach about honour—that will not preach war, but will teach that wisdom from above, which is peaceable.

PENTECOSTAL DAYS AT AJUDHIYA.

THE Rev. B. H. Badley reports in The Indian Witness a remarkable manifestation of the Holy Ghost at this heathen festival. "It is safe to say that at no mêla, in North India at least, has there been such a manifestation of the saving power of Christ. The hearts of the people were touched by the preaching and the testimony of converts. Scores were at once baptized—men, women, and children, family after family. The preachers taught the converts several Hindi hymns, and these were sung with much spirit, while scores were joyously shouting, 'Victory to the Lord Jesus Christ!' The police looked on in amazement. After preaching in the mêla the brethren invited those who desired to become Christians to come to the tent, and numbers followed at once, and, after being instructed and confessing Christ, were baptized. The first day 96 were baptised; the second (the great day of the mêla), 102, and the third day, 50, in all, 248. The names of all were carefully written. About a score live in Ajudhiya, and will form the nucleus of a Methodist Church there. Others live in the surrounding villages, but the most live in the North-West provinces beyond the Ganges. All were directed to make their way at once to the nearest missionary or Christian village and enroll themselves as Christians. Of this large number of converts the majority were Brahmins; at least one-third were women; one-third were children.

LAMBETH WORKHOUSE.—DEAR SIR,—I am about to commence a series of Sacred-song Services on Sunday evenings at the Lambeth New Workhouse, Renfrew-road, Lower Kennington-lane, S.E., for the inmates, who number about 1200. I am anxious to secure the co-operation of Christian friends who possess the gift of song and are willing to use it in the Master's cause. I shall be greatly indebted to any who will come and help us. The service is to last one hour, from 6.15 to 7.15.

FREDERICK FIELDER, Master.

AN ANTI-TOBACCO CONFERENCE.

A CONFERENCE on the influence of tobacco as it may affect mission work was recently held at the Manchester Young Men's Christian Association. A large company of city missionaries and a number of ladies were present to tea. Mr. Alfred Butterworth, J.P., of Oldham, who presided, said that until recently he was a moderate smoker. He had, however, felt very strongly the moral and physical evil to youths of the habit. He saw with deep regret in his Christian and Temperance efforts that boys broke the pledge, and formed associations through the habit of smoking, which led them quite away from sobriety and godliness. But he abstained from tobacco for a yet more cogent reason than a general pity for the forlorn and misguided boys of other families. His own son, with touching candour, asked him, "Father, may I smoke? My college companions do, and you do. May I?" His answer, as that of every man who cared for the future of his son, was decisive. What could he say but "Do not do it"? But this he could not say without at once and for ever giving it up himself. His brief experience was that he could do more good as a non-smoker. He felt sure that every missionary would look at the matter in that light. He was appalled at the waste the habit involved. Sixteen millions sterling were yearly spent in smoke.

The agent of the Anti-Tobacco League then read an essay on the subject. After demonstrating from scientific evidence the properties of tobacco, he said there were abundant proofs that smoking was a demoralising habit. Money and time are wasted, feelings are blunted, a slavery is voluntarily submitted to, which only those now free can estimate by looking back to the thraldom and degradation it involves.

After the reading of the paper, the Chairman invited remark, especially on the part of those who differed from the views of the Anti-Narcotic League. Several offered a defence of the habit of smoking. Some found that weariness, nervousness, flatulency, and asthma were ameliorated thereby. Others considered that the comfort to aged people, and in some cases the sociability of the habit among men, justified its use. To the waste involved, it ought to be remembered that fully 75 per cent. of the cost of tobacco is net profit to the revenue or to the trade. But the preponderance of opinion expressed was evidently against the habit. Some even declared that their liberation from the habit of smoking was a greater self-conquest than any others they had achieved. All united in strong feeling as to boys indulging in the habit.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For a successful mission in Taunton, by Miss North, evangelist.

PRAYER.—For blessing on a month's Gospel Temperance and Evangelical Mission held by Rev. A. G. Marment, in Ulster Province.——On behalf of Mr. W. H. P. Wills, of Little Bukington, near Barnstaple, who has for some time been laid aside through affliction.——For tent services conducted by Mr. S. Bryant, in Lincoln, from May 19 to June 3.——For blessing on a mission at Chelmsford, by James Neech, from May 16 to May 29.

CURE FOR DIARRHŒA AND EARLY CHOLERA.

THE terrible ravages committed by these ailments among the dark races render it advisable that all missionaries and such workers should have a remedy at hand for immediate employment. The undermentioned has been an old family recipe, and has been so remarkably effectual, that it is a duty to make it public. In no case (and it has been tried to my knowledge in every affliction of the kind I have come across during the last twenty-five years) has it failed to give relief within twenty minutes.

E. M.

RECIPE.

One pennyworth of red lavender; one pennyworth of laudanum; one pennyworth of essence of peppermint. Keep tightly corked, to prevent evaporation. A sufficient quantity for some 30 doses. Not to be taken by children.

Directions—From 10 to 25 drops, according to the strength and sex of the patient. A lad of sixteen should take 10 drops upon a lump of sugar, or in a small quantity of rather warm water, and adults can take from 15 to 25 drops, according to their condition. Any chemist will supply it, and will also advise the necessary quantity.

Notices of Books, &c.

Ivy Chimneys. By Edith Cornforth. 2s. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union. In this book we have a pleasant vein of sound common sense running through a well-written and interesting narrative.

Through the Gorse. By Lady Hope. Hatchards. In this "village story" many valuable lessons are pleasantly and profitably taught through the medium of the narrative, which itself is full of real and sometimes tragic interest.

Gordon Anecdotes. By Dr. Macaulay. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. Any book which throws further light upon the career of England's noble hero will be welcomed by his countrymen, though, perhaps, none could augment the deep respect in which his memory is already held. This volume contains many incidents new to the public, and it will certainly be read with the keenest interest.

Below the Surface. 1s. Simpkin & Marshall Mr. Alfred Alsop, of the Boys' Home, Manchester, presents to us here a series of stirring but pathetic facts of "slum life" in that city. We trust that many of our readers will buy this well-written book, and thus serve the double purpose of acquainting themselves with the condition of thousands of their fellow-men, and of augmenting the resources of a highly useful institution.

The Religious Tract Society have issued a little book of Home Prayers for Workmen and Cottagers (3d.), providing morning and evening petitions for a fortnight. The prayers are as simple in phrase, as sound, spiritual, and comprehensive in thought, as could be looked for in a collection of the kind. We should prefer, however, to see our cottagers framing their prayers as the teachings of the Spirit and the needs of the hour might prompt.

Italy Re-visited. By E. S. G. S. W. B. Whittingham & Co. In these picturesque chapters the reader has many vivid and pleasant glimpses at the fair and sunny South; the people, and their ways; those who are doing Christian work among them, and various personal experiences of the author. An appendix gives much interesting information about the great Italian patriot Garibaldi, and the book altogether will serve to brighten many a leisure hour.

History of the Christian Church. By Rev. T. B. Sikes. 2s. 6d. Elliot Stock. This work describes concise language the leading events in the history of the Christian Church during the first sixteen centuries of its existence. Without endorsing all the opinions expressed by the writer, we commend the book as a valuable addition in accessible form to the current literature on the subject. Theological students will find the syllabus of each chapter conveniently arranged for private study.

What Saith the Scriptures? By J. Anderson, M.D. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Dr. J. Anderson is a well-known writer on Bible topics, and always has something to say worth reading as helpful both to the intellect and the heart. The design of this book is to supply the Bible student with a guide to the consecutive study of the Word of God as a whole. The volume admirably answers that end, taking the reader by way of exposition and analysis as far as the first Book of Chronicles. There is a happy combination of spiritual suggestion with critical comment. The parallel references and foot-notes appended to the pages are exceedingly helpful; the latter give clear and concise summaries of important arguments in support of Biblical truth.

Mr. Charles Cook, of Hyde-park Hall, has published a little book containing some incidents he has met with in his prison visitations at home and abroad. Some interesting cases of rescue and reclamation are cited.

The Dean of Canterbury will write a paper on the Revised Bible to appear in the forthcoming issue of The Quiver. The Dean was a member of the Old Testament Revision Company.

Mr. J. Kempster, 3, Bolt-court, E.C., publishes a full report of the trial of the Poole perjury case before Baron Huddleston, which has excited so much interest, and which, as many believe, condemned an innocent man to penal servitude for seven years (1d.)

In a notice last week of Mr. H. Varley's "Spiritual Light and Life" (Whittingham & Co.) the heading of one of the chapters was quoted by mistake as "The Reputed Incarnation" instead of "The Repeated Incarnation." The chapter is an exposition of Paul's words, "My little children, of whom I am again in travail until Christ be formed in you."

HYDERABAD, INDIA.—Rev. J. Lyon writes from this place:—This mission is a branch of Bishop Taylor's self-supporting Missions. We have built a place of worship and are steadfastly carrying on the native work. On the building for purposes of worship we have a debt of about £200. Lord Radstock kindly gave us a donation towards this. I feel sure if the Lord's stewards at home knew of our circumstances they would gladly help.

Y.M.C.A. WORK.

FULHAM.

A DEPUTATION from the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society visited the Fulham Branch of the Y.M.C.A. on Monday evening, May 11. Dr. R. Anderson, presided, and made suggestive remarks as to the responsibility of Christian young men in regard to missionary work. Mr. A. V. Liley, recently returned from the Congo, gave a very interesting account of the work. It was cheering to learn that many of the natives are yearning for the Gospel, and are begging for white men to come and teach them. Mr. Hall, Hon. Sec. of the Society, gave an account of its operations.

BIRMINGHAM.

The Y.M.C.A. here have published their annual report. The Committee rejoice in the growth of the Association, the favour it receives among the young men of the town, and its increasing popularity among employers. One large firm has been so impressed with its value as to pay the subscriptions for a number of their apprentices to join it. Its position as an auxiliary to the churches has been clearly seen in the fact that many of the members have been drafted off as Sunday-school teachers, and others have left for training in the ministerial or missionary fields. The total increase of members for the year has been 276. The religious agencies, including Bible-class, lodging-house visitation, police mission, and weekly prayer-meeting, are all in a satisfactory condition, and are being much owned of God. The intellectual, educational, social, and physical pursuits are all well arranged and regulated. The society is needing £100 per annum beyond its present income.

WOOLWICH.

The usual May breakfast of this Association was lately held in the Masonic Hall, William-street, Woolwich. Mr. George Whale, the President, presided, and over 200 ladies and gentlemen were present. Dr. McKilliam and Captain Sherrard, R.E., gave addresses on "Christian Service and its Hindrances," which must have been exceedingly helpful to all young Christians present. A member of the Association, Mr. Robert John Kennedy, who has just entered the C.M.S. Training College at Islington, described how he had been led to devote himself to missionary work, and made an earnest appeal to young men to live for God. Short Gospel appeals were made by other members, to which we are glad to say there seems to have been a response, some three or four cases of conversion having come to light subsequently.

Mr. Kennedy is, we understand, the fourth or fifth member of this branch who has given himself for work in the mission-field abroad. Favourable accounts have recently been received from Mr. Edward Hughesdon, who was a member of this branch; he left England about fifteen months ago under the auspices of the China Inland Mission, and is now some 1000 miles in the interior.

THE RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES OF PARIS, such as the Foreign Missionary, Evangelisation, Primary Instruction, Bible, Tract, Sunday-school, &c., held their annual meetings in April. It is generally considered that they were much more successful than those of previous years.

THE HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN, at Goldsmith's-place, Kilburn, will now accommodate thirty-six children; at present there are thirty-four inmates. In the fifteenth annual report friends are asked kindly to keep in mind the sale, which is to take place by and by, and for which useful articles are solicited. Letters, &c., should be addressed to Miss Emma F. Newbery, 127, Portsdown-road, Maida-vale, W.

FLOWERS FOR LONDON WORKROOMS.—It will interest those who have kindly responded to our appeal, to know that the flowers have won us an entrance into workrooms to which we could not otherwise have had access. We have had many tokens that they are greatly appreciated. We are much in need of ladies to help in distributing the flowers. We are anxious that some lady should interest herself in each house of business, and continue to visit it if possible after the time for flowers is past. It has been suggested that fruit would be a very acceptable accompaniment of the flowers; we hope we shall not be asking too much if we suggest that our friends would kindly remember this when the fruit season begins.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Miss Dalton and Miss E. Earle have held evangelistic services at Wanborough and its vicinity, which have been owned and blessed of God to the salvation of souls. Many were the expressions of thankfulness and praise for blessing received.

Birmingham.—Gospel missions extending over five weeks have been held in the Evangelical Hall, Palmer-street, the preachers being Mr. F. Holmes and Mr. J. Goodall. The resident evangelist is Mr. J. Stead, 221, St. Andrew's-road, Bordesley, Birmingham.

Brecon.—Three preliminary meetings held here by Mr. Spiers, in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission, augur well for a good mission. Every house has been visited. The Blue Ribbon Choir have promised their services at the gatherings.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been conducting a successful mission in South Shields. The afternoon Bible lectures have been well attended, and Christians have been greatly refreshed and stirred up, while the evening services have been blessed to numbers of backsliders and unsaved ones.

Southgate, N.—It appears that one or two inaccuracies have crept into our note of the mission work here, now under the superintendence of Mr. C. Wickerson. The mission is in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle County Mission—not Evangelistic Mission. The friend who kindly provided the land is Mr. Hayward, 319, Kennington-road, who is treasurer of the County Mission.

Alloa, N.B.—Mr. John Mitchell, evangelist, has closed a series of meetings for children, held under the auspices of the Alloa Boys and Girls' Religious Society. About 400 to 600 children attended nightly. The work was deeply interesting in the second meeting, and there is good reason to believe that very many of the boys and girls have got a blessing. The attendance at the children's church has been greatly increased by this series of meetings.

The Glasgow Seamen's Evangelistic Mission held an opening soirée in their new hall at 59, Morrison-street, off Paisley-road, on Saturday, 9th inst. Mr. Graham, chaplain, read the annual report, giving a graphic description of the work that had been done on the north side of the river during the past year, including outdoor meetings, distribution of tracts and books, penny dinners, &c. Interesting addresses were given on behalf of the work by Mr. R. Stewart, Rev. J. Johnston, Rev. W. Millar, and others.

Damerham, Wilts.—The first mission ever held in this parish, conducted by Rev. Walter Bradbury, of Weston-super-Mare, has been concluded after nine days of great interest, extending to the villages of Martin and Doveridge. The Nonconforming brethren worshipping in the three chapels assisted with much love and good will, lending their harmonium for the crowded open-air services. The ladies from Doveridge Hall conducted the singing out of doors with telling effect. Mr. Bradbury is disengaged for June.

Clapham-road Conference Hall.—Evangelistic services are being held here every night during the month, and the Lord is giving much blessing. Every meeting is marked by conversions, some of them remarkable cases. The Gospel address is always followed by an after-meeting, in which the work is individual. The work of personal dealing with souls goes on night by night, sometimes to a late hour. This salvation work is the chief object for which this hall is opened. It is carried on under the superintendence of Mr. Oscar Owers, of the Evangelisation Society, and the missioner for this month is Mr. Herbert Francis.

Openshaw, Manchester.—In connection with the Messrs. Crossley Brothers' Engine Works at Openshaw, Manchester, a mission is now being carried on which has been attended with quite peculiar success. The average attendance every Sunday evening is about 700 persons, a great majority of whom were before they joined the mission unconnected with any place of worship. The success of the mission was, in the first instance at any rate, mainly due to two series of Gospel Temperance meetings, conducted by Mr. Richard Coad, who succeeded in obtaining about one thousand three hundred total abstinence pledges. The work during the last six months has been carried on by Mr. R. G. Macknight, a well-known and successful Gospel Temperance missioner.

FRIENDS OF TEMPERANCE in the United States are asking why the Coffee-house movement, which has been such a success in some parts of this country, should not be started there.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

The Bâsle Society of Foreign Missions is adding nine young missionaries to its staff of workers; four go to the Gold Coast, four to India, and one to China.

Jews in New York.—God is blessing missionary work among the Jews in New York City, and souls are being led to Jesus, but a permanent place of worship is very much needed.

Spain.—Pastor Segundo Sabio in his third report gives some interesting details of "The Evangelical Church of Free Salvation," which he founded in Saragossa, January, 1882. This young church now numbers about eighty members.

Boston, U.S.—Anniversaries are practically given up, and the Congregationalists propose June instead of May meetings, and Saratoga instead of Boston. For sixty years or more these Convocations have been a prominent feature of New England life.

The Methodist Episcopal Church in America has formed a league for study and work, "to neutralise indolence and frivolity." A plan of reading is laid out, and meetings for conference. The plan is an admirable corrective to the aimless, worldly life everywhere seen.

The Journal des Missions Evangéliques, of Paris, gives the continuation of M. Coillard's recital of his journey to Zambesi. God has kept him and led him and his companions through many difficulties. He and his wife and one or two others of the party have been laid low from fever, but were raised up again. M. Coillard has been greatly helped by two devoted handicraftsmen, Middleton and Waddell.

Messina.—The Sailors' Rest and Bethel was opened here on May 2. Assisted by a few English brethren, Mr. S. Burrowes, the Superintendent of the Sailors' Rest Aid Society, was enabled to take a house and have it furnished in three days. The Rest is placed under trustees. The friends at Messina urgently request that an English Christian seaman be sent as soon as possible to have charge of the Rest, and to visit the ships. Captain Thomas Darbey, 68, Shaftesbury-terrace, Stoke-road, Gosport, is Secretary of the Society.

The hymn-book, "Cantiques Populaires," compiled by Rev. R. W. McAll, 32, Rue Pierre-Guérin, Auteuil, Paris, has been issued in a penny edition. It contains 263 hymns, many of them being translations of "Sacred Songs and Solos" Visitors to France and Switzerland may be glad to provide themselves with a supply for distribution in their travels this summer. The books will be sent post free, at the rate of six copies for 8d., twelve for 1s. 4d., and so on. The edition, with music, will be sent post free for 2s.

Persecution in Spain.—Rev. Juan Canellas, of the Reformed Spanish Church, writes of persecution in Salamanca. The Roman Catholic Bishop and his friends have bought the house he rented, and have turned him into the street, so that he is now houseless and homeless. He entreats prayer for himself and the brethren belonging to his church. The congregation increases wonderfully—it has almost doubled within a short time. A letter has been received from Rev. F. Palomares, in which he says that the progress of the work in Seville has of late been most encouraging.

Madagascar.—The London Missionary Society's latest report of the Madagascar Mission announces that many new chapels were built last year. The recent war rather tended to deepen the spiritual life of the people by bringing them to more prayer and to fuller reliance upon God. Even the soldiers away at the seat of war held regular religious services, and the work of Christian teaching was kept up as far as possible by evangelists and preachers stationed in the various camps. Sunday-school work has greatly prospered and extended. The knowledge of Scripture is fast spreading among the children of Antananarivo, whose hearts have evidently been touched by the power of the Saviour's love.

Belgium.—Le Chrétien Belge, in its quarterly number just issued, speaks of many encouragements and some trials. Among the latter are losses caused by strikes and the great commercial depression of the country. All Christians will sympathise in the disappointment of Belgian Christians in not being allowed to sell or distribute Bibles or Christian books at the Antwerp Exhibition. They had been promised a Kiosque, had hired a place in the exhibition, and had secured the services of the agent who so successfully directed the work at Amsterdam. At the last the Commission forbad "any religious propagandism within the precincts of the exhibition." The money has been returned, and the committee at the time of issue was seeking a place outside the exhibition enclosure.

SOLDIERS IN CAPE TOWN.

The building in Cape Town which I was anxious to secure as a permanent Soldiers' Home has been purchased; besides affording the reading, class, and game rooms, and refreshment bar, it provides a comfortable, attractive hall, filled on Sunday evenings with the working people of the neighbourhood, besides soldiers, and on Sunday mornings with children, for whom special services are arranged. Weekly meetings are also held, and the interest of the people is thoroughly aroused. The Mission Hall is the only one in the town where undenominational Gospel work is carried on. We have had many tokens of blessing.

The necessary alterations and repairs incurred expenditure beyond what I had anticipated, but rather than suffer the work to be delayed, the money has been advanced, as a loan, by one or two Christian friends. I shall gratefully receive and use any contributions which may be entrusted to me.—Yours very truly, M. S. Osborn.

N.W. TERRITORY, CANADA.—In a recent brief mention of a proposed log preaching-room to be erected at Qu'Appelle by two sons of Mr. F. Newth, of Barnet, we gave a somewhat incorrect address to which any friends might send help towards the project. Mr. Newth's town address is 43, Percival-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

THE SEA SHELL MISSION AND CHILDREN'S SCRAP-BOOK MISSION is, we believe, doing a useful and interesting work, in soothing the weary hours passed by sick children in homes and hospitals. Any who desire to help may ascertain particulars on application to the Secretary, Sea Shell Mission, 26, Tunstall-road, Brixton-road, S.W.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—After a year of unexampled progress, the anniversary meetings of this Mission, at the Mildmay Conference Hall, on Wednesday next, 27th inst., will be of unusual interest. It is hoped that the Earl of Shaftesbury will be able to preside at the afternoon meeting. Lord Radstock is expected back from India in time to be present; among the other speakers, afternoon and evening, are Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.

PASTOR SEGUIN is doing a good work among French people in Chicago. In March he baptized forty French Romanists, who renounced their Pope to follow Christ. The work is wonderfully blessed. His flock are in need of a place of worship. Ministers of all denominations and journalists of all shades of political opinion speak highly of this effort among French Canadians. Pastor Seguin's address is, 170, South Green-street, Chicago, Ill., U.S.A.

AMANDA SMITH thankfully acknowledges receipt of the box forwarded by Mrs. Davis, Foxrock, co. Dublin, who will gladly forward a copy of the letter to any friend who may wish to see it. Mrs. A. Smith says Bishop Taylor's labours are being much blessed. She was herself in good health, having had the advantage of a stay of six weeks in the Canary Islands.

CONVALESCENT COTTAGE, EPPING.—During the past year close on two hundred patients were received. A second home has been secured at Folkestone, and will be entered at Christmas next. About half the patients have paid the full admission fees, and the remaining half have been assisted with part payment, or the whole. Several regular subscribers have died, and fresh helpers are earnestly appealed for. The secretary is Mary J. Catlin, 11, Brooke-road, Stoke Newington, N.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—On Saturday morning last at six o'clock, 150 of the missionaries, with the secretaries, met for prayer at the Mission-house. It was on the 16th of May, fifty years ago, that David Nasmith, at six o'clock in the morning, held a meeting for prayer with his two friends, Richard Edward Dear and William Bullock, in his own house at Hoxton, and then and there formed the City Mission. The completion of these fifty years, it was felt, was an era calling for special praise for the past and special prayer for the future, and that prayer-meeting will not soon be forgotten by those who attended it. The public meeting which will close the proceedings of the jubilee year will be held in Exeter Hall on the evening of June 3. Tickets can be obtained at the Mission-house, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, E.C.

Lady John Manners suggests that a collection of books should be added to every coffee-house. This would not cost above a few pounds, and those who wish to fight the public-houses on their own ground could not do better than contribute such collections.

The New York Observer has it on good authority that a league has been formed in that city, with a membership already of over 2000 actors, designed to make an earnest and effective protest against Sunday performances in the theatres.

It is a remarkable coincidence (says the Jewish Chronicle) that the day on which the Revised Version of the Old Testament is published is the eve of the Jewish Feast of Pentecost, which commemorates, according to tradition, the revelation on Mount Sinai—the first "publication" of the Decalogue in any version.

"SLUM WORK."—Much success has attended the well-known Manchester and Salford Street Children's Mission during another year. We gather from the sixteenth annual report that a splendid work is being done by the homes for destitute and neglected lads, the mission school, and other branches of the institution. Slum Work is published at 3d., and is well worth obtaining from Mr. A. Alsop, Boys' Home, Wood-street, Deansgate, Manchester.

SOUTHSEA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.—For months past we have been busily occupied in our Mission-halls, cottage-meetings, visiting from house to house, open-air preaching, &c. Now the time is come for Gospel tent work. We commence this year at Gosport for one month, and then return to Southsea for the remainder of the summer. This year I have added a "Bible-carriage," which will be ready by Whit-Monday, for the sale of Bibles, &c. &c., which will be a very great boon to the work. The Bible-carriage is paid for, but I need about £15 more to fit it up and furnish it, and about £50 for a stock of Bibles, &c., besides the working expenses of the tent, &c. &c.

MAY 21.—ACTS XXIV.

v. 2.—"Tertullus began to accuse him, saying."—The difference between carnal policy and Christian courtesy is well illustrated by contrasting the address of Tertullus to Felix with that of Paul. The former is gross flattery in the form of skilful, not to say cunning, rhetoric. Felix was one of the most corrupt and despotic rulers the Jews had known, as history testifies; the wily orator merely suited his words to serve his purpose. Paul, on the other hand, in accordance with his own precepts (see Rom. xiii. 7; Titus iii. 1, 2), respectfully addresses his judge, and while acknowledging his long experience, and congratulating himself upon it, resorts to no artifice or mere expedient. The Christian, when on his trial for Christ's sake, can never do better than rely upon the truth of his cause, and leave the issue with God.

v. 25.—"As he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come."—In ver. 24 we see that "faith in Christ" was the basis of the Apostle's reasoning. He showed how the great principles upon which he reasoned grew out of and were an essential part of the Gospel of Christ. "Righteousness" here means justice, right conduct in the most practical sense; "temperance" is self-control, and in view of the libertinous connection between Felix and Drusilla, then sitting at his side, no doubt had special reference to chastity of life; "judgment to come" might well strike terror into the heart of a man such as Felix was; it calls upon all to make sure that their faith in Christ is vital, and, therefore, pure and operative. Nothing less will stand the test which must be applied.

MAY 22.—ACTS XXV.

v. 12.—"Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar? unto Cæsar shalt thou go."—As the representative of the Roman world's power, Festus becomes the executor of the wish which Paul had long ago entertained in his heart, the agent and performer of the counsel which the Lord had long ago determined upon in the case of Paul. While by the rulers of Israel the Divine ordinances of Israel are perverted to wicked and mischievous purposes against the kingdom of God: the order of the Roman empire—the real nature of which is hostility against the kingdom of heaven—must, up to its highest authorities and head, serve and promote the ways and purposes of the kingdom of Jesus. Instead, therefore, of gratifying Jewish wickedness, as it did in the case of the Lord and of his Apostle James, the Roman world's power appears here as the servant and promoter of the thoughts and purposes of God.—Baumgarten.

v. 16.—"It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver. . . ."—The grand maxim of the Romans to condemn no man unheard, and to confront the accusers with the accused, should be a sacred maxim with every magistrate and minister, and among all private Christians. How many harsh judgments and uncharitable censures would this prevent! Conscientiously practised in all Christian societies, detraction, tale-bearing, backbiting, misunderstandings with every unbrotherly affection, would be banished from the Church of God.—Dr. Adam Clarke.

MAY 23.—ACTS XXVI.

v. 22.—"Saying none other things than those . . ."—Truth is one and the same in all ages; it is also ancient, and ever at agreement with itself. As, on the other side, error is new, manifold, dissonant, and contradictory to itself, and much more to the truth. Those that stumble from the ancient ways, to walk in "new paths, in a way not cast up," are people that "forget God" (Jer. xviii. 15), to sacrifice to new gods, that came newly up (Deut. xxxii. 17); they are none of God's ancient people (Isa. xliv. 7), but an upstart generation that knew not Joseph.

v. 23.—"That Christ should suffer," &c., may be fitly called a little Bible, a short Gospel, a model of the mystery of godliness.—Trapp. Acts xvii. 3, 18, contain the essence of the Gospel, the latter verse in the fewest possible words—"Jesus and the resurrection."

v. 29.—"I would to God, that not only thou . . ."—Critics vary as to the precise meaning of Agrippa's words in the previous verse; Paul, however, turns them to account as indicative of a partial conversion to the truth, and exhibits the nobleness of the Christian faith in his unselfish yearning over his foes that they might know as he does the joy of a full salvation. Lewin justly describes the words of this verse as "a masterstroke of true eloquence that the finest orators of Greece and Rome have never excelled."

v. 10.—"I perceive that this voyage will be with much hurt."—Had the voyage been smooth and prosperous there would have been no occasion for such striking interferences of God; and had it not been for the shipwreck, probably the inhabitants of Malta would not so soon have heard of the Gospel. God serves his will by every occurrence, and presses everything into the service of his own cause. We may leave the government of the world and that of the Church most confidently to God; hitherto He has done all things well; and his wisdom, power, goodness, and truth, are still the same.—Dr. A. Clarke.

v. 44.—"They escaped all safe to land."—Life is a voyage, a perilous voyage, which that of Paul affectingly illustrates. The delays, the slow progress, the necessity of seeking safe harbours, the storms, the quicksands, the darkness, the uncertain way, the leaky ship, the striking on the shore, the beating of the waves, the failure of the anchors, the breaking up of the vessel, the plunge into the deep, the clinging to boards and broken pieces—what apt emblems of human life! From all these dangers there is a safe refuge, a shore which may be reached, a firm anchorage, a land where, secure from danger, we shall be welcomed, and may dwell for ever. Our earthly possessions will, indeed, perish in the final wreck of all things; but let the ship perish, let all that we have sink in the deep, if we may come "safe to land." From these storms and billows, these dangerous seas, these tempestuous voyages, may we all be brought, at last, safe to heaven.—Barnes.

v. 14.—"Where we found brethren." v. 15.—"When the brethren heard of us they came. . . ."—Here was true Christian brotherhood, a recognition of the essential oneness of those who are the servants of Christ. Ignoring sect or party, Paul everywhere rejoiced in the fellowship of saints as such, finding even in strange scenes, and among strange faces, those who simply as brethren in Christ refreshed his heart. No earthly circumstance can be more cheering or delightful than to be surrounded with the atmosphere and spirit of true brotherly love. Well might the Apostle say, "Let brotherly love continue."

v. 30.—"And Paul dwelt two whole years."—Paul's stay at Rome forms the crowning point of the Gospel preaching, and the end of Acts. Luke might otherwise have easily extended the narrative till the Apostle's death. He commenced at Jerusalem; he ends at Rome. What a triumph of the Word of God, that in the very seat of the empire of the world Paul could preach unhindered the kingdom of Christ!

O Church, thou hast thy form. It is thy duty to preserve it, and to maintain thy trust. In the Old Testament, the Book of Isaiah, the volume of the twelve Prophets, Ecclesiastes, and Lamentations, end with menaces and severity; the Jews, in consequence, usually repeat the more cheerful verses immediately preceding, without the vowel points. The books of the New Testament all end in joy.—Bengel.

MAY 26.—ROMANS I.

It is worthy of note that the Apostle does not, as in his previous epistles, write to the "Church" of, or at, Rome, but to "all that be at Rome beloved of God, called . . . saints." Having in this case changed his mode of address he keeps to it, as all his epistles to churches written after this are addressed to "saints." Why this change? Was it that as the churches increased in numbers the Church of God became less and less recognisable in its corporate form, and hence the change from the collective to the individual mode of address? or was it that the Spirit of God foresaw what fearful abuses would in time cluster round this word "Church," especially at Rome—the future professed headquarters of Christendom,—and so forbore to recognise any but individual saints at this or at any other place?

vv. 1-3.—Omitting the second verse which is parenthetic, we get this definition of the subject of "God's Gospel" . . . "concerning his Son, Jesus Christ." How much so-called Gospel preaching would, if tested by this definition, turn out to be no "Gospel of God!"

v. 5.—"Obedience to the faith" is rendered more literally in R. V. "Obedience of faith." The law requires obedience of works, the Gospel obedience of faith. Paul argues (x. 16) that "all have not obeyed the Gospel," for Isaiah saith "Lord, who hath believed our report?" Hence the Gospel is called (iii. 27) "the law of faith."

v. 17.—The R. V. changes "the righteousness" to "a righteousness of God," there being no definite article in the Greek. This, however, might as well be expressed by "God's righteousness," pointing to the long-promised and now-revealed righteousness of God; see Isaiah xlvi. 13: "I bring near my righteousness; it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry." See also Isaiah li. 5, 6, 8.

"The just shall live by faith."—The exact order of these words both in the Hebrew and in the Greek is "the just by faith shall live," and many think, and probably correctly, that the Apostle meant to prove by the quotation not that the just shall live by faith, but that the just by faith shall live. At all events it is better to keep to the order of the original and so keep open what is fairly an open question.

v. 8.—"To them that are contentious."—All scholars are now agreed that this word "contentious" comes from a root which does not mean "strife," but "party spirit," or "faction." Hence R.V. renders it "to them that are factious." The Jews exhibited this "factious" opposition to "obeying the truth," when they said, "Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on Him?" (John vii. 48); and a similar factious opposition on their part may be traced all through the Acts of the Apostles. But we see the same spirit both in heathenism and Mahomedanism, and even in professing Christianity whenever attachment to religious views of the party to which we belong prevents souls from "obeying the truth."

v. 13.—"Not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified."—This latter clause throws light upon the whole context in which it stands, and shows that the Apostle is speaking not of actual facts but of abstract principles. No such perfect obedience can be found either among Jew or Gentile as would justify the soul "in that day when God shall judge the secrets of men," but his object is to show that nothing less than this would suffice, for the Jews seemed to think that knowing the law would do.

v. 14.—"For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves."—This verse is not intended to show that the Gentiles keep the law, for the utmost it asserts is that they do things contained in the law, but that they know something of the law by the light of nature, and hence are under the same danger as the Jews to mistake knowing for keeping. Phillipi well explains the line of thought. "It is not having heard the law, as the Jews think, but having observed it, which will justify: for if the hearing of it were enough, the Gentiles also could claim this advantage. since positive features in their moral life testify to the existence of a law engraven on their hearts."

v. 26.—"If the uncircumcision keep the righteousness [or the requirements] of the law."—The case is hypothetic, and never has been realised to the full extent that the language requires, except in the case of a Christian. It is therefore probable that the Apostle had such in his mind. So thinks Godet.

INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY.—A highly interesting meeting, numerously attended, was held on May 13, at St. Stephen's Schoolrooms, Canonbury, the occasion being the opening of an educational class for the blind of the North of London, by the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, Red Lion-square. Between 800 and 900 are under regular visitation by the Society, and about 300 are receiving elementary education in day-classes. A special appeal is made for funds to enable the Society to maintain and extend its usefulness.

COUNTRY HOLIDAYS FOR POOR CHILDREN.—Through the Country Holidays Fund to provide fresh air for ailing London children, and its local committees, 5000 poor children last year spent two or three weeks in the country. The children were boarded in cottages which had been guaranteed as suitable by some well-known resident in the village. The average cost of board and lodging was 5s. a week per child, and towards the expenses the parents willingly contributed according to their means. Not only were the children much stronger from their visits to the country, but they came back with a great increase of knowledge and happy memories of the strange and delightful sights and sounds they had seen and heard. Help in continuing and extending the work will be thankfully received, and further information given by the Secretary, 1, Adam-street, Aldelphi, W.C.

OBITUARY.

MISS M. J. MONCK.

THIS lady, several of whose hymns have appeared in our columns, fell asleep in Jesus at Hastings on May 13, aged 58. She had no relatives and few friends in England, but many in Ireland, where she was known by her writings, signed "M. J. M." Her end was peace; she was gently gathered home.

DR. H. A. STERN.

We have to record the sad loss sustained by Christians of the Hebrew race, in the death of Rev. Henry Aaron Stern, D.D. His funeral took place on Monday last, at Ilford Cemetery.

LIEUT. JOHN SANDFORD BROWNE, R.N.

This Christian brother fell asleep in Jesus on May 6, aged forty years, after long and painful suffering, especially during the past six months. He rests from his many and long labours as a devoted servant of the Lord Jesus, and a helper of many good works.

REV. DAVID DEWAR.

The death of Mr. Dewar took place at Fochabers, N.B., suddenly, in his manse, on Tuesday week, at the ripe age of eighty-eight, death resulting from apoplexy. His loss is deeply felt in the village and neighbourhood, where he laboured so long and faithfully, and was so highly and deservedly esteemed.

DOWAGER COUNTESS OF GAINSBOROUGH.

This Christian lady, well known in the upper ranks of Society, died last week at a good old age. She took a deep, practical interest in all good works, and many societies will miss her help. The Countess showed special concern in the operations of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, of which she was a Vice-President, and a working member of the Committee. The Court Circular contained the subjoined: "The Queen has been much grieved by the loss of one of the oldest members of her household. The Dowager Countess of Gainsborough was one of Her Majesty's ladies at the time of her accession to the Throne, and one for whom the Queen has always entertained sincere affection."

The Anchorage.

Hebrews vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

"ALL ISRAEL SHALL BE SAVED."

BY

ADOLPH SAPHIR, B.A., D.D.,
Author of "Christ and the Scriptures," &c., &c.

With Preface by Professor Delitzsch.

Demy 8vo. Price SIXPENCE.

"'All Israel Shall Be Saved.' This, then, is the end—the consummation of the history of Israel. After a long period of unbelief and of guilt, there will at last be conversion and renewal. After a long period, during which they are scattered and under the chastisement of God, there will at last be national restoration and glory. Ichabod, the glory has departed. But at last the glory will return, never to depart again; and the name of Jerusalem shall be 'Jehovah Shammah,' 'The Lord is there.' The God of glory appeared unto Abraham; and the God of glory will appear again to the seed of Abraham. All Israel shall be saved!"—Extract.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

LARYNGEAL PHTHISIS, with ANÆMIA.—A YOUNG LADY AT SALISBURY.

It is now a little over two years since Miss. J. A.,* of Silver-street, Salisbury, came to Coombe Lodge for advice and medicine.

She had had a cough from childhood; for seven years her throat had been more or less affected, and now consumption of the throat, or laryngeal phthisis, had set in. Two eminent physicians had prescribed for her in London and Salisbury.

Examined by Dr. Brown, with the same report.

The Balsam, liniment, pills, and a tonic were prescribed. In the course of a month or two she was far less anæmic—that is, the deficiency of red particles in the blood had been repaired — throat easier, voice clearer, cough relieved, pain less.

It was considered doubtful when she first came, that she would ever entirely recover, seeing that she had had symptoms for nearly twenty years. She did, however; and writing me in the early part of this year, she says:—

"I am thankful to say my health has improved so much that I can now give up most of my spare time to active service for the divine Master." Among other work, I understand she takes a class of working men.

INVIGORATION FOR BRAIN WORKERS.

Treatment by Magnetism is a natural importation of new life and vigour, which will effectually supersede the use of tonics and stimulants in chronic affections. If we exercise a thought upon what we are doing when taking stimulating drinks as tonics, we must be aware that the temporary stimulus we feel from them is not strength, as it is succeeded by a corresponding diminution of the strength we possess. Rest is certainly a wiser course than stimulation, but it seems almost impossible in this age of activity to relax our efforts and still keep abreast with all onward movements. If recuperation of our powers and fitness for work could be obtained while in work, many an anxious heart and aching brow would hail such a talisman. Is this possible? We think it is as possible to maintain mental vigour while pursuing mental work as to obtain nourishment from food while performing physical labour.

The superior value of Magnetic Treatment arises from the perfect control which it has over the mental states and the emotional life of the patient, extending its healing virtues into the realm of causation, and touching the spring of the body's vitality and power. There is a pathology of the mind as well as of the body; and to restore the true harmony of thought and feeling, intellect and sensibility, should be the steady aim of him who would "minister to a mind diseased." It is because this unseen or odic influence of Magnetism acts upon or with the animating principle of our being, that it re-energises the mind, and removes hindrances and encumbrances which are revealed to our consciousness from time to time. Magnetism is, then, pre-eminently an element of mental power, and one which naturally coalesces with all the forces of the (so-called) physical economy, to restore the natural order and normal condition of our being.

Mr. J. SAMME, 30, Filey-crescent, Stamford Hill, N.

"I am persuading others to adopt your Treatment, from which I, myself, under God, have received so much benefit. Last month I was able to take twenty-three full services, whereas three years since I could not conduct one.

"It is now two years since I placed myself under your care, and I would not be without the remedy on any account. I hope I shall soon prevail on my wife to accept its help also."

March 3, 1885.—"I must still speak well of your Treatment. It is now four years since I adopted it, and during that time my work for the Lord in the way of giving addresses has been constantly carried on. This is most wonderful, after being for five years utterly unable to deliver one address through nervous prostration. All I can say is, I wish all who suffer in the same way would try your remedy.

"My dear wife, who for some time did not yield to my wish that she should adopt the treatment, since doing so has greatly benefited. During the last two winters she has not suffered with bronchitis as she did formerly, when she was afraid to go out of doors for weeks together; but, thank God, since wearing your Appliances, great things have been done for her 'whereof we are glad.'"

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to reply to inquiries from sufferers, or to explain the principles of his treatment to any scientific or medical gentleman, and to confer with them upon any case where his advice may be sought. Consultations, whether personally or by letter, are free.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to God, their own Father and Mother, and true Bible Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d.,

contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables Parents to teach one child or a family of twelve children, Teachers to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, Educated Ladies to teach all ages, or Ministers without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the

THE HOUSING OF THE POOR.

THE first part of the long-expected Report of the Royal Commission upon the Housing of the Poor has now been issued. It is remarkable and interesting—chiefly, perhaps, because, after so much labour has been expended upon it, it contains so little that is new. The evidence it furnishes certainly bears out the startling testimonies of the earnest men and women who for long have, through the Press and upon the platform, been calling attention to the distressing condition of a large proportion of our people. It goes little beyond this, however, and confessedly leaves many of the important dependent questions where they were before.

An attempt is made to settle the point as to the relative positions of poverty and intemperance, but it is by no means a successful one. Though drink is recognised as a potent cause of that gravitation to the slums which characterises so much of our working-class life, a few platitudes convey the impression that the Commissioners have not yet got beyond the A B C of the Temperance question. Surely it did not require a Royal Commission to tell us that "if drinking were given up greater comfort would in many cases follow;" or that "drink and poverty act and re-act upon each other: discomfort of the most abject kind is caused by drink, but indulgence in drink is caused by overcrowding and its cognate evils." These truisms have been reiterated upon Temperance platforms for half a century. There are few people who are not prepared to admit that much of the physical and moral uncleanness of the poverty-stricken classes is traceable to their wretched environments. Living in places scarcely fit for swine, and dying like sickly sheep, what wonder if in other respects they sink at times below the level of the human?

Possibly legislation of both a remedial and a preventive nature will follow the Commissioners' labours, not because any lower deep has been discovered by them in our social life than that frequently commented upon in the public Press, but simply by reason of the influence, parliamentary and otherwise, of the members. Whenever that legislative action does take place it will be none too soon, though it may interfere seriously with those "vested interests" which are at the foundation of so many of our social evils.

One of the seven memoranda which are appended to the report is of a striking and powerful kind, for it comes from the pen of a gentleman (Mr. Ed. Dwyer Gray, M.P.) who is very familiar with the unhappy condition of the poor in the Irish Metropolis. It contains opinions and suggestions as manly and straightforward as they are able: "Even if all the recommendations contained in the Report were adopted, they would scarcely have an appreciable effect upon the terrible evils," says Mr. Gray. He goes on to suggest, and the suggestion must meet with the approval and support of every Christian man and woman who has thought deeply upon this gravest of our modern problems, that there should be legislation to make the owner of tenement houses criminally and civilly responsible for "sickness and death," resulting from his or her neglect of sanitary duties and regulations. This would be a step in the right direction, and if the proposed legislation could possibly be widened, so as to make such landlords and owners of property liable for the effects of the moral pestilence which just as surely follows overcrowding, perhaps society would be none the worse for it.

Innocence and purity cannot be preserved in such family life as that recently referred to in this journal, with eight people living and sleeping in a room ten feet square by seven feet high, or, as in the case quoted in the Report, where nine people live in one small room. Moral disease and death must inevitably result, just as physical illness and decay follow the other unsanitary conditions. In the very heart of our greatest centres of civilisation, children grow up whose possibilities of becoming good and virtuous are almost infinitesimal, the jail and the hospital being the happiest places they are likely to know. Mr. Dwyer Gray's practical suggestion seems to point to a way of making some one responsible for the fact. We commend his words, therefore, to those Christian people who remember how careful Christ was about the bodies of men, and who, following reverently in the Master's steps, are endeavouring to do something to lessen the burdens of the suffering and sorrowing, if sometimes sinning, poor.

James Bowker.

WEAK HANDS AND WILLING HEARTS.

"My word shall not return unto Me void."

THE life of faith is not a life of sense, and weak hands and willing hearts are not shut out from service; therefore be not discouraged, prisoners of hope, at the iron gate which God has allowed to separate you from the outer world. Peter's God is your God; the God of Paul is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. If you desire his glory and his service, "believe only," and it shall be given you; and "sow beside all waters," for "He will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry; when He shall hear it, He will answer thee." "Blessed are all they that wait for Him."

One dreary evening in January, a poor woman, borne down by the cares that belong to a large family, came to share her satisfaction with me that her boy (of ten years of age) had obtained a place of daily service in a ladies' school, for blacking shoes and knife cleaning, and that the three servants were very kind to him. There were some little books near me, and taking up three, I told her to give them to Bobby, for his kind friends, asking for a blessing on them, as they carried the Word of God.

Who that knows the preciousness of the Saviour's love does not rejoice to go forth to sow, leaving to Him to reap? For—

"In bye-ways many a tiny grain
Falls and seems wasted that shall spring again
Into a full ripe wheat-sheaf by and by,
For life within the hard gold shell doth lie;
Life—that can only pierce the husks and grow,
By being scattered where God's soft winds blow"

A week afterwards, I needed to be reminded that it is not to him that runneth, and so, perhaps, it was the "set time" for my faith to be revived. My poor friend came again. She told me that her boy took the books the next day, and found the cook was leaving her place. She accepted it gladly as a parting gift from the little fellow, and gave him a present in return.

Later in the day he gave "Love did It" to the housemaid, who at the same time received a telegram to summon her to the sick bed of her brother invalided from India, not expected to live. He had been the trial and sorrow of the family for many years, and had now returned to die, without hope, without God. The housemaid put the tract in her pocket to read on the railway journey, for the purpose of beguiling the time rather than for any desire after its contents. When she reached home her brother was worse, and the despair of his soul such that she knew not what to say to him, for she knew no comfort to offer him.

She remembered the little book; it was about God's love to sinners like him, so she read it. She was amazed at his rapt attention and thankfulness. She sat up with him that night, and again and again she read the tract to him. The words were bread to his famishing soul: "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And He "gave Himself for our sins, that He might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God" (Gal. i.). "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Here was the Gospel of the grace of God, the golden grain, "scattered where God's soft winds blow," the song of salvation to millions of souls, sufficing for millions more.

The following day the housemaid returned to her place of service, deeply impressed by the work of the Spirit on the young soldier's soul. The next week she received a letter from her mother, telling her of the happy death of the prodigal, and the blessing that she had carried him through the tract, "Love did It."

Bobby had sympathy with me, for when with tearful eyes he repeated the simple history of the dying soldier to his mother, he added—

"Do go and tell the lady who gave it, I know she will be glad." And truly she was glad, and rejoiced exceedingly.

Of the third tract I know nothing; but the same blessing was asked on the three, and it shall spring up in due time, and be recognised when the seed has brought forth "after its own kind." This truth I am slowly learning: Those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary, and if they were not feeble, they could not so show forth the love and power of God. He who desires to serve in the sanctuary shall have a place of service and the wages of the Lord of the harvest; his smile, and his blessing.

WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.—A number of the young women resident in the Homes for Working Girls were entertained on a recent evening by the Countess of Aberdeen, at Stafford Rooms, Titchborne-street. After tea and music, short addresses were given to the guests by Lord Aberdeen, Professor Drummond, Dr. McEwan, and Canon Spence. On the motion of Mr. J. Shrimpton, hearty thanks were accorded to the Countess for her great kindness in providing such a pleasant and profitable evening.

A POWERFUL PULPIT.

By the late Dr. REES, Swansea.*

SHOULD plain, earnest, and popular preaching of the Gospel ever give place to dry metaphysical lectures on abstruse subjects, or become a dull and a secondary part of our public religious services, the doom of intelligent spiritual religion will be sealed. Scriptural Christianity will lose its hold on the world whenever frivolous ceremonies or learned disquisitions on scientific, philosophical, or secular subjects are substituted for powerful Gospel preaching. The history of religion in all ages and countries emphatically proves this to be the case. Throughout the New Testament the greatest importance is attached to the preaching of the Gospel.

A SUCCESSFUL PREACHER.

He must be a devout and a truly godly man. An ungodly preacher, what an awful incongruity! Nothing could be a greater obstacle to the prevalence of pure Christianity in the world than the intrusion of ungodly men into the sacred office of the Christian ministry. Our good forefathers, the Puritans, contended that no unconverted man could be a true minister of Jesus Christ; while their High Church contemporaries held, and publicly advocated, the pernicious error that Episcopal ordination gave validity to the ministrations of men, whatever their moral character might be! It is lamentable to think that many of our countrymen in the present day hold the same soul-destroying sentiment. Only when all our pulpits are occupied by good men, full of the Holy Ghost and of faith, may we expect much people to be added to the Lord. Men burning with zeal for the glory of God and the salvation of sinners, cannot fail to be effective preachers, provided they are endowed with the other necessary gifts.

The effective preacher must have both physical and mental powers adapted for his profession, and at least a moderate degree of culture. Every preacher should be a godly man, but every godly man cannot be a preacher. Too many men think that they are called to be preachers when none but themselves think so; and churches have too often grievously erred by permitting some of their members to commence preaching before ascertaining that they possessed the natural and mental qualifications required for the work. No one should assume the office of a public religious teacher without a good store of scriptural and general knowledge, together with ability to deliver his thoughts with freedom and in an agreeable manner. The successful preacher must be full of the spirit of his work. No one can excel in any profession unless he heartily delight in the discharge of its duties. Compared with the Christian ministry, all worldly professions are insignificant, and the man who enters it without solemnly consecrating his whole being to the service is a presumptuous intruder. Paul says, "Necessity is laid upon me: yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel." The prophet Jeremiah once in a fit of dejection, on account of the reproaches and the fierce opposition of his idolatrous hearers, made up his mind that he would give up prophesying in the name of the Lord; but he was soon compelled to alter his determination, and say, "His word was in mine heart, as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay." The man who can give up preaching in order to enjoy a quiet life, or in disgust on account of petty annoyances from some of his people, has not his heart in his Master's work, and his retirement will not be a great loss to the Church.

No one can be useful and successful in the ministry of the Gospel without discretion and amiability. The Christian minister has to do with a great variety of characters—the educated and the uneducated, the keen and the dull, the rich and the poor, the gentle and the rude, the sincere and the treacherous, the patient and the hot-tempered, the godly and the ungodly. It would be utterly impossible to do good to these various and opposite characters without the most consummate prudence, patience, gentleness, and sweetness of temper. The man who would make the pulpit powerful must be a good organiser as well as a good preacher. No preaching, however popular and able, will effect any durable good without wise organisation. A popular preacher, by his eloquence and earnest appeals, may induce many thoughtless men to seek religion; but it is the experienced and discreet organiser who must take the awakened under his care to train them up to a life of Christian usefulness, otherwise all traces of the preacher's work will soon disappear. George Whitfield was incomparably superior to John Wesley as an eloquent and popular preacher, but he was not an organiser, while Wesley was one of the best organisers in his own or any other age. The consequence is that about fifteen millions of people in various parts of the world are now under the religious instruction of the Methodists. [Whitefield served his generation according to the will of God, and fell on sleep. It may be questioned whether the organisation of one period is the one best suited to another.—Ed.]

A powerful preacher must not shun to declare to the people "the whole counsel of God." Some persons have gone to the absurd extreme of asserting that every sermon should contain a complete body of divinity, while others confine themselves to one or two favourite points year after year. Both these extremes are unreasonable, unscriptural, and tend directly to make the pulpit heavy and powerless. A sermon overloaded with a variety of different subjects cannot possibly be lively, instructive, and edifying; and, on the other hand, to harp endlessly on the same subjects and ignore other equally important truths, would lead the hearers to form partial and dangerously erroneous views of religion. This defective preaching has proved ruinous to many once flourishing congregations. Some have been led by it to the unhealthy bogs of Antinomianism, and others to the arid wilderness of Pelagianism and Arianism. The Bible, our great and only text-book, contains doctrines, commandments, promises, threatenings, examples, to be followed or avoided, and histories full of practical instructions. None of these are to be overlooked or neglected in our administrations. If we dare to ignore any Bible doctrine or commandment which may not be agreeable to our taste, or for fear of offending some persons in our congregations, we are guilty of the heinous sin of betraying our solemn trust as professed ambassadors for Christ.

Frequent exchange of pulpits by neighbouring ministers, and occasional preaching excursions through the country, would greatly add to the power of the pulpit. It would break the monotony of listening to the same voice Sunday after Sunday throughout the year, and wonderfully increase the preaching power of the ministers. There are scores of churches with from two to four hundred members in the most rural districts of Wales; but such would never have been the case had it not been that the most popular preachers in the Principality frequently visited those districts. It is to be hoped that great England is not too proud to take a leaf out of the book of little Wales.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE SERMONS.

They must be thoroughly evangelical. No attentive reader of the New Testament can fail to see the prominence which it gives to preaching the Gospel—preaching Christ, and preaching repentance and remission of sins in his name. The Apostle Paul was a scholar and a highly cultured man, yet rather than amuse his hearers by parading his learning, he "determined not to know anything among them save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Christless sermons, however elegantly composed and eloquently delivered, are not apostolical, and are totally worthless. The history of preaching in every age proves beyond dispute that preaching Christ and Him crucified has alone proved effective in the conversion of sinners and the edification of the saints. We may be represented as laggers behind the age, as shallow thinkers, and giving our people nothing but platitudes, but we, like the Apostle, should be willing to be accounted fools for Christ's sake, so long as we are instrumental in making our hearers wise in Christ. Let us all dig as deep as we can into the inexhaustible mine of God's word, and draw out, if possible, the hidden treasures which our fathers could not get at; but while doing so, we must, for the sake of safety, hold with an unyielding grasp the three cardinal doctrines of the Gospel—man's ruin by the fall of the first Adam, his redemption by the atoning death of the Second Adam, and his regeneration by the Holy Spirit.

Sermons to be effective must be plain and intelligible to all the hearers. The Lord Jesus Christ was a remarkably plain preacher. By his beautiful and telling parables He brought down "the mysteries of the kingdom of God" to the capacities of "the common people," and consequently those people "heard Him gladly." Only so far as we follow the example of the Divine Teacher in using "great plainness of speech," can we expect to be wise and successful in winning souls. The most Christ-like and apostolic preacher is he who seeks to find out acceptable words, which will be as goads and as nails, penetrating into the understanding and the conscience of every hearer. Our people should not be under the necessity of having the most modern dictionary, with their Bibles and hymn-books, in their pews, to help them to understand our sermons. The subjects of sermons, as well as their style, should be adapted to the capacities of congregations made up of all sorts of men. The Gospel preacher should always aim to move the hearts of his hearers, and not to feel satisfied by merely entertaining their intellect. The plainest sermons may give sufficient instruction to the understanding, while at the same time they arouse the consciences and move the affections of the people.

Sermons should be delivered with animation, warmth, and earnestness. The most intense earnestness is not in the least inconsistent with the decorum and the reverence required in the service of God; but it will most certainly do away with every shadow of punctiliousness, sanctimoniousness, and foppery. These things are disgusting everywhere, but in the pulpit they are daringly presumptuous. No trace of them is to be seen on the preacher who truly feels the importance of his message, and the serious consequences to himself and his hearers, if not delivered with proper feeling and due solemnity. Dandyism, and drowsiness, instead of true earnestness and life, in the pulpit, have done incalculable harm to the cause of Christ in many districts, and nothing less than an extraordinary outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and a powerful revival of religion, can remove the effects of such mischievous trifling with Divine things.

A powerful pulpit is the safeguard of national life and prosperity. Great Britain, with all its faults and shortcomings, is the best and the most orderly country on the face of the earth. It is a land of liberty without anarchy. Life, property, and character are safer in it than anywhere else. Our religious and philanthropic institutions are superior and more numerous than those of any other country. Everything here is comparatively safe, from Her Majesty's palace to the humblest cottage of the labourer. Without detracting the least meed of praise due to our talented legislators, our able Press, our successful educationists, our skilled mechanics and artizans, our enterprising merchants, and all other reforming agents and agencies, we may unhesitatingly say that the influence of its evangelical pulpit has done more than all other things combined to make Britain what it is in the present day, politically, socially, morally, and religiously. A lamentable amount of evil still remains in our country, and much more in other countries, notwithstanding all the labours of Christian people; but the reformation which is to be brought about in the future must be effected by the same means as those which produced reformations in the past—the exhibition of pure evangelical Christianity in word and deed.

THE NEW REFORMATION.

A CURE FOR CHURCH DIVISIONS.

THIS is a time during which there are gathered many hundreds of ministers, and leaders of Christian thought, upon whom rests the solemn responsibility of directing Church life into the right channels; of lifting the minds of their people out of the narrow and unworthy grooves in which there is such a strong tendency to run contentedly; and of arousing a deep dissatisfaction with the present inadequate efforts that are put forth for giving the Gospel of the grace of God to a perishing world. What a cure for divisions and jealousies might be found in a grand united determination to give real effect to our Lord's resurrection command—"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature;" and ere this nineteenth century closes might not its past glories and victories in other directions be all eclipsed by the bursting forth of a new Reformation in the line of foreign mission enterprise, upon a scale hitherto unattempted?

What is the present state of the case? Many people are quietly assuming that Christianity is making a yearly encroachment upon heathenism and Mohammedanism and upon the corrupt Christian systems of Continental Europe; in other words, that at each year's close there has been such a displacement of error and idolatry that we may reckon on a relative increase of vital Christianity in the world. No greater delusion could be fostered. Every year the excess of births into this world of sin, above the number carried away by death, is estimated at twelve millions of souls: is any one sanguine enough to suppose that even five millions of true believers are added annually to the sum of converted men and women in the world? And yet unless some such result as this or more than this is attained, there is an obvious loss of ground and a prodigious increase to the ranks of the foes of Christ. The normal increase of the tens of thousands in Protestant countries of Christendom sinks into insignificance when compared with the hundreds of thousands, the millions, who form the normal increase to the numbers of heathen peoples, of Mohammedans, of the Greek and Roman Churches, to say nothing of the dead mass of professing Christians in more favoured lands. This is said to be and truly it is; but missionary activity is not confined to evangelical circles. The Pope in these days is fostering missions most zealously, in England among other places; but by all means he is seeking to foster missions from his own point of view. As a writer not long ago said: "By an infamous alliance the atheists of France, who cannot tolerate the rule of the priestly orders in their own country, ally themselves with the Vatican abroad, so as, by Roman Catholic missions, to extend French ambitions and win it in a great colonial empire." In Tonquin and Cochin China, in Madagascar, on the Congo, the Pope will try to retrieve the losses he may have sustained in Europe during the past fifty years. And when we count up our gains for pure and undefiled religion since France, Spain, Italy, and Austria were opened to receive the Word of God, oh, how pitifully small they seem to be! How meagre and fitful the efforts of British Christians to enter in at these open doors, and how inadequate the support bestowed upon the handful of men and women who are here and there sowing the seed! But are busy too. Ponder for a moment this reference to the Mohammedan University at Cairo: "Some ten thousand students are gathered under its roofs, prepared to go out as missionaries of the Moslem faith. It is nine hundred years older than Oxford, and still flourishes as in the palmy days of the Arabian conquest. As a traveller expressed it: 'There were two acres of turbans assembled in a vast enclosure with no floor but a pavement, and with a roof over it supported by 400 columns, and at the foot of every column a teacher surrounded by his pupils. As we entered, there rose a hum of thousands of voices reciting the Koran. These students are not only from Egypt, but from all parts of Africa, from Morocco to Zanzibar. They come from far up the Nile, from Nubia, and the Soudan; from Darfour beyond the great desert, and from the western coast of Africa. They live on the charities of the faithful, and when their studies are ended, those who are to be missionaries mount their camels and, joining a caravan, cross the desert and are lost in the far interior of Africa, where they become the effective propagators of Islam." A Basle society's missionary from Accra, on the Gold Coast, told me that fourteen years ago, when he first went to West Africa, there was not a single Mohammedan in the place: now there is an Arab of great weight and influence at Accra, the centre of an increasing group of Mohammedans. Similarly, at Sierra Leone, as I learn on the authority of a missionary's widow, there is now an Arab quarter of the town, in which it would be perilous for a Christian to attempt preaching. The Turkish empire may be in a state of decrepitude, but Mohammedanism is vigorous and aggressive. We have found it so in the Soudan, and may have to reckon with it in other places.

BUDDHISM IS NOT DEAD YET, and by no means asleep. A missionary not long returned from India said to me last week that "Buddhism is now the fashionable religion in England!" I am not in circumstances to verify or to deny this startling assertion; but what with the progress of agnosticism and theosophy—the latter seemingly an Indo-Russo-American compound—we may well stand amazed, and indeed tremble at the increase of unbelief on the one hand and of credulity on the other, in this once highly-favoured land.

WHISKY AND RUM MISSIONARIES

are being sent forth upon a scale which may put societies for propagating the Gospel to the blush. I cut the following sentence from Africa last autumn, and deeply regret the cessation of that useful and intensely interesting quarterly magazine: "The Niger is now a great highway of commerce, the majority in the trading posts being but semi-civilised, and with a moral tone at the lowest. As an illustration of the way in which the negro is being familiarised with most of the vice and crime of England, a few months ago one steamer took up the Niger no less than 25,000 cases of gin and demijohns of rum, and these for two factories only. How miserable it will be if the same traffic be introduced on the Congo!" Shall I be accused of exaggeration if I say that the souls and bodies destroyed year by year in China, India, and Africa, by the drink and opium missionaries of Great Britain, America, and Germany, are vastly more in number than the souls won to Christ by all the missionaries of these Protestant countries of the world? Oh what a reckoning there will be at the great day concerning these grievous and soul-destroying wrongs, and what shall we say of the Church's neglect which permits the wrong to outstrip the right, the darkness to obscure the light, and the systems of error and falsehood to advance with such strides, whilst men "sit at ease in Zion," abounding in privileges but giving grudgingly to the famishing myriads in this sin-stained earth?

In the face of facts such as these, can an increase of the ministry of the word at home, or further building of churches and chapels, be viewed as anything short of a crime in the sight of a God of truth and righteousness? For the three millions of people in Scotland there seems to be a provision of nearly 3500 ministers, of not less (probably) than 20,000 or 30,000 elders, to say nothing of city missionaries, district visitors, and the manifold operations of Christian women. What a confession of failure of the whole Presbyterian system if the existing eldership cannot overtake the work to be done in Scotland! If it is not thus overtaken, why not!

A REFORMATION SEEMS CALLED FOR

in the home as well as in the foreign mission work of the Church, and some sweeping changes, such as Hugh Price Hughes deems needful for London, may be as necessary in the northern part of the kingdom as they certainly are in the south. What says this vigorous young representative of Wesleyanism, that most conservative of English systems?—

> "The neglected parts of London can never be evangelised upon what are called 'the old lines.' The old lines' have emptied Spitalfields, St. George's, the Seamen's Chapel, and other splendid centres of Christian work. The old lines, the old pews, the old pew-rents, the old quarterly collections, the old times, and, if necessary, the old trustees, the old officials, and the old congregation must retire from the scene to some congenial resting-place. The time has come when the salvation of 10,000 immortal souls can be no longer subordinated to the imaginary interests of a handful of excellent Christians."

I venture to think the time has come when, for every well-equipped missionary who has gone through the full college curriculum, the churches should send a score of men who have received an ordinary education and who have taken a degree in that first essential for all foreign mission work—some well-ascertained success in home mission work. There seems to be not a few students at the universities at this moment who would accept such service if offered them, and whose literary curriculum, added to their zeal for soul-saving work, may well assure the committees that they have fitness for some of the manifold forms of service which present themselves to willing workers in heathen lands. They may not be able to take part in the educational or in translation work; but if they can acquire a new language, they can then surely tell of the great salvation as well as a more learned brother.

It is noteworthy, and I lay much stress upon the fact, that no mission committee has yet pronounced it indispensable that a lady missionary should pass through four years of literary, and four more years of theological curriculum, ere she is permitted to leave our shores to tell out the Gospel in Indian zenanas or in Chinese homes. May the ladies at home who manage women's missionary associations for ever resist any attempt to enforce a very lengthened course of preparation other than that of proved consecration to the work of Christ at home. But what is there in the constitution of heathen men which demands a presentation of the offer of salvation from none but theologically trained missionaries; whilst heathen women can comprehend and receive the very same offer from a lady who has received a fairly liberal education? I thank God that this curious anomaly has a very blessed side, promising great things for our poor heathen sisters. And may I here add that the Church would show its wisdom in sending forth two female missionaries for every male missionary they accept: first, because of the long neglect of this side of foreign mission work; and still more because in all lands of heathen and other superstitions the women hold the key of the position by their hold upon the rising generation.

When one considers that all the issues of all the Bible societies in the world, in Bibles, Testaments, and portions do not exceed seven millions annually, whilst the earth's population receives a yearly increase of twelve millions, we may perceive how in this department, too, the attempt to meet the need falls short of the necessity.

If Christian parents are ready to yield their children, their best and brightest, to this noblest of all earth's occupations, endowing them (where this is possible) with such a portion as would relieve the mission funds; if rich Christians are prepared to part with large portions of their accumulations rather than let them be swept away in unlucky investments; if ministers—"thinking not of their own things, but also of the things of others"—would bring the great subject before their people on a Lord's day morning at least once a month; if young men and maidens looking out for life work could be guided by true friends—the friends of Christ—to consider his paramount claims and the cry of the far-off and therefore much-forgotten myriads who are lying in gross darkness, might we not, ere the Master returneth to reckon with his servants, see such a glorious development and extension of foreign missions as would gladden the heart of Christ and bring back upon our land and our people the prosperity which meanwhile they have forfeited? "Repent, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place except thou repent."

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.

"THE LOWEST OF MEN."

IT had often occurred to me in reading Nebuchadnezzar's recital of his second dream (Dan. iv.), that "the basest of men" whom the Most High sets up over the kingdom of men is He who said, "I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people." The Revised Version and the Septuagint show that this is the case. The former translates, "The lowest of men," and the LXX. render the passage thus:—

> "The matter is by the decree of the watcher, and the demand is a word of the holy ones: that the living may know that the Lord is most high over the kingdom of men, and He will give it to whomsoever He shall please, and will set over it that which is set at nought of men."

The Greek word translated "set at nought" is applied to Christ in the following passages in the New Testament, the context of which in each case relates to his kingdom:—

> "He must suffer many things and be set at nought."—Mark ix. 12.
> "Herod and his men of war set Him at nought and mocked Him."—Luke xxiii. 11.
> "The Stone which was set at nought of you builders."—Acts iv. 11.

So that among the many titles by which the Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God incarnate, will be remembered through the eternal ages will be, "The Lowest of men"—"That which is set at nought of men." He who was "despised and rejected of men," is the Captain and Leader, the Prophet Priest, and King, of the base things of the world, and things which are despised (set at nought—same word), which God hath chosen, things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence (1 Cor. i. 28, 29). AN INDIAN ORPHANAGE.

IN connection with my Mission Station (Tumkur) there is an Orphanage, containing 140 friendless orphan boys. It was commenced in the terrible famine year 1877, when the Mysore country lost more than one million out of five million inhabitants. At that time hundreds of homeless heathen children were left destitute; to save some of these from the evils of idolatry, and above all to bring them to Jesus, our Home was started. It has been our aim throughout to keep our Orphanage off the ordinary mission funds, so as to devote them entirely to evangelistic work, for which indeed they are altogether inadequate. So far we have succeeded in our attempt through the generosity of many friends in England, who have adopted some of our children; but now through the failure of the rain and the consequent increased price of food, we are landed in difficulties. I have now a debt of Rs. 1350, which is weighing us down and threatens to increase rather than diminish.

A donation of £4 yearly will support a boy. I shall be happy to send all particulars to any person willing to adopt a child. Some of our lads need now to be settled in life, but I am hindered for want of funds. About £24 will be needed for each boy. Towards this £8 has been promised me in India, so that a donation of £16 will enable me to start a boy in life, that is, send him out as a Christian ryot or artizan to influence the heathen around. Many of the boys, I am glad to say, are true disciples of Jesus. My brother, Rev. C. B. Sawday, Vernon Baptist Chapel, King's-cross, London, will gladly receive help.—Yours most sincerely,

George W. Sawday.

TEMPERANCE IN PARIS.—M. de Carteret has had two meetings in Paris, when he advocated total abstinence before a numerous and attentive audience, the majority of whom belonged to the working classes. The audience was deeply moved by the story of his experiences. At the close several men took the pledge for one, two, or three months, others signing for life.

WILLIE OLDHAM'S TRUST.

Psalm lxxi. 1.

SCRIPTURE UNION PORTION FOR MAY 29.

"HAVE you heard the news, sir? Willie Oldham has got the fever," and the speaker pulled himself up before the manly figure of a clergyman, who was hastening with rapid strides down the street.

"The fever!" exclaimed Mr. Eardley, stopping short also. "Willie got the fever!" and an anxious look crossed his face.

"Yes, sir; and he's been took to the hospital, though he ain't bad yet."

"Then I must see him, and at once," and Mr. Eardley set off towards the hospital where his young friend lay. "He may soon be unconscious, and I must speak with him at once," was the thought uppermost in the mind of the clergyman as he hastened on. "If I only knew that Willie was safe, I should not fear."

At last the hospital was reached, and Mr. Eardley followed the nurse to the ward where Willie lay.

A bright smile came into the flushed face as the well-known voice said—

"So you are laid up, Willie? and so suddenly, too; I have only just heard of it, and came at once to see you."

"Thank you, sir," was the lad's answer. "Yes, it was very sudden; directly Mr. Ward found it was the fever, he said I must go to the hospital, so here I am," and he tried to laugh.

"Willie," said Mr. Eardley, kindly, "you know quite well that in all probability you will soon be unconscious; are you afraid?"

"No, sir; I'm not afraid, and I'll tell you why—I'm trusting the Lord, sir. Before they brought me here, sir, Miss Alice came into my room, and she said to me, 'Willie, before you leave us I want to give you a psalm to think of; it is the seventy-first, and will you take the first verse specially for yourself; and then she said, 'Can you say, "In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust"?' Well, sir, I just gave myself then and there into the Lord's keeping, and now I can say, 'In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust,' and I'm not a bit afraid now, sir, for the Lord will do all that's right for me."

"Indeed He will, Willie," replied Mr. Eardley, fervently. "I am thankful, more thankful than I can say, to know you are trusting yourself, soul and body, to the Lord Jesus;" and after a few more earnest words the clergyman left, fearing to excite the lad if he stayed longer.

Willie was soon unconscious, but Miss Alice's verse was always on his lips, and "In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust," was heard ringing through the ward. Day after day passed by, and the fever raged, till it was feared the lad's frame could not stand it much longer, and still the words were seldom off his lips—"In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust."

At last the crisis came, and Willie lived, lived to utter again his well-known cry, and then to fall into a gentle sleep.

Among his many friends there was none more glad to hear he was out of danger than Mr. Eardley, who, as soon as the lad was strong enough to receive visitors, went to see him. How changed he was, so white and weak, but the old, bright smile was there still, as he stretched out his hand eagerly, saying—

"I trusted Him, sir, and He has brought me safe through; and now I can say more gladly than ever, "In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust."

"Thank God!" said Mr. Eardley. "And He has given you back your life, to use for Him, Willie."

"Yes, sir, and I'll go on trusting Him still."

And he did. Willie has gone on trusting his Master, and walking with Jesus daily. He is learning how true the Lord's promise is, that "Whoso putteth his trust in the Lord, shall be safe."

I wonder if you know Willie's Friend, and can say, "I have found a Friend in Jesus"? I wonder if you can say, "In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust"?—Our Own Magazine.

BIBLE QUESTIONS.

A neat square little sixpenny book has been published by The Religious Tract Society, which we commend to the special attention of those of our young readers who are also Bible students. It is called Bible Queries, and contains a question from the Scriptures for each day in the year. Space is left at one side in which to fill in the reference when the passage is discovered. A short preface says that in finding the answer "only a reference Bible, and not a Concordance, should be consulted." We give the questions for the first week in June:—

June 1.—What is the thing that the Lord hath said unto thee?
" 2.—Who shall bring me down to the ground?
" 3.—What is thy occupation?
" 4.—Wilt thou play with him as with a bird?
" 5.—Shall we continue in sin?
" 6.—Have ye suffered so many things in vain?
" 7.—Who is sufficient for these things?

MANCHESTER CITY MISSION.

AMONG the successful efforts of the worthy men connected with this Mission is work on the canal. The cashier in one of the largest firms lately remarked: "I have been connected with the canal for a great many years, and I know, from my own observation, that the boatmen are fifty per cent. better than they were a few years ago.' The report of the Mission says: "When the Mission began, many of the boats were the scenes of drunkenness, debauchery, and cruelty. Now such things are rare." The Mission has also gone into the work of rescuing the fallen, as our pages have recently testified. Here, too, the labours of the Secretary and his helpers have been abundantly owned of God. As everywhere else, drink is a giant evil.

At a recent meeting of the Board, it was resolved to increase the number of missionaries, as the Lord might send them, believing that He would also furnish the requisite funds for their support. The present number of missionaries is sixty. "But at least there ought to be a hundred, so that we still require forty more men, and an increased income of £3000 to pay them."

One of the most interesting items in the report is that headed "Extracts from the Missionaries' Diaries." Here we have most touching instances of awakening and conversion. Whole families have been saved, and many become active workers. A good map of Manchester is appended to the report, which will be sent by the Secretary, Mr. J. Wakefield MacGill, on application to him at the office, 100, Corporation-street, Manchester.

DR. SOMERVILLE IN THE EAST.

MACEDONIA.

After his long stay in Constantinople, Dr. Somerville sailed for Salonica, a city which the Greeks still know by the ancient title which makes the place dear to Christians—Thessalonica. The city has a fine situation at the head of the Thermaic Gulf, lying on the slope of a hill, to the east of the great Macedonian plain. Ancient walls enclose the hillside, reaching from the sea to the little acropolis above. The larger portion of the population are Jews, said to number more than 70,000. They can easily be distinguished by their peculiar dress, a long coloured calico robe, reaching from the throat to the ankles, and gathered in at the waist by a broad sash. Over this is worn, even in the hottest weather, a pelisse lined with fur. The Jewish women, also, have a peculiar head-dress and attire, which is very picturesque.

In this great city, the Established Church of Scotland has for many years had a mission to the Jews, conducted by Rev. Peter Crosbie, who has been twenty-seven years engaged here in this work. He and Mrs. Crosbie showed great hospitality to Dr. Somerville. A principal feature of the work is a mission school for girls, conducted by Mrs. Crosbie, and two Scotch ladies, the Misses Tolmie. It is most interesting to hear these Jewish girls learning passages of Scripture, such as the verses of Isa. liii., and being shown how the life-work of our Lord corresponded to those prophecies.

Dr. Somerville first held two meetings in the hall of the Hotel Colombo; the first was for Greeks, and the hall was crowded, but their numbers were not to be compared with the rush of Jews on the following evening, who flocked into the hall in such multitudes that there was not standing room even at the head of the stairs. So great, in fact, was the crowd, that the hotel-keeper feared to allow the use of his hall for such a purpose any more.

On the second day after the meeting in the hotel—the Jewish Sabbath—Dr. Somerville held a meeting in the girls' school, and was assisted in the singing of Psalms in Judæo-Spanish, by the elder girls. Rooms and lobby were thrown open, but such a multitude of Jewish men pressed in at all entrances, that, owing to the scuffle for places, and the consequent closeness of the atmosphere, the speakers had difficulty in proceeding. These addresses to the Jews, and a subsequent one in a distant part of the city, were interpreted into Judæo-Spanish, by Rev. Dr. Thomson, of Constantinople, who speaks the language with fluency, although it is now twenty-five years since he worked amongst the people. Amongst the Greeks of Salonica there is an Evangelical Church, built by the American Missionary Society, in which Rev. Mr. Sampson conducts service. Here Dr. Somerville preached to several large meetings of Greeks, into whose language the addresses were translated by a young Greek gentleman, Mr. Dorus, a graduate of Robert College, Constantinople, who, at Dr. Somerville's request, accompanied him as interpreter into Greece.

These large meetings here, as well as in other lands, show how great a door of opportunity may be opened to a stranger visitor, which is not accessible in the ordinary routine of resident missionary labour.

THESSALY.

After leaving Salonica, the Doctor and his companions went to Volo, the chief port of Thessaly, which was ceded to Greece in 1881. It is finely situated at the port of Mount Pelion, at the head of a lovely gulf. The first meeting was held in the largest hall of the hotel, and again hundreds crowded in. Here, again, the hotel-keeper, startled at the numbers, feared to allow the ensuing meetings to be held within the hotel, and, accordingly, proposed that they should be held in the open air, offering us the use of his garden. Thus, besides a service in the American Church here, Dr. Somerville preached three times in the open air, a thing unexampled in the town, and one which shows the progress of liberty in Greece.

A railway has been made from Volo to Larissa, the capital of Thessaly, and on April 28 the party proceeded to the latter place. The Demarch of Larissa received them kindly, and in less than two hours, a few bills having been posted in the town, fully 600 people, including many priests, officers, and soldiers, assembled in front of the hotel, and remained standing during the entire service. After the benediction had been pronounced, several priests and officers came up to the preacher to express their satisfaction. The following day was occupied by a visit to the valley of Tempe, and on the next after that the evangelist returned to Volo and took steamer for Chalcis.

In Chalcis much kindness was shown by Admiral Mansell, R.N. The Demarch granted the use of the largest school in the town, and the schoolmaster himself assisted by dismissing his pupils at an early hour. From all over the town the people came to hear the addresses, nor at any of the three meetings were there less than 500 present. Priests, soldiers, and civilians all came in numbers, and, although the seating was not equal to the audience, and many had to stand, quietness and attention throughout marked the meetings.

ATHENS.

A long day's journey by Shebes, over Mount Cithoron and past Eleusis, brought the little company to Athens. As the heat in Athens is very great, it was felt that an audience crowded into a public hall would be impossible, and having met with such encouragement in open air meetings at Volo and Larissa, several were planned for here. Nor was such a scheme without precedent in this city. The orators used thus to declaim; the plays of the great tragedians were performed, to use the description of Euripides, "in the pellucid air" of Athens. Of still greater Christian interest is Paul's famous address on Areopagus, in the open-air. Having already concluded his mission in Athens, Dr. Somerville planned to hold but two meetings in the city. The first took place on Friday, May 8.

By the Ilyssus, on the outskirts of the city, stand fifteen colossal pillars, which alone remain of the famous Temple of the Olympian Zeus. On a temporary platform in front of one of these, Dr. Somerville took his stand; in a half circle round about him were placed several hundred chairs, which were soon occupied. He took as his subject one of the most solemn passages in the Bible, the story of the thief on the cross. The audience, which amounted to about 1200, were impressed with the solemnity of the passage. It was the largest meeting he had held since he set foot in the East. All went well, and quiet prevailed till the benediction was pronounced, on which Dr. Somerville descended and retired. Then a fanatical priest (who had attempted to disturb a service during the previous visit), having leaped on the platform, addressed the people. He did not combat any of the words of the venerable Doctor, but indulged in a tirade against Protestantism. On returning afterwards for something which had been forgotten, the party found an eccentric poet, using the opportunity of such a large gathering for reciting a certain composition of his own.

Next morning Dr. Somerville, accompanied by Dr. Kalopothakes, called on the Minister of Public Instruction, who received him with courtesy, to request permission on Sunday to conduct service in the theatre of Dionysus, but compliance being found to be inexpedient from risk to the old marbles, the Minister acquiesced in the proposal to hold a second meeting, as before, at the Olympian pillars, he offering to communicate with the police to ensure order. It should be mentioned that in the notice of Friday's proceedings the comments of the Press in general, though not displaying malignity, were written in a tone of ridicule, and to this, perhaps, was owing the assurance of the priest.

A TURBULENT MOB.

On Sunday afternoon Dr. Somerville began his second address at the Olympian pillars. In the middle of the first prayer, the same priest who had spoken on the previous occasion stood on an elevated place by another column, and began haranguing the people. Many went from where they were already gathered to hear him. He succeeded in exciting them, so that in a few minutes, shortly after Dr. Somerville had commenced his address, they rushed back—an ignorant rabble—in a state of wild excitement, with shouts and gesticulations, waving sticks and tearing hymn-sheets, and crying out "Down with him, down with him." Dr. Somerville mildly endeavoured to calm them, but they began to throw stones at the platform, one of which struck the interpreter on the head. A large body stood anxious to hear, but the noise of the wild disturbers, whom the priest had stimulated to their foolish madness, prevented further utterance. The police and soldiers endeavoured to preserve order, but the priest standing at his elevated position, looking on, served to stimulate the madness of the people.

At the suggestion of the police and of Christian friends, it was judged in the circumstances impossible to continue the service, and accordingly Dr. Somerville descended from the platform. The police, in uniform, assisted by eight soldiers with fixed bayonets, cleared a way through the crowd, and walking on either side, accompanied Dr. Somerville and his party, and proceeded slowly to the hotel. A great crowd followed through the streets; the people who were sitting in the Square of the Constitution rushed forward to witness the strange procession; people were looking out from the windows of houses and hotels. Dr. Somerville, reaching the entrance of his hotel, turned round, bowed three times to the crowd, and retired. In the evening many friends came to sympathise, and expressed their indignation at what had occurred.

The next day, Monday, Dr. Somerville called on the Minister of Public Instruction, and gave him an account of the occurrence. The Minister undertook to communicate with the Archbishop, so that the priest might be restrained from any further fanaticism. A visit was also paid to the British Embassy, to let our representatives know exactly what had taken place. The same day an advertised meeting, on two hours' notice, was held in the Evangelical Church, belonging to Dr. Kalopothakes; the placed was filled, and all passed off quietly and well. The tone of the newspapers became more reasonable, and several of them charged the citizens with barbarous conduct, utterly unbecoming.

Dr. Somerville and his party returned to England last week.

We have been favoured with a flying visit from Dr. Somerville, on his homeward journey from the East. A telegram was received from him by Mr. McAll, on Saturday, saying that he would be in Paris on Tuesday morning, May 19, for that day only. Meetings were at once planned for him, and in the afternoon Dr. Somerville addressed a large audience of his many English and American friends, in the Mission-hall, 404, Rue St. Honoré. Rev. Dr. Beard presided, and many friends were present. In the evening the evangelist addressed a crowded gathering in the large hall, 8, Boulevard Bonne Nouvelle, being ably translated by M. Saillens. His addresses were attentively listened to both by French and English, and his account of his travels in apostolic countries was deeply interesting.

W. Soltau.

SPANIARDS AT PAU.—An appeal comes to us, through Miss E. J. Whately, from M. and Madame Pozzi, of Pau, for help in supporting an evangelist there. Senor Toribio and his wife, both pious and capable young workers, have been engaged as evangelists, a room has been hired, meetings are held and are increasingly attended. A workroom had been opened for the women, who sing Spanish hymns sweetly, and listen attentively to the Scriptures read to them. A school is greatly desired for the girls, and a night school could then be added to teach the young men to read and write, and give them some knowledge of French. A few real converts among them labour for the spiritual good of their countrymen gratuitously and zealously. About £150 a year would probably keep the whole work going, and be the means of promoting Gospel work in Spain, as well as bringing untold benefit to the imigrants in Pau. Help will be gladly received by the Rev. Horace Noel, White Rose Grange, Woking, Surrey.

May Meetings.

FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.

THE annual meeting of the society for promoting this object was held at 118, Westbourne-terrace. The Earl of Shaftesbury attended to open the proceedings, although the state of his health compelled him to vacate the chair after he had expressed his unabated interest in the good work of the society. Mr. J. H. Fordham presented an abstract of the report. After fifty years of labour the pupils under Christian influences in zenanas can be reckoned in thousands, and those in schools by tens of thousands. By thousands, too, may be numbered the wives and mothers who have received a Christian training. To India and China, the countries which were selected as those in which to begin their efforts, the Committee have been permitted to add Japan, Ceylon, Mauritius, South and West Africa, Egypt, the Levant, and lastly Persia. There remains, however, much land to be possessed. A Jubilee Fund had been opened, which will not close until next month. The following sums are needed at once: £2000 for Japan, £2000 for China, and £1000 to enable the society to enter into a very important station in North India, where nothing has yet been done for female education. It was added that at least £1000 was needed for the general funds, that the work in many other existing stations may be extended and strengthened.

The Earl of Shaftesbury, in the course of his brief address, said: Just see what education is doing for those young men who came to this country to be educated. You may be sure they will return to their homes by-and-bye, and be the means, let us hope, of diffusing the Christian religion among their fellow-countrymen. I have no doubt these women whom you are educating will form centres of good influence. It is very remarkable to watch what may almost be called a general movement in the direction of education. You have only to make your machinery equal to the want which you would relieve, and in a very few years a most stupendous harvest will be reaped.

Mr. Cust gave an account of the society's work in Palestine and Syria, which he had visited a few months ago. A wonderful progress had indeed been made in the course of thirty-three years. In Egypt he had visited Miss Mary Whately's schools. By the development of schools and medical institutions she is doing a vast amount of good. It was work entirely of her own choosing, and its success was greatly owing to her administrative powers, and also to her purse, which she opened freely, spending about £1000 a year. Passing over into Palestine and Syria he visited every school, and found in that country Roman Catholics, Greeks, and Armenians. The country was in a somewhat depressed condition, and the Turkish Government were doing all they could to check the work. There was an extreme jealousy of any institution formed by a European. Bethlehem has a small but very promising institution. At Nazareth there was to be seen the finest orphanage in the world, and one which is magnificent in every way. In the Syrian schools a good work was being carried on, and the same might be said of the schools of Palestine. Ladies who had nothing to do in England might well go out to take a turn in these beautiful countries. Rev. Dr. Brodie, formerly a C.M.S. missionary in North India, said that unless this society had been at work preparing the families of the East, and opening the zenana doors through which the Bible-women might enter, all the grand plans for reaching the women of the East would have been of no value. What the society was doing now was preparatory work for days to come, and he was sure that those who were alive twenty or thirty years hence would see a very large ingathering from the work of this and kindred societies. Dr. Muirhead (Shanghai) testified to the great value and usefulness of the society's work in China. He gave an interesting description of life and work in China, which he said was very different from all other parts of the world. Speaking of the millions upon millions of the girls of China, he would not allow it to be supposed that they were in the degraded state in which they were sometimes represented as being. At the same time, the circumstances of their upbringing were so different from those of girls in other countries that they formed a great contrast indeed. He gave several interesting proofs of the good resulting from wise and careful training of the young.

Rev. C. H. Warren (Japan) remarked that so far as Japan was concerned all the work of the missionary had been done by women, although native women had only been reached very lately. If only more workers were sent out, he was persuaded there would be a very large ingathering. He had had the privilege of baptizing eight persons who had been led to Christ through the influence of one native woman. He thought that whatever work Christian brethren intended to do should be entered upon at once, for in some six or seven years the Government of the country would undergo a change. The Church should work while the opportunity presented itself.

MR. SPURGEON'S COLPORTEURS.

AT the annual meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon presiding, the Secretary reported that the colporteurs' sales amounted to £9000. Eleven new districts have been started; a total of seventy-eight men have been employed; an agent has been sent out to Tasmania, to act as colporteur and itinerant preacher there. Upwards of 1500 towns and villages are regularly visited by the colporteurs every month.

Addresses by some of the colporteurs followed; cases of good done were recited, among these being the rescue of daughters away from home, the reconciliation of neighbours, and in one case the salvation of almost an entire family. Among the books blessed to readers were, "A Peep behind the Scenes," "Jessica's First Prayer," and Mr. Spurgeon's book, "The Present Truth." Many of the colporteurs have been blessed in preaching the Gospel in the evenings, after having sold books during the day. One colporteur during the year visited more than 10,000 families, and held 133 services. Where practicable, the colporteur attends the weekly markets, where he is able to scatter widely the Word of Life.

Rev. R. Lovell, Bromley, urged Christians to take up this work more zealously, and to pray for it more fervently.

Mr. Spurgeon said the Society was quite undenominational, although his definition of undenominationalism might differ from that given by some others. God had prospered the work, for which they were all glad. Even if it had not been successful they would have gone on with it, for they were quite sure it was of God.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION.

THIS organisation held its annual meeting on Monday week at Exeter Hall, when there was a very large attendance. Mr. W. J. Palmer, J.P., presided, and in his address referred to the Temperance work of 50 years as having produced a mass of evidence, on the one hand to the evils of drink, and on the other to the positive blessings conferred by total abstinence. This mission was one of the newest phases of the work, and Gospel Temperance meant self-denial. There were many good arguments in favour of abstinence, but they specially appealed to those who recognised their duty and responsibility as Christians.

A resolution in support of the Government proposal to increase the taxation on beer and spirits was moved by Hon. and Rev. Canon Leigh, who, after passing a high eulogy upon the work of the mission, spoke of personal effort, as being, after all, the great requisite in both Temperance and religious work. Mr. J. H. Raper seconded the resolution in a spirited speech, and it was carried without a single dissentient.

Rev. Dr. Clifford looked back with gratitude on the past progress of the Temperance movement, and contemplated its present activity with unbounded hope. Thirty years ago, when he signed the pledge, the Christian Church seemed to be more afraid of the teetotalers than of the drink. Now, they were the picked men of all the churches; and it was still more encouraging to note that the vast majority of theological students were pledged abstainers. He drew attention to the combination of three forces indicated in the title "Gospel Temperance Movement." The Gospel was the driving power, which would bring them to the glorious goal, a world redeemed with the Blood, and regenerated by the Spirit of Christ. Mr. W. Noble and other gentlemen subsequently addressed the meeting, which was also greatly delighted with the singing by Miss Mary Davies of "He shall feed His flock," and two other solos during the evening.—Methodist Times.

LORD'S DAY REST.

THE annual meeting of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association was recently held in the large room, Exeter Hall, which was crowded, Lord Harrowby presiding. Mr. C. Hill, the Secretary, read the report, which, after referring to the lamented death of Earl Cairns, whose last speech in the House of Lords was in defence of the Lord's Day, stated in detail the steps that had been taken by the Society during the past year to conserve the rest of the Sabbath.

Mr. S. Morley, M.P., said that though he regarded the Sabbath as a Divine institution, he advocated its maintenance as conducing to the social and physical welfare of the working classes. A resolution against opening museums on Sunday, and another resolution advocating the opening of the National Museums on week-evenings were advocated and passed. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Rev. G. M. Murphy, Mr. Weylland, and Mr. Halford. That the audience consisted of the working classes was shown by the collection, which included 848 pennies, 251 halfpennies, 185 sixpences, 86 threepenny pieces, 59 shillings, 12 florins, 3 half-crowns, 2 sovereigns, and 9 farthings.

YOUNG MEN AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

THE missionary spirit is being warmly encouraged amongst Y.M.C.A.'s generally, but it is specially prominent in the Aldersgate-street Branch. On Wednesday last week, an enthusiastic meeting was held in the Lecture Hall at Aldersgate-street, to celebrate the second anniversary of the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society. Mr. George Williams was chairman, and his supporters were each of them a host in himself.

Mr. Hall, hon. sec., read a most encouraging report. A series of lectures and addresses on foreign lands had been delivered at Aldersgate-street by many friends well known in the missionary world. Three missionary students had been successful in passing their examinations and in winning the prizes of the Christian Evidence Society. Rev. George Piercy, who works amongst the Chinese in the East of London, receives many helpers from the Y.M.C.A., and in return he is enabled to render them much assistance. Two members of the Aldersgate-street Association had left for China during the year—Mr. F. W. K. Gulston and Mr. George Miles. The receipts for the year were £156 15s. 10d., and the expenditure £169 8s. 4d. Of this sum, £145 9s. 2d. was spent in allowances and special grants to the missionary members.

Mr. Robert Burn stated that, since the accounts were audited, Mr. Williams had kindly given £50, so that the deficit was wiped away, and there was a balance to go on with. Funds were much needed, however, to continue and extend the work. The Chairman said that the Society was quite catholic in its basis, and its definite object was to encourage the missionary spirit amongst young men. Rev. S. Swanson, of the English Presbyterian Mission, told of the wonderful work being done amongst the Chinese. The people were a patient, plodding race, and he believed there was a great future before them. They were raising up in China a native Church; for it was most important that the Chinese should be evangelised by their own race. Rev. W. Stevenson followed, with some remarks on India, and missionary efforts there. The religion of the Hindoo permeated him, from the very hem of his garment upwards. It was part of his life. That false religion could not be displaced except by the prayerful, constant labour of godly men, both at home and in the great dependency. A Chinese then spoke, in his own language, interpreted by Mr. Swanson, who stated that his Asiatic brother desired to testify to the benefit he had received under Mr. Piercy, through whose ministrations he became converted to God.

Mr. Eugene Stock, for the Church Missionary Society; the Rev. J. W. Stephenson, for the China Inland Mission; and Captain Poulden, R.M., for the South American Missionary Society, all spoke briefly but warmly. Rev. J. Sharp, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, testified to the value of the work they were met to encourage; and Hon. G. Lloyd, president of the Sydney Y.M.C.A., spoke to the great work done by the missionaries in the pacific settlement of the New Guinea question, and by the native teachers amongst the many islands in the vicinity of Australia. The speeches were all interesting, but as the speakers regretted that time failed them to tell a tithe of what was in their hearts, so we regret that space precludes us from giving even an outline of much that was said.

ASHLEY MISSION, BETHNAL GREEN, E.

THE annual meeting of this Mission was lately held. Hon. Lionel Ashley took the chair, in the regretted absence of his father, the Earl of Shaftesbury. The hall was well filled with working people. This Mission has reached all classes, from the factory girls to the policemen, for whom a Bible-class is held every week, and much blessing has been given.

Mr. Ashley made a statement of the work carried on, in which he takes an active part himself. Mothers' meetings, men's classes, a large Sunday-school, Temperance meetings, Band of Hope, Band of Mercy, Juvenile Sabbath Union. The working men who have come under the saving power of the Gospel being the teachers in the boys' school; the factory girl, once in darkness, now a shining light, teaching also in the Sunday-school.

The meeting was addressed by Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. R. Paton, Mr. G. L. Dashwood, and others. Workers will be warmly welcomed, and help received by the Hon. Lady Superintendent, Miss Bontein, 47, Weymouth-street, W.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of this mission was held at the Seamen's Chapel, London Docks, on May 19, Mr. George Williams in the chair. Rev. G. J. Hill read an abstract of the report, which gave a very encouraging account of the Society's progress. All the usual agencies had been sustained, several additional missionaries had been employed, and a further sum of £200 had been paid off the debt on the Society's Buildings in Ratcliff Highway. The Bethels and Rests in London and on the Coasts had been well frequented by seamen, many of whom had become sober and Christian men. The balance-sheet was read by Colonel Handyside, and showed an income of £1720 15s. 3d., which the expenses exceeded by about £78.

The adoption of the report was moved by Dr. H. Sinclair Paterson, and was seconded by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston. The Chairman expressed the pleasure with which he had accepted the office of Vice-President of this Society. He considered it did a wonderful work with its small income, and he believed the Society had a great future before it. Other addresses were given in support of the work.

YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN IN PARIS.

THE Y.M. and Y.W.C. Associations held their anniversaries on May 14. The whole day was given to social and religious meetings. M. de Pressensé pressed home the words "Be glad," not with the joy of the world, but with the joy that comes of taking everything to and from Christ. It is the duty of our young men to react against the pessimism and despondency which seems to cover us as with a veil, and which runs through literature, philosophy, and society. Let the joy of the Lord be the antidote to the bitterness which seems to be the dominant note of the nineteenth century.

The motto-word of another speaker was "Be firm." M. Reveillaud insisted upon useful activity, and recommended the foundation of Blue Ribbon and White Cross Societies. The future of France belonged to the young; let them never forget that. M. Th. Monod, in a speech full of humour, reminded the young people that before all they must be consistent with their Christian profession and not compound with their principles.

The Y.M.C.A. is about to get from the pastors the names and addresses of 2000 of their former catechumens, who are to be visited and invited to join the Association.—Le Signal.

UNEMPLOYED LABOUR.—The friends of the Colliers'-rents Mission have, for some time past, been quietly working, getting situations for men whom they have previously tested. They could, to a much larger extent, succeed in alleviating the hopeless misery of men who wear out their strength and resources in the fruitless search for work, if they were only promptly made acquainted with the requirements of employers of labour. Will you kindly assist in making it known as widely as possible, that in future a Register will be kept of the requirements of employers, and that we shall be happy to attend to and register applications from employers, free of charge. Address Hon. Superintendent, Collier's-rents Mission-hall, Southwark, S.E. J. B. Ruddock, Hon. Sup.

PIONEERING IN NATAL.

SIR,—Some time ago there was a paragraph in The Christian, showing how unwise, if not wrong, it is of Christians in England to expect missionaries to the heathen to supply them with a great amount of interesting information; to be continually asking for accounts of conversions and other results of mission work. The paragraph referred to showed, I believe, that this became an additional care to the missionary, and in some instances may have proved a temptation to exaggerate small occurrences, and mention as conversions cases which had not had time for trial, in order to satisfy the constant demand for results.

Amongst the various and frequent requests I have received for information, &c., one Christian brother implies that contributors to foreign missions like to get value for their money. If this is really so, and there are some Christians who give to those missions in the heathen world where they are likely to get the greatest amount of interest for their money, the sooner they cease to give from such a motive the better. The missionary, toiling amidst discouragements far greater than Christians at home have any conception of, is only too thankful when he can speak of some trophy won for Christ, or even real signs of coming blessing to the praise of his God. But to be continually expected to write of a harvest of souls when we are in the ploughing time, or of fruit in the planting time, only shows how little some Christians at home really understand or sympathise with the lonely pioneer abroad. It would be well for such to share the plodding work of a missionary to the Kaffir people, who are sunk in the grossest ignorance and heathenism, who have no true idea of God, and no words in their language to express spiritual things. Their intense conservativeness and mistrust of all that is new, the difficulty of winning their confidence, their procrastinating character, and their total indifference to everything that pertains to the soul, and has not do with their present gratification, are hindrances to the Gospel which are not taken into consideration by those who are ever asking for successes.

Sad to say, our hindrances in Natal do not emanate only from the heathen themselves, but are increased by our British Government. With all its boasted civilisation and love of liberty it encourages slavery in the buying and selling of girls; and has made polygamy far easier than before the British rule was established; not to speak of rum, which is manufactured in the country, and sold, though illegally, to natives all over the land.

While praising God that we have been permitted through his infinite goodness to see some of these people, in spite of all difficulties, brought out of darkness into his marvellous light, we will go on with our work not as "men pleasers" but as those who serve "the Lord Christ," to whom is given the heathen for his inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. Asking the continued prayers of all who are interested in the work here that the heathen may he saved,—I am, with Christian love,

Albert S. Clarke.

Rock Fountain, Ixopo, Natal.

CAIRO.—The English Medical Mission here has been in operation for seven years, with the number of patients constantly increasing. To these while waiting for the doctor the Scriptures are read with explanation, and prayer offered by Miss Whately. This is the best means of getting at the hearts of the poor Copts and Moslems, &c. Letters received from Miss Whately and Dr. Szourge give very cheering accounts of the great good done by the Mission lately. 2600 patients had been received in the course of six months, all of whom had heard the Gospel preached. Miss Whately is at present in urgent need of means to supply drugs for the use of the poor. On account of war and disturbance in the country, the usual help from travellers has been stopped, though the Mission has been increasing in every way. Help will be gratefully received by Miss Jourdan, 21, Westbourne-park-villas, W.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

LAST year the Committee were reluctantly compelled to discontinue the services of two out of its seven valued missionaries, owing to want of funds; but in the present year they have, in faith that the Lord will incline his people's hearts to make the necessary provision, increased the staff of missionaries from five to eight. Two of these agents visit the English poor in Paris; the six French agents visit the abodes of the Parisian ouvriers, help in Gospel meetings, Sunday and Thursday schools, and visit the sick in the hospitals.

This Mission has now entered on the sixth year of its usefulness. Its French title, "Comité auxiliaire d'evangelisation de Paris," explains its object, which is, not to supplant, but to be an auxiliary force to the various churches and societies already existing, by supplying them with earnest Christian laymen, who aid the pastors in their work; thus Mr. McAll's and Miss de Broen's Missions have each an agent; also Pastors Recolin, Theodore Monod, A. Fisch, and H. Andru, representing the Reformed, Free, and Baptist Churches respectively. The Church of England is represented by Mr. Crooke, who has aided in the formation of a Band of Hope and a Temperance Society in Paris amongst English working men and their wives. The superintendent of Mr. Crooke is the Rev. T. Howard Gill, the esteemed incumbent of the Rue d'Aguesseau church. The other Evangelical Churches in Paris are represented by myself, acting as undenominational missionary, aiding at times in the work of Mr. McAll, and occasionally conducting English services at Chantilly, &c., for Rev. W. Gibson, of the Wesleyan Church.

My object in visiting London is to obtain support and to give information about the Mission at meetings. The annual report will be gladly forwarded on application to the Hon. Secretary, for England, Mr. J. M. Weylland, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W., who will also acknowledge subscriptions, which are urgently needed.

W. J. Lockie, Paris Secretary and Visitor.

TWENTY YEARS' SERVICE.

THE busy town of Swansea has recently witnessed very interesting gatherings in connection with the celebration of Mr. Oscar T. Snelling's twentieth year of labour in the Gospel among its inhabitants. It was during a preaching tour through South Wales that Mr. Snelling (in company with Dr. Elwin, of Bristol) first visited Swansea in 1865, and conducted a series of evangelistic services in the Ragged-schools. These services attracted a considerable number of people, and so much interest was awakened that Mr. Snelling was induced to remain in the town and carry on the work permanently.

A hall in Orchard-street was taken, but it soon proved quite inadequate to accommodate the increasing congregations, and circumstances compelled the taking of larger premises. For several years the Sunday evening service was conducted in the theatre close by, and subsequently in the Star Music Hall. Ten years ago another move was made to the Albert Music Hall—the largest public hall in the town—capable of accommodating some 2000 persons, where Mr. Snelling still continues his ministrations with acceptance and many tokens of blessing.

Thus the work has continued to flourish, and the small beginning has resulted in the formation of an active church numbering several hundred members every Sunday night for years past the crowded Music Hall has testified that the working classes are attracted by the simple preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The success lies partly in the fact that the prayer-meetings, held twice weekly, are exceedingly well attended.

The work from the commencement has been carried on upon the voluntary principle, the pastor receiving no stated salary; the freewill offerings of the people—nearly all of the working classes—have sufficed for all purposes, and this is saying much when it is remembered that the town has for a long period been under the cloud of depression of trade.

Within the last few years Gospel Temperance work has been a very marked and successful feature in connection with the cause. Mr. Snelling is an ardent supporter of the movement, and by his example and energetic action has done much for the adoption of its principles among his own congregation, as well as many other towns in the Principality.

Notes and Comments.

MONDAY last being the Bank Holiday, we have been obliged to close our columns for this issue earlier than usual; communications and donations received after Friday morning will be acknowledged in our next number.

The Methodist Times, commenting on a letter, by Miss Ellice Hopkins, to an evening contemporary, says that every member of the House of Commons who votes for the reduction of the age up to which minors shall be protected, from sixteen to fifteen, "should be hounded from public life at the general election near at hand."

The Irish Times, in a recent leading article upon the issue of the Revised Version of the Bible, had the following noble passage. It would be well if the writers in our daily journals were more frequently to rise to so lofty a level:—

> "When the Revised New Testament was put forth there arose a sudden storm of comment, in which even the least instructed scholars joined, and perhaps prejudice claimed too much authority. But it has never upon any side been seriously contended that any doctrinal point, as hitherto accepted in the belief and faith of ages, was reversed, although, as heretofore, and as always must be the case, there was variance of interpretation. The Holy Scriptures belong to us now as of aforetime in their integrity, nor can the application of modern scientific tests impugn the fundamental facts that they reveal and realise and expound. It is from one point of view—and that not the meanest—an indifferent matter in what phrase or formula their truths are conveyed to the minds of mankind. The time has gone by in which a weak school of logic built its scepticism upon debateable words or tenses, and no revision can reopen a disingenuous and discredited controversy. Rationalism, even by its extravagances, has but set Christianity upon a higher pedestal, revealing still more clearly its revelation, proving more profoundly its divinity, and establishing more indisputably its precepts, as unalterable rules of life and justice, for the time present, and for that to be."

The meetings of the Congregational Union in London have been memorable for valuable discussions on some of the most pressing religious and social questions of the time. No less than three of these were taken up at the Sessions of Friday week. With respect to the recently-published statistics of "accommodation for public worship," Rev. W. Hewgill, of Farnworth, offered some weighty observations. He thought there was room for their denomination to take a far larger share than it had yet done in the work of evangelising England. At the same time, he urged co-operation among the churches, so that the energies put forth might be utilised to the best possible advantage:—

> "Little country towns could often well spare two or three of the churches and chapels with which they were furnished, for accommodation misplaced was no accommodation at all. Many churches would be closed when the reign of hearty brotherly co-operation began. They could not undo the mischief done in the past; but in the future the free churches might divide the land between them, for they could agree not to be all at work in the same place. If the people were to be won to Christ there must be co-operation among all churches."

This is a matter that needs to be calmly and seriously considered, and if Mr. Hewgill's suggestion is only carried into actual practice, one hindrance to the progress of the Gospel will have been removed out of the way. But it will need a large infusion of the spirit of unity and unselfish devotion to be wafted over all the churches before the great goal of practical co-operation is reached.

A thorough-going paper on the subject of "Special Missions" was read by Dr. Macfadyen, of Manchester. He strenuously pleaded for due preparation in view of unusual Gospel efforts, for liberty of action to the evangelist, for personal dealing with anxious souls, and for warmth in the atmosphere surrounding such missions. Religion, he said, was at any rate as well worth getting properly excited about as moneymaking. Many important hints were thrown out in the following discussion, which indicated that the Congregational body are becoming alive to the importance of these special missions in reviving the spiritual life of the churches, and bringing the Gospel practically to bear on the outlying masses.

One of the speakers, wishing evidently to strike while the iron was hot, formally moved a resolution, recommending the raising of a special fund, to be devoted to the carrying on of special missions, and the support of at least one mission preacher. The fact of tried men in the ministerial ranks of other churches having been appointed to the evangelistic office, was urged as a precedent for Congregationalists to follow. This mild proposal, however, appeared to some of the more conservative and less enthusiastic members of the Union premature; ultimately, the matter was referred to the Committee of the Union, for consideration at the autumnal meeting. Nobody would advocate undue haste in adopting such an important departure from use and wont. With the ample experience of the past at their disposal, however, we do not see how the Union will be in a better position to decide in the autumn than they are now. While they are deliberating, souls are living and dying in darkness and indifference. There is a danger, too, of enthusiasm being so quenched by excessive caution that it may evaporate, and things go on as before.

One of the most weighty contributions to the debate was made by Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, of Clapham, who said that while he appraised these special missions at a very high value, they ought as ministers of the Gospel to be as earnest in seeking the salvation of souls through the ordinary services as they would be in a special mission. This is a truth that is sometimes in danger of being overlooked in these days of evangelistic activity, and we are heartily glad that Mr. Rogers gave it such emphasis. Rev. Evans Hurndall, of Bow, was applauded when he asserted that the curse of their churches to-day was that there was so little excitement amongst them. "They were terribly excited in the campaign for disestablishment of the Church, but too calm in the campaign for disestablishing the devil."

The discussion on the "Condition of the Poor," adjourned from the autumnal session of the Union, was earnest in tone, and, for these revolutionary days, moderate in the proposals advanced for amelioration. Dr. Bevan, while upholding all the essential "rights of property," asserted that the laws relating to the distribution and tenure of land were most defective, and needed stringent reform. Rev. F. Hastings contended for such arrangements as would enable the industrial classes to move out from crowded centres and reside in the freer atmosphere of the suburbs. Rev. G. S. Reaney said that the root of the question was "the unfair distribution of the profits of trade;" and land reform, he thought, would never solve the problem, while the capitalist and the middleman grasped so much of what equitably belonged to the toiling masses.

Other suggestions of more or less value were made in the course of the discussion, but we think Dr. Bevan touched the very crux of the matter when, in winding up the debate, he maintained that the so-called laws of political economy have no real moral force in them. They are but the general expression of observed facts, and are not the only rules by which Christian men should regulate their conduct. This is but another way of saying what we have so frequently urged in these columns, that the true solution of our social problems will come when the Church permeates society with the self-sacrificing spirit of the religion of Christ, so that men shall live and labour for the good of their less capable or less fortunate brethren and sisters, as much as for their own.

We have received an interesting letter from Bishop William Taylor, dated St. Paul de Loanda, March 24, almost identical in terms with the letter to Mr. Price Hughes which we quoted in our last issue. After stating that all the party, with one explainable exception, were in good health, and full of hope, the Bishop adds:—

> "We have been charged with all sorts of indiscretions and cruelty for allowing women and children to accompany us to such a country as this is represented to be, but I have not changed my mind at all. All that I have seen and heard on my way, and here, go to convince me more and more that the men alone cannot do the work to be done, and that the children, as well as their mothers, are needed to open our way. If so, we may trust God to take as good care of them in Africa as anywhere else. I am sure you will continue to pray for us."

We need say nothing to ensure attention to the concluding wish of the writer.

We are certain that our readers will sympathise with the remarks made on another page by Mr. E. S. Clarke, of Natal, with respect to the discouragements that surround the path of the pioneer missionary in heathen lands. The task that these devoted brethren have in hand is difficult enough without the temptation to write coloured, exaggerated reports in order to meet the expectation of helpers at home. If we believe these missionaries are doing the will of God and faithfully sowing the good seed of the kingdom, do not let us be too impatient about visible results, while we pray in faith that the results may speedily appear.

We hope that some Christian member of our Parliament will make a note of Mr. Clarke's assertion as to the existence of the slave traffic in Natal, and will interrogate the Colonial Secretary on the point. We find it difficult to believe that our home authorities can in any way be lending sanction to this abominable commerce.

The Peace Society met for its anniversary last week under unusually auspicious circumstances, just when, as we hope and believe, this country has escaped from entering on a deadly and disastrous trial of arms with a gigantic European Power. Still there is ample occasion for the constant protest which the Society makes against the outbreak of the war spirit, and in these troublous times no man can tell how soon the smouldering embers of national jealousy and strife may burst into flame. The warmest thanks of the Christian community are due to the Society and to Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., who now resigns its secretaryship after many years of unfaltering and courageous devotion to the principles of national peace and amity.

We would again suggest that our readers should enable us, by their help, to give grants of tracts to some of the numerous distributors who, at this season of the year, engage in that useful department of Christian service. We are in constant receipt of applications for them.

There are not a few of our laws that need to be either reformed out of existence, or brought into consonance with the enlightened sense of modern opinion. But it would be a sorer evil than the continuance of many harsh laws, that agitators, even if their cause were just, should be permitted to set the ordinary principles of morality at defiance, and imperil the lives of innocent persons. The severe sentences passed on the two dynamitards, Burton and Cunningham, and the strong comments of the presiding Judge, will be complacently regarded by all loyal and right-minded citizens of the realm. There is every disposition on the part of our rulers to deal justly, if not generously, with the sister isle, and those Irishmen who think to befriend their country by such diabolical methods, are doing their best to delay the granting of any measure of greater freedom to which she can righteously lay claim.

The devoted and heroic life of the late General Gordon seems to be awaking a feeling of reproach in the minds of the wealthier ranks of society, who feel condemned for their apathetic and selfish lives by the memory of him who now rests from his loved labours on behalf of the poor and needy. So a Gordon League has been formed among the London "Upper Ten," with the object of carrying on Gordon's methods of work amongst the destitute poor. The design is good, whatever may have prompted it, but, judging from the programme laid down at the inaugural meeting of the League, the execution of it is likely to be far enough from running on parallel lines with "Gordon's methods."

As Professor Drummond faithfully pointed out to the moneyed magnates who have set this project on foot, nothing more foreign to Gordon's mind could be conceived than the mere institution of concerts and scientific lectures. The plan of the League leaves no room for the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as the only lever that will truly elevate the poor; it is therefore foredoomed to failure, so far as any real continuation of Gordon's work is concerned.

It is a mistake to suppose that the "more sure word of prophecy" is intended to be treated as a dissected puzzle, the detached pieces of which are to be put together into a connected whole before the events occur. Had it been the purpose of God, that we should have known beforehand the order and method of fulfilment, surely He would have given the prophetic word in such a way that there could have been no mistake. It is remarkable that in the Gospel of John it is five times shown by the Lord Jesus and by the Evangelist that the purpose of the prophecy was not attained until its fulfilment. See John ii. 22, xii. 16, xiii. 19, xiv. 29, xvi. 4.

To "take heed to the more sure word of prophecy, until the day dawn and the day-star arise in our hearts," does not mean to map out the future, and appropriate its predictions to specific persons, places, and periods, in which scarcely two agree; but, like Mary, to keep it, and ponder it in our own hearts, and obey it.

Applications are coming in to us for a share in our "Day in the Country" fund. As yet, however, the fund is almost non-existent. May we remind our readers of the ardently expected break in the dull and dreary monotony of London life that these annual outings in field or forest brings to many of our poor town sparrows? If all who are so fortunate as to enjoy abundance of fresh country air, and to freely taste the pure delights of rural sights and sounds, were but to give their help, thousands of our city-bound children would have secured to them one red-letter day in the grey calendar of their sombre lives.

As his valued and busy career slowly dips towards its western horizon, the Earl of Shaftesbury continues to receive substantial tokens of the affectionate esteem in which he is held by a grateful Christian public. The presentation of pictures to his Lordship and each member of his family in Exeter Hall last week, by old scholars of Ragged-schools, was an event of peculiar interest. To no man, living or dead, does the Ragged-school movement owe more than to the noble Earl, and his most tender sympathies still go out to the movement. Many well-known public men, themselves highly esteemed for their work's sake, combined to do honour to the illustrious octogenarian. One of them went so far as to say that when the names of our leading politicians are well-nigh forgotten, the name of Shaftesbury will be green in the memories and hearts of coming generations.

"A British Matron" writes to The Times, protesting against the indecencies which, under the sanction of "Art," grace, or disgrace, the walls of the Academy and the Grosvenor. In another daily paper a leader appeared on the following day, adopting the usual defence of these abominations, and, amongst other arguments, endeavouring from two blacks to produce a white. It remarks that—

> "The 'British Matron' does not come forward, in defiance of the etiquette of the purest Court the world ever saw, and say that the dresses of the ladies, both old and young, attending the Queen's Drawing Rooms are cut too low in what modistes, not anatomists, call the 'neck.'"

Other correspondents of The Times, replying to the "British Matron," take the same line of defence, and speak of the scanty dress at dinner and evening parties.

But a foreigner, writing to an evening paper, puts this with brutal, and yet not exaggerated or unnecessary, plainness, thus:—

> "Most decidedly the 'British Matron' is perfectly right; there ought to be at the Academy as well as at the Grosvenor Gallery a special room for nudities, just as there exists a Chamber of Horrors at Messrs. Tussaud's. Those who don't care to see the Ledas, Aphrodites, Phrynes, &c., would thus receive due warning, and might avoid entering those rooms which are specially devoted to mythology. But surely 'A British Matron' has already been to hear an opera or to see a play at the theatre, and most certainly does she go to dinner parties and balls. Though only a foreign gentleman, I can assure the 'British Matron' that I feel very often a burning sense of shame at dinner parties or balls, when the 'nakedness in all perfection of representation' is exposed to my gaze, and that I very often do not know where to look, not even 'to cast a timid half glance,' when my fair neighbour at the dinner-table speaks to me. And there 'the nakedness' is the deliberate work of the ladies themselves, of those British matrons, and not the work of brutal man. Like Alphonse Karr in his reply to the plea of the philanthropists against capital punishment, I would say, 'Que mesdames les [British matrons] commencent.'"

It has recently been noted in a Magazine of Art that Isaiah foresaw the doom of his people in the wanton ways and inordinate attire of the daughters of Zion; and that Napoleon read the handwriting on the wall in the fashions of his Court.

Well might one of the Apostles of the Lord and Saviour will that the women professing godliness should adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefastness and sobriety and with good works; and another require not outward adorning, but the hidden man of the heart, in incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit. "The world will love its own," and however it may excuse, defend, or apologise for the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, it remains true that these are not of the Father, but of the world. And to little children whose sins are forgiven, to fathers who have known Him that is from the beginning, to young men who have overcome the Wicked One, the word comes with authority from the throne of love and grace: "Love not the world, nor the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

MR. HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

ON Saturday week the large hall of the Christian Institute was crowded on the occasion of the farewell children's service, conducted by Mr. Hammond. Numerous letters were handed in by the children and young people, which were read and commented upon. Mr. Hammond spoke at some length, urging all those who had recently given their hearts to Christ to live a consistent Christian life. He gave to the young converts some excellent rules for their daily life, urging each of his young friends to "have a place and a time for prayer and reading of the Bible every day." He related two incidents which he had written out, and are published in little booklets,* which he gave them.

At the close of the inquiry-meeting, considerable time was taken up with experiences of the young converts. Many were melted to tears. One said he believed that he had been the worst boy in Glasgow. He had been twice imprisoned for stealing; but when Mr. Hammond was speaking of the great love of Christ, he felt the burden of his sins, and was led to trust in Christ. Since then he had been as happy as the day was long. A letter was read from a lady, who said that twenty-four years ago she was converted at one of Mr. Hammond's meetings. Now she had one son, a foreign missionary. Immediately after this letter was read, another of her sons related the story of his conversion.

A letter was read at the Noon Prayer-meeting, from Capt. Armstrong to Rev. Mr. McLaughlan. The writer had spent some time in Glasgow, attending Mr. Hammond's meetings, and working in them most earnestly. Seeming to catch their spirit, he went to Mr. McLaughlan's church, and held a series of meetings for children, which were greatly blessed.

Another crowded meeting was held on Sunday week at Trinity Free Church. Some of the young converts walked miles to attend the meeting. The deepest interest was manifested by all present when a number of them related their experience in a modest but impressive manner. Mr. Hammond's address was principally for young converts, of whom the church seemed nearly full; and yet it was found at the close of the first meeting that not a few others were earnestly inquiring the way of life. The longer Mr. Hammond has remained in the city, the deeper has been the confidence in the reality of the work God has called him to do. Thousands will follow him with their prayers. On the following day he conducted a two hours' farewell service in the Christian Institute.

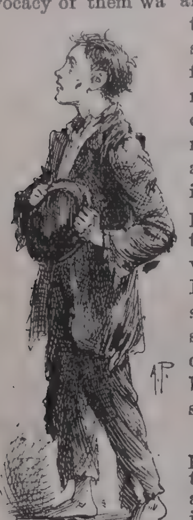
DR. BARNARDO'S ANNIVERSARY.



Seeking admission.

IT was to be expected that an unaccustomed tinge of sadness should colour the proceedings of Dr. Barnardo's annual review in Exeter Hall last week, by reason of the lamented absence of the late President of the Homes, whose able advocacy of them wa an outstanding feature of these recurring anniversaries. His place was filled, of course, as every man's place is filled who drops out of the earthly ranks and joins the great and growing host of the immortals. But it implies no reflection upon the worthy nobleman who sat in the seat of Lord Cairns, when we say that in a peculiar sense the place of the deceased Earl can scarcely be filled by any possible successor.

Putting this disappointment out of view, there was everything about this year's meeting on which to congratulate the institutions and their indefatigable Director. The crowded hall indicated no decline of popular interest in the noble work of rescue and reclamation that is carried on from Stepney Causeway. The facts submitted to the sympathetic audience furnished ample proof that the vigour and effectiveness of the enterprise are in no degree abated. Lastly, but not leastly, the children who covered the wide expanse of the orchestra looked as bright and bonny and happy, and sang as deliciously, as ever. So that, but for the one sombre chord, repeatedly struck, to which we have alluded, all went as merry as any marriage bell.

THE CHILDREN.

The events of the evening naturally divide themselves into four parts—the presence and performances of the children, the speeches, the prize giving, and the Director's statement. As the Marquis of Lorne, the Chairman of the evening, well observed, the first and best and greatest argument that could be adduced for this mission was the tangible and irresistible argument supplied by the children themselves. Certainly it was somewhat hard for anyone gazing at them, and noting the plump, rosy cheek, the tasteful, comfortable attire, the bright and happy look, to believe that almost without exception they were, at no very recent date, children of the gutter—the outcasts of society. When their turn came to sing, and when, under the magic wand of Mr. Proudman, prince of teachers, they poured forth a flood of sweet melody, showing a refinement of taste and culture, a freshness of intonation, and a marvel of memorising, the transformation seemed complete. One was well-nigh tempted to repine that a kind Providence had not ordained that it should fall to his lot to be a rescued waif in Dr. Barnardo's Homes, that he might be privileged with such care and such exuberant training as these young men and maidens are receiving. If the good Doctor were but to bring up at his next anniversary a dozen or so of specimens of the raw material, and place them as a set-off to his bountiful show of the manufactured article, his chain of argument would be complete. He might dispense with speeches altogether. He would only need to point to the two groups and exclaim, "Look on this picture and on that."

We are glad, by the aid of the artist's facile pencil, to supply the missing link. In the initial cut, which represents a youth "seeking admission," we have by no means an exaggerated glimpse of the "raw material." The "manufactured article" is equally well pourtrayed in the handsome stripling in military attire, who is in the act of receiving a prize from the hands of the President.

THE SPEECHES.

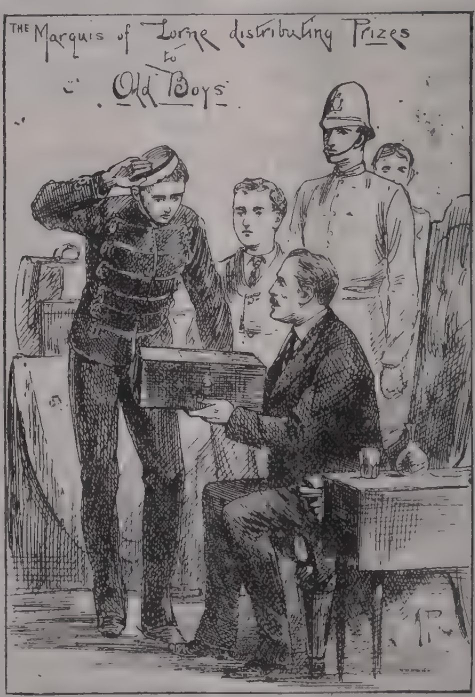
We cannot truthfully say that the speeches of the evening, speaking generally, were of such high excellence as the occasion might have demanded and inspired. The noble Chairman, Lord Lorne, was most earnest in his advocacy of the work. Government, he said, can no doubt do much for these destitute children, but its action must always be of a cast-iron and stereotyped character, and it must be supplemented by the sympathetic endeavours of private individuals, or institutions such as those of Dr. Barnardo. Proceeding to dilate on the magnitude of this work and the need for it, the Marquis said that one of the most admirable features of the mission was the fact that no really destitute child is ever turned from the doors. No stronger claim to public support could be advanced than that simple fact. On the question of emigrating the children to Canada, Lord Lorne said that with care and discrimination in the selection of them there need be no hesitation in carrying out and developing this part of the work.

To Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe was entrusted the moving and the advocacy of a resolution to the following effect:—

> "That this meeting sympathises with the Committee of Dr. Barnardo's Homes in the great loss they have sustained in the death of their President, the late Lord Cairns, rejoices to learn of the continued progress and prosperity of these Institutions during the year—especially in the direction of emigration—thanks God for the success which has been given to their operations, and pledges itself to further measures of liberal and hearty support in the future."

His resolution, he said, was a most practical one, and he counselled those who were about to pass it to weigh well their responsibility. The institutions are called Homes, and in this they represent one of the most remarkable movements of the present day towards the solution of a great problem. They embody the desire of Christians and philanthropists to deliver the nation from those who are being trained up in habits of sin. We have at last discovered, though late in the day, that prevention is better than cure. We have also learned how to people the waste places of the world, even with those who have been taken from the lowest places, and prepared for this high purpose. Referring to the great loss sustained by the death of Lord Cairns, Mr. Peploe said it was the one great desire of that nobleman's heart that the poor children should be not only rescued, made good citizens and good colonists, but also good servants of Jesus Christ. The Queen made him a peer of the realm, but he desired far more than that to possess the higher and nobler qualities of a Christian. Mr. Peploe recounted some of the many practical tokens of interest shown in this great work by the deceased Earl, and closed a fervent speech by predicting that as God had so wondrously prospered and increased the work in the past, there was the strongest assurance that He would supply its growing needs in the time to come. The resolution was seconded by Sir Charles Tupper, of Canada. It was impossible, he said, to look on the children without being deeply touched with emotion at the sight. No better proof of the worth of the institutions could be found than the strong practical interest taken in them by such a shrewd Christian statesman as the late Earl Cairns. Touching on emigration, he referred to the importance of making proper provision for the settlement in life of the children; this could be done by transplanting them to the Canadian Dominion. He did not hesitate to say that, wisely carried out, the emigration might be largely extended. There is there an ample field for the development of all their youthful energies, and they will have every opportunity of becoming a credit to the institution that has rescued and trained them, as well as to the land of their adoption. He re-echoed the words of the noble Chairman by saying that the most eloquent plea that could be advanced in support of the Homes was the bright, beaming, and intelligent faces of the children who were ranged behind him.

As Treasurer of the Homes, Mr. Wm. Fowler, M.P., said that the necessities of the work in the past had compelled the Committee to exercise their borrowing powers. It was greatly to be desired that this burden should be removed, and thus free them for the direct work of the institutions. It was remarkable, as showing the widespread interest felt in the work, that a great proportion of the annual income consisted of donations of comparatively small amount. Mr. Fowler made feeling allusion to the death of Lord Cairns, whom he highly honoured as a personal friend. He also spoke with high admiration of the way in which the boys at Stepney Causeway are trained in habits of useful industry, and thus prepared for the duties of life. He felt bound to say that £60,000, which represented the last year's income, could not possibly be spent to better purpose than in the support of Dr. Barnardo's Homes.



THE Marquis of Lorne distributing Prizes to Old Boys

THE PRIZES.

One of the most important parts of the programme, according to the Director, was the distribution of prizes to young women and young men who were formerly inmates of the Homes, and who have retained their situations for certain periods, with credit and consistency of character. Judging from the sustained interest with which the immense audience watched the long array of recipients, male and female, pass along the platform, the Director was not alone in the estimate he places on the prize-giving. We can well imagine that these annual gifts serve as a potent stimulus to the young people to uphold their own reputation, as well as that of the Homes. The artist has been singularly happy, we think, in reproducing the scene which might be termed the climax of the prize distribution. Hearty cheers greeted the tall youth who is seen saluting the Chairman, but these paled into insignificance before the plaudits that welcomed the stalwart and helmeted guardian of the peace who came immediately after. This member of "the force" certainly enjoyed a popularity which is scarcely accorded to his proverbial comrade who is never to be found when he is wanted! The incident served to show the varied ramifications of the mission, which supplies from its ranks, we suppose, worthy candidates for most of our social industries.

DR. BARNARDO'S STATEMENT.

Amid a perfect fusillade of cheering, the Director rose to address the meeting. He was not going to inflict upon them the Report, which he would take as read. He hoped the reading of it would be, in the experience of many of them, only a pleasure deferred, as in due course it would be circulated. Having been able to glance over its teeming and intensely interesting pages, we cordially second the hope thus expressed that it will be widely read. We have not space even to begin to summarise it; we can only say it is an able record of philanthropic and Christian endeavour, that may be commended to the Christian Evidence Society as well as to the friends of the friendless waifs and strays of this great metropolis. Dr. Barnardo went on to say that he always found it very difficult to utter what was nearest his heart on such occasions. He felt, however, that any deficiency on his part was overshadowed by the deep sympathy extended on the part of the public to the children on whose behalf he laboured. He proceeded to speak, with a pathos that could be derived only from intimate knowledge, of childhood without the joys of innocence or the privileges of virtuous surroundings. It was with such childhood that these institutions had to deal. He could honestly take up the words of one speaker, and say that their first aim was to lead the children to a vital and personal acquaintance with Christ. Some very touching cases were related, as showing the deplorable surroundings and experiences of the helpless little children who daily seek shelter and friendly help at Stepney Causeway. No matter what loathsome and even repulsive ailments the child may have contracted through want, neglect, or exposure; if the need is a real one that need is invariably met. Passing to the mention of the financial position of the Homes, the Doctor repudiated the musty scandal broached by some objector as to the children being at starvation point. That was not at all the case. Their purse was often low enough, but the children never wanted for bread. He related the circumstances under which the capital debt had been incurred, and said that they had now almost reached the point in their history when further large outlay for extension would be needless, and they could devote their whole resources to the immediate purpose of seeking and saving the lost little ones of our great city.

It only remained for the meeting to thank the Chairman for presiding, and this was heartily done, after some graceful and suitable remarks from Mr. S. Morley, M.P., and Mr. J. Rankin, M.P. Many handsome contributions were announced during the evening in response to the appeal of the Director; the sum total of the amounts given or promised was £2400. This is good as a beginning for another year, but it is only a beginning, compared with the ever-expanding necessities of the work.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wiggan have had a month's happy and successful mission service in Maldon and Burnham, Essex. Several persons professed to receive good at the services.

Mr. W. Forbes has held some very successful Gospel Temperance meetings in the large Mission-hall built on the site of the late Cremorne-gardens. It is believed much good has been accomplished.

Glasgow.—Mr. and Mrs. C. King are holding a few weeks' mission in connection with Mr. Wm. Quarrier's evangelistic work. On Sundays the City Hall, holding 3000 persons, has been filled, and the Lord has used the message to the salvation of many. On May 19, Mr. King addressed 800 men upon "The Stage and its Influence," at the close of which several surrendered themselves to the service of the Lord. The mission is arranged to continue till June 11.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The services begun by Captain Robertson (who has left for India) are being continued with much blessing by the Young Men's Christian Association, assisted by an excellent choir from the Young Women's Association. Mr. Charles Inglis has for a week nightly preached the word with great power. At every meeting many precious souls were, we believe, brought to Jesus. The Bible-readings have proved most helpful to Christians. May I ask prayers for a continuance of blessing? Esther M. Clapham.

Messrs. Mateer and Parker's Mission at Blaenavon, Monmouthshire, was greatly blessed to the whole town. Many hundreds listened to the loving messages of the evangelists night after night, and a goodly number professed to accept Christ, several of them having been the worst characters in the town. Services were held in various chapels, also in the open-air. The people generally have been aroused to solemn thought, whilst the churches have felt the Mission to be a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and have been greatly stirred up to earnest work for souls.

A CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S APPEAL.

THE following is copy of a letter recently written by Mrs. Josephine Butler to a member of the British Government:—

My dear —— . . . . I have before me the names of those rich and aristocratic gentlemen who have been patrons and clients of the infamous Mrs. Jeffries for some years past. We do not seek out such knowledge because it is agreeable for us to do so. It is most hateful to us to hear it; but we, who devote much of our lives to a war against vice, are inevitably led on to a perception of the primary sources of that vice. In attending the death-beds, or hearing the confessions of lost men and women, we are constantly confronted with the base acts and impure lives of men of the upper classes—men whom we have to beseech and petition for a little protection for our daughters, and who deny us that protection.

It is the part of Christian charity to "cover the multitude of sins," and I have foreborne for years mentioning, even in private, the names of those who are chiefly responsible for the traffic in human beings carried on in establishments such as that of Mrs. Jeffries. But we all feel now that the time is come when we must appeal to the judgment of the public, so as to bring the condemnation of public opinion to bear upon these men, seeing that our laws give us no hold whatever upon them, and are not likely to do, so long as our legislators continue to refuse us the small boon we ask—legal protection for the young up to the age of sixteen.

I will not, however, myself proceed in any way to stir up public opinion in this direction, without first appealing directly and privately to the conscience (if a conscience exists in them) of each of the aristocratic profligates who have traded with Jeffries. I am now writing to each one. It is possible that God may bring real conviction to the hearts even of some of these men, as He so often does to sinful women.

I write to you, who have long been our friend, and an upholder of justice to the weak, to tell you what we are thinking, and to beg you to understand that if we should seem to speak and act in a spirit of vengeance, it is a just and holy vengeance—a vengeance which has been waiting, kept back, and gathering strength from year to year, throughout a long period; and that it is in the name of the God of Justice that we shall declare openly who are the most guilty persons in this matter of the terrible, systematically-organised murder of souls.

It is no doubt a relief to these high-class men to find a scapegoat in the person of their wretched "broker," Mrs. Jeffries, and the aristocratic public in general combine in a virtuous (?) cry against that woman, and are content to heap upon her every opprobrious name. But there is another public, the sober, middle-class, Christian public, and the suffering portion of the working-class public, who know better how to award to each his share of criminality in the case. These know that of the three classes, (1) the purchasers, (2) the merchandise, and (3) the brokers or middlemen, the latter are not the most guilty. Wherever there is human merchandise, there will be brokers.

The purchasers in this case so covet their prey that they will have it at all cost. It is therefore of little use to pursue the brokers and agents alone. The rich man can, with his gold, purchase not only human victims, but silence and reserve from the police and all concerned. Mrs. Jeffries will presently renew and continue her trade (having had her fines, &c., paid by her clients), and the evil will be as great as ever; the souls and bodies of girls and children will be destroyed as fast as before, unless a full exposure is made of the lives of the men whose gold maintains this iniquity.

For twenty years I have seen down into the depths of these horrors maintained by high-class profligacy, and we have been severely trained to reserve and patience; but it seems to me and others that the time has now come when no more mercy should be shown to licentious gentlemen of high position than they themselves have shown to the women of the poor, both by their personal acts and by their support of legislation calculated to bind down those who have once fallen to a public life of infamy carried on under official supervision. But our vengeance, unlike their cruelty, has mercy and purity for its ultimate aim.

I pray that our nation may be purified, and that God will strengthen the hands of those who, like yourself, have endeavoured to secure a measure of justice for the poor and needy, and those who have no helper.

Yours faithfully, Josephine E. Butler.

BARMAIDS AND THEIR FRIENDS.

AN important step in advance has been taken in connection with the work among this class by Miss C. M. Gough, of the Y.W.C.A. Through the generous kindness of Mr. Samuel Morley, she has been enabled to secure suitable and central premises at 14, John-street, Bedford-row, W.C., for an Institute to which these young women can resort in their spare hours, for social converse and spiritual instruction. Bible-readings and other engagements on Sunday afternoons will furnish opportunities for bringing Gospel truth home to them. The worth of this boon to many young women, especially those without home comforts or associations, cannot be measured, and we confidently anticipate that a rich blessing will follow the new effort.

Miss Gough will be glad of any help from sympathising friends in furnishing the rooms. If our readers could but make themselves conversant with this excellent movement, and could know something of the good it has already accomplished, they would hasten to lend it their help. Our young lady readers who are blessed with happy homes and the fostering care of Christian parents, might well send to Miss Gough a thankoffering for these priceless advantages.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

Confession.—Father Monsabré has announced from the pulpit of Notre Dame, Paris, that the Confessional was more and more deserted.

M. Hase, formerly Professor at Jena, and the Nestor of German Church historians, has finished the first volume of his celebrated "History of the Church." This volume, which is to appear in the autumn, goes as far as Charlemagne.

Le Temoin de la Vérité has an article in praise of large families, urging the French peasant to read the Bible, where he may learn that "sons are a heritage from the Lord," and that avarice is cursed. "It is certain that one of the principal disadvantages of France, a cause of its present inferiority and probable decline, is its small population. We are ambitious of colonies, but where are our people to fill them?"

A Good Work.—A lady, Elizabeth Sophie Gallot, makes known in the Christianisme a plan for caring for French girls, which has received the approval of the Central Committee of the Mission Intérieure. She proposes to form a Union of French Protestant Women of evangelical faith, whose object shall be the Christian education, training of, and caring for Protestant young girls. Madame Gallot does not ignore the obstacles to such a work, but she takes the first step in faith and prayer.

Conference in Baden.—About 180 pastors or evangelists from German Switzerland met on May 5 in Baden. The work and position of the churches in the different cantons were reviewed, and the conclusion come to was, that most of the National churches, enjoying the favour of the Governments, were being overpowered by Rationalism. The question of separation was discussed, with the pretty general conclusion to remain where they were, opposing to official worship a faithful evangelical ministration.—Journal Réligieux.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA.—An English artisan, recently settled in Perth, Western Australia, is desirous of being supplied with tracts and other religious papers for gratuitous distribution among the settlers in his neighbourhood, many of whom are Chinese, and very desirous of religious instruction. An English lady gave him a supply to commence with which is now exhausted. She is ready to contribute half the cost of a further quantity. Any friends disposed to help may communicate with Mrs. Marten, Fern Hill, Swansea.

EXCELSUS.

RATHER than midway on the steep ascent
Which by perfection infinite is crowned,
Stop, satisfied to gain no higher ground,
Or almost at the summit pause, content
With progress past, unanxious more to see,—
Sooner than unaspiring thus to rest [pressed,
(Though all the applauding crowd that with me
I should outvie, and first alone should be)— Low at the base of that same mount I'd stand,
Despised of all for my most humble place,
If so, with eager feet and heart and hand,
I might for ever more, by God's high grace,
Towards his Infinite aspire, nor rest
Until I reached the fair and far-off Best!
E. E. F.

[The young friend who sends this sonnet, writes by way of explaining its "motive:"—"The lines express what I most intensely and earnestly feel. There is everywhere too much stagnation, and contented mediocrity, too little earnest high endeavour and aspiration—in the Christian life, as elsewhere."]

SWEDISH MISSIONS IN AFRICA.

DEAR SIR,—In THE CHRISTIAN for April 23, I see an inquiry about a Swedish Mission begun nearly twenty years ago in Africa. In the Swedish newspaper Missions Tidning, for April 20, I find a record of the Swedish Mission in M'Kullo, East Africa, which is doing good service there, but has passed through times of much trouble.

Nineteen years ago they arrived at Massaua and settled fifteen days' journey west of this among the Kunama tribes. There they carried on their Christian labours at several different stations four years, not without success. Still serious hinderance arose from the conflicting powers of Egypt and Abyssinia; and from the unhealthy climate six of the missionaries together with their families succumbed under the climatorial fever. Two missionaries were murdered, and when the Egyptian powers neither could nor wished to protect the little mission stations from violence, the remaining missionaries withdrew from thence in 1870, returning to Massaua.

From 1870 to 1880 they had their head-quarters in Massaua, where their schools were never closed. Receiving reinforcements from Sweden, the missionaries took up new stations in the north of Abyssinia; but the lawless state of Abyssinia, together with the harassing quarrels of the Egyptians about the border-land, caused serious trouble to the missionaries. Their able Protector Münzinger, French Consul in Massaua, and afterwards Pasha in Egypt, was basely murdered, and one of the Swedish missionaries was likewise killed in the fray. The Swedish missionaries sent several of their members to beg King Johannis of Abyssinia to give them his protection. His answer was that they might reside for the present in his country, but might not carry on school and mission work.

They therefore withdrew, and since 1880 have been settled at a station by them, called "Bethel," but by others called M'Kullo, from its nearness to the village of M'Kullo. It is situated four miles west of Massaua. The site of this mission was bought by Gordon Pasha, and presented to the Swedish Mission. There are four ordained pastors here; one of these is Dr. Wingnist, who studied medicine in Edinburgh, and now carries on a very extensive practice. They have schools here for boys and for girls, a printer, two carpenters, and three native teachers. An Abyssinian assists them in translating. Good books are spread far and wide around the mission. The British and Foreign Bible Society supply this Swedish Mission with Bibles free of expense, printed in four different languages, understood in these parts, and the London Tract Society gives them, free of expense, Christian tracts in the Amharic and Galla tongue. Two Galla youths, brought up in this mission, returned some time ago to their native country, proclaiming the Gospel there with acceptance.

Encouraged by this, a few more missionaries from M'Kullo, and Svensson with others, come direct from Sweden, are now on their way to Galla, accompanying King Menelek of Schoa's caravan. The little Mission Station at M'Kullo has been protected by the English and Italians during the threatenings of war that surround it. One of the young Princes, on an expedition from Sweden, lately let the frigate Vanadis touch at Massaua's shore, and visited the Swedish Mission Station at M'Kullo, bringing encouraging greetings to the missionaries from his royal parents the King and Queen of Sweden.

GLEANER.

THE NEW YORK MEDICAL MISSION.

THIS important Society lately held its fourth annual public meeting in the lecture-room of the Broadway Tabernacle. Prof. Alfred C. Post, the President of the Society, occupied the chair. In his opening remarks he observed that, while not possessing miraculous power, as the Saviour did, it was our duty to use the means which Christian science had placed at our disposal.

The Secretary, Mr. Edward A. Jones, read his report. The managers desired especially to train young men for medical missionaries, using the opportunities afforded by working among the poor in the city for their practical education in both the medical and religious aspects of the work. A house had just been secured, which would afford accommodation for the medical superintendent and his family, and sixteen students. Several students are waiting to enter the house as soon as it is ready.

Dr. Dowkontt, the medical superintendent, reported: From January 1 to December 31, 1884, new cases of disease and injury treated, 2107. To these were given 4405 dispensary attendances and 661 visits to the sick at their homes, making the total 5066. In addition to the professional service rendered, over 30,000 prescriptions have been dispensed to the patients, the medicine being given free of charge, while the patients are encouraged to give anything they can afford. It was a pleasant retrospect to think of so many poor suffering bodies obtaining relief, but what rejoiced him most, the doctor said, was to know that many had also received spiritual blessing, and had been led to forsake sin for righteousness, and the service of Satan for that of God.

Dr. M. Beattie, in charge of one of the dispensaries, had only been engaged in the work for six months, but he had seen the great utility of such an agency. Dr. John C. Berry, of Japan, said the general belief in the East was nothing for nothing, and payment for everything. Orientals do not believe that any religion is superior to their own, but when we go to them with better means of cure than they possess, and bestow the same gratuitously, they are bound to admit that the Christian religion exceeds theirs in the fruit it bears. One thing has been demonstrated over and over again, that wherever a dispensary has been established in a heathen country, a church has soon been formed, and the members have been specially zealous of good works. Dr. B. C. Atterbury, of Pekin, remarked that medical missions were not an experiment; their great utility was a well-established fact. He stated that there were twice as many hospitals, &c., in New York city as in the whole of China, there being only 27 medical men to 250 millions. Dr. St. John Roosa, one of the leading physicians in New York, spoke of the intimate connection between religion and medicine. It might be safely stated that all the hospitals and kindred institutions were an outgrowth of Christianity. He thought they had been kept too far apart from each other; there should be more visible connection between the tree and its fruit. He rejoiced to believe that the medical profession was governed largely by Christian leaders. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. Atkarian, of Turkey; Mr. Eleazarian, of Persia; Rev. Arthur Mitchell, Secretary Presbyterian Missionary Board; Rev. R. S. MacArthur, and Rev. Dr. Taylor.

NAVVIES AT EAST GREENWICH.

ON Friday evening, May 15, a supper was given to over three hundred navvies and others employed on the new works of the South Metropolitan Gas Company, at East Greenwich. A number of ladies subscribed the necessary funds and carried out the arrangements, assisted by Mr. Gardiner (London City Missionary to Navvies), and a number of friends. The supper was provided in Christ Church parish-schools, kindly lent for the occasion by the vicar, Rev, Mr. Reith.

After supper a meeting was held, at which addresses were delivered by the vicar and other gentlemen, interspersed with selections from Songs and Solos, by an excellent choir. The addresses were of a very earnest, practical character, particularly one by a converted navvy, who made most touching and thrilling appeals to his mates to become out-and-out Christians. Through the kindness of a friend each man on leaving the room was presented with a copy of the New Testament. The power of the Holy Spirit was manifestly present to bless.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

IN a letter from Rev. W. W. Cassels, of the China Inland Mission, dated Shanghai, April 7, he says:—

Notwithstanding the great power which the devil has in this place, and abounding sin and vileness, we have much cause to be very thankful. A prominent member of the Press here, who at first manifested very bitter hostility towards the special meetings, has been very much blessed, and is now a decided Christian. Many Christians, too, some of them holding prominent positions, have testified to blessing received. God has been faithful, and answered the prayers of his people, so that Shanghai has been moved as never before.

Mr. Studd and Messrs. Polhill-Turner left Shanghai on April 4, to go up the Juntrehang to Gan-king (to hold a Conference), then on to Hankow, and then up the Han to Hanchung, in Shensi. Dr. and Mrs. Wilson are with them. Mr. Beauchamp has also gone to the Conference. These will be joined by Mr. Hudson-Taylor shortly, and they return here to go northward later. Mr. Stanley Smith, Mr. Hoste, and myself are expecting daily to leave by steamer for Tientsin, on the way to Pekin, &c. &c.

Y.M.C.A. HALL, CAWNPORE.

DEAR SIR,—Owing to absence from home, I have only just seen in THE CHRISTIAN of April 16 last Mr. Foy's appeal for help towards the purchase of the Y.M.C.A. Hall, commonly known as the "Christian Union Hall," in Cawnpore, and having been a member of the Union since it was started, I should like to endorse Mr. Foy's appeal. The "Christian Union" in Cawnpore is a branch of the Y.M.C.A., and is one result of Dr. Somerville's visit to Cawnpore about ten years ago. Mr. A. Foy is senior partner in a large mercantile house in Cawnpore known as "Foy Bros.," and is secretary and general manager, as well as treasurer of the Association. He has for years devoted his evenings to the Christian work in the Hall, supported by his family. In addition to the purchase money, we require about £40 for repairs, furnishing, &c., in all about £250.

Our appeal has an especial claim on the attention of those interested in our soldiers' welfare; as if this Hall is not secured, there will not be a single place of the kind in Cawnpore where godly soldiers can meet informally to read their Bible together, or pray, or bring inquirers. When Sir J. Lawrence, in 1867, issued the order for the greatest boon ever conferred on the British soldier, the setting apart of a room in each cantonment in India, for a "soldiers' prayer-room," one was set apart in Cawnpore, and up to last year was kept regularly open. At the close of 1883 it was sold by the military authorities to the cantonment committee for a police barracks, and the "Christian Union Hall" has been and is still doing duty as a "soldiers' prayer-room." I shall be glad to give any information I can or to receive donations.

J. H. CONDON, M.D., Surgeon-Major,
Civil Surgeon of Cawnpore.
Woodland Hall, Broughton-in-Furness.

MRS. YEOLAND has concluded a successful mission at Barnstaple. She has also visited some of the villages in the neighbourhood. Her labours have been greatly blessed, and it is hoped that the gracious work will spread.

PROGRESS IN SWEDEN.—A Swedish friend from Stockholm writes:—At the present time there is felt a strong desire among Christians in Sweden for more unity between the different denominations. Mr. J. Wallin (Stockholm) is taking an active part in this movement. For some time he has carried on a holiness meeting at his private house. Meetings of Christian workers for conversation and mutual counsel have been held, and much blessing has attended them. Mr. Wallin has built a large church, which is altogether unsectarian, and is intended to be for Stockholm what Mildmay Conference Hall is to London. Ministers from different Christian churches took part in the consecration service at Easter, and since then Methodists, Baptists, Free Churchmen, Plymouth Brethren and clergymen in the Established Lutheran Church have proclaimed the Gospel of peace in this place. I have had the great joy of meeting with Dr. Moon, of Brighton, here in Stockholm. He has preached the Gospel now and then, and has done a good work for the blind.

A SECOND ADVENT CONFERENCE.

THE second annual conference on the Second Advent was held on Wednesday and Thursday of last week at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road. A devotional meeting was held both mornings. The first address on Wednesday was given by Rev. Charles Graham on "The Character and End of the Present Age." The end of the age was to be marked by serious departure from the truth. Here was a reason for establishing believers in sound doctrine, because the time would come when men would not endure it. Lawlessness, with the increase of moral evil, were other signs. At the present time not a ninetieth part of the earth's population among Protestants are even communicants; only a proportion even of these give clear evidence of regeneration. For such a world surely but one thing remains, viz., destruction. The lesson to be learned is, "Come ye out of her, my people," hold fast to sound doctrine, be separate for evil, keep your garments clean, maintain a good conscience, and ever be found walking with God.

Another address was given by Mr. G. H. Pember on the same subject. We must regard the present age, he said, from two points of view. Two processions are ever passing through it. The one, however it fares now, will soon be met by the Prince of light and love, and conducted to the gates within which neither pain, nor sorrow, nor crying, nor death, may enter. The other must shortly be made to confess that if judgment is God's strange work, it nevertheless is his work.

From the Church's point of view, the age is (1) transitory, being about to pass away with all its institutions; and (2) the time of the mystery described in Eph. iii. The mystery is that, in suspending the character of Israel, God is now inviting both Jew and Gentile without distinction to a heavenly calling. If, then, the Church's time on earth be short, let her spend it wholly in her Lord's service, and not be corrupted by the wiles of Satan. Those who adulterate their doctrine, are often regarded by the world as the brightest and best Christians. In the time of the Lord's judgment, many that are now first shall be last.

Those whom Christ finds ready He will remove before the great tribulation as firstfruits; the rest will be reaped in the painful harvest of persecution. The world's children speak of the age as one of progress. But they care not that its triumphs are obliterating God; for they are fast losing their God-consciousness. In politics, democracy prevailing through Christendom, according to prophecy, is heralding the end. In religion, the predictions of the final apostacy are being fulfilled. Three great movements, Spiritualism, Theosophy, and Buddhism, all of them closely connected, are overspreading Christendom, by means which vary from the highest philosophic teaching to the most debasing practices of sorcery. The cry is going forth, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet Him."

In the afternoon a Bible-reading was given by Rev. A. Fausset, based on Phil. iii., showing "The inlook, onlook, and outlook of the believer." The address formed a vigorous exposition of the chapter, and dwelt specially on the oneness of the believer with Christ, the attaining unto the first resurrection, the association of the power of the Holy Spirit with Divine Sonship, and the outlook for the Saviour's coming.

The evening meeting was largely attended. Mr. J. E. Matheson, who presided, observed that the doctrine of the Second Advent, if rightly viewed, was eminently practical. There was danger of being merely taken up with the detail of the subject rather than with the Saviour Himself.

Rev. C. Skrine, of Wimbledon, spoke on "The Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Looking forward to the day when the prophecies which tell of the restitution, and of Israel's restoration, and of the new heavens and earth, would be fulfilled, no one could doubt but that these marvellous changes would be brought about by the Advent of Christ. The Jews would then be prominent, as the dew in the midst of many nations. The elect in Matt. xxiv. were not the Church of God, but the remnant of Israel. The order of events is evidently that of the rapture, the advent of Christ with his saints, the repentance of Israel on seeing Him, and the restitution.

An address followed by Dr. Robert Anderson. He said that the question put by John's disciples to Jesus, if literally rendered, would be, "Art Thou the Coming One?" In Heb. x. 37 it is "The Coming One shall come." It was as much a part of Christianity to wait for God's Son from heaven as to turn from idols to serve Him. The purpose of God in redeeming us remains unfulfilled so long as we fail to be found looking for that blessed hope. The Lord's Supper reminds as of his coming, "as oft as we do this." He would ask them prayerfully to read all the passages which speak of the coming of the "Son of Man," and inquire if there must not be something specially designed by the Holy Spirit in the use of this title, as it occurs in various parts of the Bible.

THURSDAY.

In presiding at the meeting on Thursday morning, Rev. C. Melville Pym, as Hon. Sec. of The Second Advent Prayer Union, reported on the progress of the Union, its membership being now eleven hundred. All information may be obtained from Mr. Pym, The Rectory, Cherry Burton.

Rev. J. C. S. Krœnig addressed the meeting on "The Earthly Jerusalem." The past history of Jerusalem, glorious as it was, would be as nothing were it not for its future glory. The city of Jerusalem will ever retain its name. Its desolation is the result of rejecting Christ and of unbelief. Great mischief had been done by spiritualising the prophecies. The beautiful prediction of Micah iv. 1, 2, had often been applied to the Church, but it is rather a picture of the earthly Jerusalem in the latter days. The Jews themselves are looking for it, and have never been stirred so deeply as of late. They say "Messiah's Advent is at hand." The persecutions in Russia and elsewhere have brought about a great change in the Jewish mind, leading them to turn their eyes to the land of their fathers. The ancient greeting among Christians was, "Christ is risen:" let it now be, "Christ is coming."

Rev. F. Whitfield, speaking on "The Heavenly Jerusalem," observed: There are two great systems or principles in the world, the one representing evil and the other good, the human and the Divine. Satan heads one and Christ the other. These two systems eventually head up into two literal cities, the one being Babylon the other the heavenly Jerusalem. The mystery of iniquity and the mystery of godliness culminate in the man of sin on earth and the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven. The bride is caught up to heaven, and then appears as the heavenly city, descending into the air. During the 1000 years it will be seen over the earth, but will be in communion with the earthly Jerusalem, which will be under its supervision. The speaker then described in glowing language the walls, precious stones, the glory of this city, with its form a perfect cube, and its dimensions fifteen hundred miles. The various facts contained in Rev. xxi. concerning it were dilated upon. Though sin would then be rare, yet the effects of it would still in some measure remain, hence the need of "the healing leaves." At the close of this blessed period there would be a greater revolt against God than ever before, showing the utter depravity of the human race. After the millennium and the suppression of the revolt, this heavenly city still remains, and may be seen portrayed in Rev. xxi. Then there shall be no more death. The title to all this inconceivable blessedness is "The blood of the Lamb."

In the afternoon Rev. C. Graham gave a Bible-reading on "The firstfruits of Rev. xiv. 1—5." At a certain period the Church will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, as shown in 1 Thess. iv. end. But previous to this he thought there would be an ingathering of firstfruits unto God, spoken of in the passage before us. The symbolic type of this is found in the firstfruits of harvest, which of old were presented to the Lord in the Temple, and which always represent that which is full and complete. These firstfruits will not be on earth during the great tribulation; they may, at any moment, be removed. Their holy character is described as being undefiled with the world's religion, and as being without guile, thus resembling their Lord, "in whose lips was found no guile."

This view was not generally accepted, but the discussion invited by Mr. Graham, and in which Mr. Pember, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, and others took part, was carried on in a truly Christian spirit, and manifested the brotherly love and mutual esteem which may co-exist, with difference of opinion, among Christians.

Thursday evening was devoted to the consideration of "The Church's preparation for the coming of her Lord." Dr. Bullinger read 1 Thess. i., remarking that the faith, and love, and patient hope of the Thessalonians were fixed on the person of Christ. The Rev. C. Stirling did not share the view of some, that Christ might at any moment come. The Great Apostacy he thought must first take place. The resuscitated Roman Empire divided into ten kingdoms was not yet. Neither was the Antichrist at present manifest. Unquestionably we were rapidly tending toward these things, but their actual fulfilment had not yet transpired. Until then, Christ cannot come.

Rev. A. Fausset said that readiness for the Second Advent implied the faithful use of talents, as shown by the Parable. One of these talents was knowledge of the truth, and this was to be communicated to others. Daniel's prophecy (xii. 4) referred to such knowledge. Second Advent Conferences were fulfilling this prophecy. The Communion of Saints was another means of preparedness. Having the loins girt, loving his appearing, separation from the world, and daily witnessing for Christ, were also among the things that constitutes the Church's preparation.

Rev. W. F. Gooch, of Norwood, gave the closing address. With much force and clearness, the various requirements of the Master, as set forth in his several messages to the Seven Churches of Asia, were dwelt on as indicating a sevenfold preparation for the Advent. These were love, fidelity in trial, holding fast Christ's name, separation from Church corruptions, walking before God in watchfulness and prayerfulness, service, and whole-heartedness.

The Communion Service was presided over by Mr. Graham, and a large number remained to join in the feast which at once commemorates the First Advent and anticipates the Second.

THE SPIRIT'S BIBLE.

"The prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."—2 Pet. i. 21.

IT is the Spirit's Bible!
  Copyright every word.
He is the only Author:
  Only his thoughts are heard.
Oh, let us love his Bible,
  Written by his own hand,
Though it to-day is printed
  And published in every land.

Was it a veil uplifted?
  His was the raising power,
Showing the distant future,
  Centuries in an hour.
Was it a prophet's whisper
  Heard in the inmost shrine?
His was the breath that breathed it,
  It was the voice divine.

Was it a dream in slumber?
  His was the magic skill,
Hushing the human spirit,
  Bowed to his own sweet will.
Was it an angel's visit?
  Was it a written roll?
It was the same Good Spirit,
  Teaching the patient soul.

Giving the prophet knowledge;
  Giving the choicest word:
Keeping the hand from errors;
  Wonderful honour conferred!
Moved by the Holy Spirit;
  Moved by a Guiding Mind:
Moved in the heart's emotions;
  Moved where they else were blind.

So in the least iota
  His was the ruling will:
Every little sentence
  Showing a Master's skill.
Beautiful, holy Bible!
  Beautiful Word inspired!
God's own talk with his children,
  When ignorant, weary, and tired.

THE PROTECTION OF YOUNG GIRLS.—The Press Association learns that when the Criminal Law Bill, which has passed through the House of Lords, is brought before the House of Commons after the Whitsuntide recess, Mr. W. Fowler will move that the legal age for the protection of young girls shall be raised from fifteen to seventeen, instead of sixteen, as originally proposed in the Bill. There is reason to believe that this amendment will be supported by Mr. S. Smith, Mr. T. Fry, Mr. S. Morley, Mr. Pease, and other Members of Parliament.

Letters to the Editor.

ELEMENTARY DOCTRINES.

Dear Sir,—Different opinions have been expressed respecting the "Baptisms and Laying on of Hands" referred to in Heb. vi. 2, whether they are Old Testament or New Testament ordinances, and I do not write to add to the remarks upon those two subjects. But your correspondent in The Christian of May 14 having understood me to argue that the other four, repentance, faith, resurrection, and judgment, are Jewish (whatever that means), I would say that no limitation was made in my letter. On the contrary, I understand these four doctrines to be initiatory truths of real religion, needful ever since the fall of man for all time and for all people. Indeed, I think that modern revival preaching and writings should give them a greater place, after the pattern of John the Baptist, the Lord Jesus, Peter, Paul, Wesley, Whitfield, and many others.

In regard to the first principles of Christ being "left" (Heb. vi. 1), does not that mean, not left in the sense of being disregarded, or as of no abiding effect, but that those whom the apostle was immediately addressing, and in principle all others, should go forward? They should not tarry in the rudiments of the first principles that they ought to repent, or that they should believe God, or that there will be a resurrection of the dead and an eternal judgment. Nor should any who had been also taught by good things to come, mentally grope their way in such shadows, for that would be virtually shutting their eyes and saying that the Son of Righteousness has not arisen. But now profited by, influenced by, living a life in accord with, all these weighty truths, they should go on to the perfectness provided for the deliverance of sinful man, for their peaceful access to God, for their holiness, for their adoption, through the person, righteousness, expiation, and priesthood of his Son.

Whether, on the one hand, we have as yet individually given sufficient attention even to the elementary truths, and are living responsively; or whether, on the other hand, we have an intelligent knowledge of, and a living, loving, grateful worshipping heart for the true perfection, each reader can judge for himself. The Church of God may suffer from extremes. It is possible to press and to reiterate first principles without advancing; and it is possible to be offering strong meat instead of milk to inexperienced Christians; to press the perfectness in Christ without giving sufficient place to the doctrines referred to, which really are the word of the beginning of Christ; and which would awaken, and alarm, and stir up, and disturb, and create anxiety, and interest, and earnestness, and contrition, and lead to hunger and thirst, and to crying and seeking, and such seeking as ends in holy and joyous finding.

The Apostle Paul's view of the Gospel of the kingdom of God embraced the whole range of the Divine counsel. And though, to take one of the above doctrines—the judgment to come—that considered in an isolated way is not good news, yet it is not only true in itself but it is part of a whole, one of the first principles "of the oracles of God;" and it helps and is necessary to prepare the way of the Lord, in order that to those who know their maladies and dangers, the Saviour and Physician may become precious. The Apostle Paul expressly includes it as part of the Gospel, as he says in Romans ii. 16, "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men according to my Gospel, by Jesus Christ."

J. Van Sommer.

Sir,—In a recent issue of your paper Mr. R. Govett says:—"The religion of Moses was of the flesh, and if the worshipper were circumcised and ceremonially clean, and his sacrifice without blemish, that was all he could demand. Inquiry into the state of the heart, as alive or not toward God, was a question first pressed by Christianity. Faith toward God is the demand of our religion. Moses called for thanks as the foundation of his way of salvation."

In reply to this I would ask, What then becomes of the 11th chapter of Hebrews? Is not faith shown to be the motive power of all the Old Testament saints, from Abel to the last of that noble army of martyrs? And does not Mr. Govett see that he contradicts himself—for, if Moses taught salvation absolutely by the works of the law; what need for "the blood of bulls and goats," &c., typically to take away sin? Again, What is the Scriptural account of Circumcision, but the outward sign of a faith previously held by him who was called the father of the faithful—not a mere ceremony? (Gen. xv. 6; Rom. iv. 11.) Again, "For unto us was the Gospel preached as well as unto them, but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." Also, "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it and was glad." In these two texts St. Paul and the Lord Jesus both teach that the Gospel and Christ's work were taught under the Old Testament dispensation; but if the heart of man was not to be and had not been influenced by religion, what mean those wonderful expressions in the Book of Psalms? It was with the pious Jew as it is with the pious Christian: there was what the schools call the objective work of Christ, taught in type and symbol, and the subjective work in the heart; faith and love, evidenced by keeping the commandments. To such, what was the meaning of Gen. iii. 15: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head"? What the 53rd Isaiah? What the 22nd Psalm? What Deuteronomy iv., if "the heart be not asked for"? &c.

It has, I know, become the fashion to ignore the Synagogue service among the Jews of old, which service consisted of reading and expounding the Scriptures, and to stigmatise Judaism as Mr. Govett does. What is that but to reproach its Author, who claims unchangeableness as one of his attributes—"I the Lord change not"—and thus to play into the hands of the infidel, who says, "You Christians have two Gods—one a bloodthirsty Moloch of the Old Testament, and another a gentle Jesus of the New?"

C. L. Heiser.

THE DISTRIBUTION OF LABOUR.

Sir,—There is one point which the shopkeepers' advocates are apt to forget. What enables a shopkeeper to live? in which I include all his expenditure for rent, food, clothing, &c. Clearly he must pay for all these out of his profits, i.e., by charging more than he pays for them. This he is fully entitled to do so long as he is a necessary link between the producer and the consumer. If a consumer cannot get his goods at first hand and pay a price which will enable the workman to live decently, or if for his own convenience he prefers to get them at second-hand through a middleman, the shopkeeper, then the latter may justly claim to be paid for his trouble, in other words to be supported by an addition to the price. Shopkeepers do not increase the value (which is not the price) of the goods they sell; they only distribute them and the buyers support them, quite justly so long as they are necessary, as many are But if by a little system men can arrange for one distributor to do as well as three it is a great gain to the community, for it sets two free to work and add thereby to the wealth of the whole.

At present, one of the great causes of distress is the existence of a vast number of totally unnecessary shopkeepers, who though working hard in one way through the competition among themselves, are useless to the country, eating up food and destroying goods without increasing anything, and at the same time, through the competition, forcing down the wages which the real worker gets, to starvation point. I do not say that the consumer should pay less, but there should be far fewer who intervene and claim a share of the money at the expense of the working man. All who are thus unnecessary are really levying black-mail.

What would these shopkeepers think of a medical man who should blame them for not employing him whenever they have a cold or other ailment which they treat with home-remedies? Surely it would be unreasonable for him to say, "You must not take any medicine which is not procured through me, and for which I am not paid." Doctors, I suppose, are necessary, but nobody goes to them unless they are obliged, and if one is sufficient all beyond are useless consumers. At present the competition among shopkeepers (each trying to undersell his neighbour, and the survivor being, not the fittest, but the one who has the lowest rent, or other advantages and fewest expenses) is the cause of this outcry against co-operation; and the cause of this glut is the contempt for honest work, which is considered degrading or not sufficiently remunerative.

The time must come when, for the good of all, each man shall be paid in accordance with the value of his services to the nation, whether as a producer or distributor, when, if a man will not work he will have nothing to eat, and when a man who simply lives by appropriating a portion of the labour of others, will be as much detested as the slaveholder who appropriates it all. True co-operation, both in production and distribution, is a thing to be promoted in every possible way until the State is prepared to organise and carry out both on a large scale.

By the increase of workers wages may possibly be reduced, but not if the profits go chiefly to the workers; or if prices, and hence profits, are reduced, the smaller wages will purchase a great deal more, in fact, all the necessaries and many of the luxuries of life. But this will never happen without a revolution, i.e., under compulsion, overcoming the selfishness and greed of men, and I doubt not it will be the law of the coming kingdom of righteousness and peace.—Yours truly,

R.

WHAT IS THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND COMING TO?

Dear Sir,—Many were truly thankful to you for denouncing in such bold language, some weeks since, the un-Christlike and unscriptural act of one of our bishops, in keeping back prizes from some unbaptized children, although they were rightly won. But this act is only the result of what is tolerated in our Church, and mild compared to some, showing us too plainly that the Acts of the Reformation are to be things of the past, and the blood shed by our noble martys forgotten and ignored. Evangelical High Churchmen, High Churchmen, and Ritualists are all, more or less, rowing in the same boat, and certainly playing into each others' hands. Their expressions and acts may differ, but underneath there is the same vein of poison in their belief concerning the Sacraments. How often a sermon by a High Churchman is admired, publicly praised, and held up as pure Gospel. Undoubtedly it is; but alas! they do not stop there—they tack on the Sacraments, and encourage the Confessional.

Perhaps some of your readers are not aware that a certain bishop, whose address you have been commending, indulges in the latter, although he is known to preach a good evangelical sermon, and enforce consecration. Surely this is robbing Christ of his priestly office, and the good evangelical sermon cannot atone for such teaching. This is certainly a crisis in our Church's history, and it behoves every true child of God to denounce all this insidious evil in unvarnished terms, and not in any way to compromise.

In my recent Brighton Mission several bound by these galling fetters attended the meetings, and, thank God, were truly converted. Of course they have been excommunicated for the awful sin of joining a so-called schism! One poor girl, priest-ridden and persecuted, has come out very brightly for Christ and renounced all this evil. She gave me the three books presented to her by these people, and to show you the poison they contain I just enclose a few extracts. These men are seeking to get upon the Committees and Councils of Church Societies, and in a great measure succeeding; also seeking curacies in Low Church parishes, and gradually spreading the poison. It is undoubtedly a part of a great conspiracy which will be painfully understood when too late, and mourned over by those who have not the moral courage to oppose and denounce it. I could tell you of many sad acts which have come under my notice during the past few years.

EXTRACTS.

"The First Catechism for the Children of the Church."

Q. What is Baptism? A. Washing away of sin.

Q. Can a child go to heaven with sin in its soul? A. No.

Q. How can this sin be washed away? A. By baptism.

Q. Whose children are we made in baptism?

A. The children of God.

Q. What other sacrament is necessary for all men?

A. The sacrament of Christ's Body and Blood.

Q. What commandment did Christ give his Apostles?

A. He told them to "Do this" in remembrance of Me.

Q. What took place when the Apostles spoke the same word?

A. The bread and wine became Christ's true Body and Blood.

Q. Did our Lord give this power to anyone else?

A. Yes; to the bishops and priests who came after the apostles.

Q. What is the Holy Communion besides a sacrament?

A. It is also a sacrifice. [In plainer words. "A mass."]

Q. Can our souls have any true life without it?

A. No; they cannot.

Common sense as well as religion tells us that only children that have had Christian baptism can have Christian burial. Those only who were given to God in his appointed way when they were alive, can be committed to his care when they are dead.

"Before the Altar. The Devout Christian's Manual."

The Altar.—The first object that attracts our notice on entering the church should be the altar with its cross. The altar is the place where the eucharistic sacrifice is offered. It is, as it were, a memorial of Calvary, for there is celebrated the memorial of our Saviour's passion and death. . . .

Towards the altar it is right to bow as we enter and leave the church, . . . and, if the blessed sacrament be upon it, to bend the knee.

Lights.—There should be lighted candles on the altar during Communion time, both as a sign of joyful welcome to our King, who then comes among us, &c.

One reason for the Confessional: We are checked in sin by the prospect of having to confess it, and so we are helped to perseverance.

An Act of Reparation.

O Lord Jesus Christ, who for our sake didst in thy bitter passion suffer shame, and blows, and spitting, at the hands of sinners, and who dost still expose Thyself to the profaneness of ungodly men, rather than withdraw thy sacred body from our churches; grant us grace to bewail, with true sorrow of heart, the irreverence shown to Thee, and to repair as far as in us lies, with heartfelt devotion, the many insults which Thou hast received, and art daily receiving in this wondrous mystery: who livest and reignest, &c.

"The Way of Life. Compiled by a Priest. Edited by Rev. T. T. Carter, M.A., Rector of Clewer."

. . That, by the almighty power of this Holy Spirit, they may become the body and blood of our Lord. The priest prays, too, that through the sacrifice of the Eucharist now being offered, and in union with our Lord Jesus Christ's sacrifice upon the cross, it would please God to bless the whole Church both living and departed, in their several states and conditions, &c.

I could quote much more, but this will show whither our Church is drifting.

Yours very truly,
W. Spencer Walton.

CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

After all that has been said on this subject, many people practically deny both the desirability and possibility of the conversion of young children. The truth of the subject needs to be uttered again and again. This question may yet arise for discussion in bodies of religious men: "Can any persons but young persons be converted?" The experience of some pastors leads them to affirm that fewer persons fall of those who were converted when young than of those who were converted when advanced in life. Of course these young children need careful training. That training can be given to them partly in their Sunday-school class, but more especially by the pastor in a class for that purpose. We emphasise the duty of labouring and praying for the conversion of children. We emphasise with equal earnestness the subsequent duty of training with the utmost care those who have early professed Christ.

A serious obstacle to the conversion of young children is the unbelief of even Christian parents. They will pray earnestly for the conversion of their children all through their years of infancy, and into their youthhood. When God answers their prayers there are few to recognise the answer. They are like those who prayed for Peter's deliverance, and when God answered them and sent Peter to the gate, refused to recognise the answer and left Peter out in the cold. Parents need line upon line and precept upon precept touching this matter. Pastors are sometimes restrained from speaking the whole truth, especially to Christian parents. The pastor assumes that they must know their duty. From a mistaken notion of parental responsibility, they refuse to recognise God's work in their children, and hesitate to do their own duty in urging the children to make a profession. They forget the tremendous responsibility they incur by refusing to do their duty. Many children are now wandering in mazes of doubt, just because their parents failed to recognise the evidence of God's grace and to guide the children in making a profession. Parents do not get rid of the responsibility by failing to do their duty. The hope of the Church is in the conversion and training of the young. This subject is worthy of the earnest thought and most laborious effort of our best pastors.—Chicago Standard.

THE GERMAN Y.M.C.A. IN LONDON has been organised on a new footing, and is anxious to reach the multitudes of young Germans in London, and bring them under the influence of the Gospel. They have a reading-room, library, &c., at 28, Finsbury-square, E.C., open to any who like to make use of them. Every night some kind of meeting is held. English friends who know Germans are requested draw their attention to the association.

OUR HIDDEN HAMLETS.—2.

With David's charge to Solomon, as his own pious father's charge to himself, my old friend, Tom Heatherfield, left Oxford to enter the ministry of "the Church of England." I found him in a hill-side parish, where for some little time he had been plodding on amid the delights and cares of a country parson. A sober-minded man was Tom; nothing calculated to disturb the settled order of things was likely to find favour with him; and, as his brother Ned was inclined to believe, had the words, "From all religious excitement" been appended to one of the sentences of the Litany, no one would have prayed "Good Lord, deliver us," more fervently than he.

But praying, expecting, and working for a blessing he found at length that, if this was to come, he must take it as God might be pleased to give it. After a short absence from home, he one day returned to find that the friend who had filled his pulpit while he had been away, had been used of God in the seeming conversion of two or three of his parishioners. He regarded this kind of thing rather suspiciously, for it was out of the ordinary course of affairs; but he invited the other a second time, and a second time conversions followed immediately on the preaching of the Word. His friend was an evangelist, and the two now arranged for a regular mission. This was more or less of a success, and then, at the other's suggestion, our young vicar asked Henry Lakin to go over and take a fortnight's special services.

A marvellous work of God now began. Drunkards were not only taken out of the slough in which they had long been wallowing, but were actually saved through faith in the Lord Jesus. The foreman of a mill, who held a most responsible position in the village, was reclaimed from a long course of backsliding. A poor Papist, on the very brink of the grave, was brought to see Jesus as his only priest. A tradesman who had but too successfully pursued a very questionable calling, was led to confess his sin, and renounce his evil practices; indeed, numbers were undoubtedly converted to God.

I shall never forget, in connection with these services, a scene I was privileged to witness. One night a lady had been invited from a distance to see what the Lord was doing among her friends. She came, and brought her daughter; the two were saved the very same evening, and oh, to see them in each other's arms, mother and daughter after the flesh, sister and sister in Jesus, kissing each other and praising God together! There was great joy in that hamlet.

One worker, through all this glorious time, though not forgotten, has not yet been named. To no one, under God, did that parish owe more, nor owes more still, than to Mrs. Heatherfield. Differing much, in many respects, from her friend Mrs. Trentham (of my previous paper), yet equally earnest in the Master's work, she seemed to be here, there, and everywhere. She fetched people from the street, and placed them under the sound of the word; she sought anxious faces in the congregation, and led those who bore them into the "inquiry-room;" she remained here as long as work was to be done, and on the morrow sought to minister to other anxious souls, while visiting them at their homes.

Mission now followed mission. I never could go too often myself, when in the neighbourhood. Henry Lakin was invited again; the Christ Church evangelists have gone from Burton-on-Trent; and often has Captain Smith been asked for the services of the worthy fellows under his command, of "The Evangelisation Society."

But better, perhaps, than this, the regular parochial work has been placed on quite a new footing. Tom Heatherfield has now a band of lay workers, who conduct cottage-meetings in every part of the parish. They have an early gathering on the Sabbath morn, and when I was last with them they held meetings for prayer, for mutual exhortation, and the study of God's word, six nights out of the seven in the week.

A dear old hyper-calvinistic friend of the Heatherfields and myself was inclined to murmur at the work, while hearing of it, at a distance from it; but when he had been and seen for himself he was constrained to admit its reality. Then some of Tom's clerical brethren, at first, were fond of predicting all kinds of evils as likely to arise from the "unhealthy excitement" he encouraged in his parish. One had heard, on good authority, how missions, evangelistic services, and the like, had tended to promote immorality in some other parish. One did not care for ignorant people to be always telling of the pardon of sin; he wanted them to live out their profession in everyday life; while another prophesied that the so-called converts would never stand the test of time. Yet, in spite of all that was said, where immorality throve, righteousness now reigns, and most favourably would the lives of Tom's parishioners compare with those of the good man's people, where their "daily life" has received so much attention at the mouth of their worthy pastor. The converts, too, have stood the test of time.

Often found as passengers on the Midland Railway that runs near the borders of my friend's little charge, are the vicars and rectors of large parishes, where souls are numbered by the thousand; but I greatly question if a half of these could produce from their much larger congregations more men and women able to testify to an assured acceptance in the Lord Jesus than could my friend, Tom Heatherfield, from his little flock.

John E. Linnell.

PILGRIMS IN THE EAST.

In a letter to The New York Evangelist, a correspondent, who travelled by water to Constantinople, writes:—

"Our boat was crowded with pilgrims, who filled the deck as closely as it was possible to pack human beings. They were not all Christian pilgrims; some were pilgrims to Mecca, from which they were now returning. There were also a few Jews on board. Thus the pilgrims were of several religions, as well as of many nations, and I was curious to see how they would regard each other. Looking down upon them from the upper deck, I could not but be amused at the way in which they kept apart from each other. Of course the Greek and Russian pilgrims, returning from the Holy Week at Jerusalem, would have nothing to do with misbelievers.

"The Jews and Moslems said their prayers regularly every day, but they would not pray with each other. The Jews wore their phylacteries on their foreheads, and a strip of parchment round the left arm, near the heart, on both which were inscribed texts from the Old Testament, which they thus kept on their persons as a token upon the hand and frontlets between the eyes, that the Lord had brought them out of Egypt. When they prayed, they turned to the ship's side, as if they would not have even the breath of prayer float over the heads of the wretched unbelievers. Not only would they not eat with the Moslems: they would not touch them even in their sleep.

"Although it was very difficult, in the crowded state of the ship, to prevent their coming in contact, yet the Jews would lie down on the deck as far away from the Moslems as they could get; and no doubt it was a great comfort to both that they could thus keep apart, and each make its own heap of rags. Of course we smiled at all this, but are not these religious hatreds quite as respectable as many that obtain among those who call themselves by the sacred name of Christian?"

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For great blessing upon four weeks' Gospel Services in a Gospel tent at Westbury-on-Trym, commencing May 31.——For great blessing upon a Mission Hall to be opened at Parkgate, Dorking, on June 2.

BRIGHTON.—A very successful mission for men has been held here by a deputation of medical students and others from Edinburgh University. Professor Drummond, of Glasgow, has also given two stirring addresses in the Banqueting Room of the Royal Pavillion. The services are being continued by members of the Y.M.C.A. at Steine House, and a deep impression is being made.

Notes on Daily Readings.

MAY 28.—ROMANS III.

v. 3.—"Shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?"—R.V. makes the contrast more pointed, "Shall their want of faith make of none effect the faithfulness of God?" Godet sees here an anticipation of the subject of chap. xi.—Israel's final salvation—and paraphrases the passage thus: "From the fact that Israel has rejected the Messianic salvation, does it follow that God will not fulfil all his promises to them in the future? By no means; his faithfulness will find a means in the very unfaithfulness of his people of magnifying itself."

vv. 7, 8.—Such a view, however, of God's purposes being carried out, in spite of the unfaithfulness of man, requires to be carefully guarded against abuse. It does not excuse man's sin, and leaves under just judgment those who would say, "Let us do evil that good may come."

vv. 9-21.—Very striking is this accumulation of charges of guilt and depravity of nature against man as such, before God's righteousness is unfolded. It shines all the brighter by reason of this contrast.

vv. 21-23.—"The righteousness of God," or "God's righteousness," which occurs twice in vv. 21, 22 is evidently that which God provides. "His righteousness," which occurs twice in vv. 25, 26 is as evidently the righteousness of his own character. Both thoughts meet together in the latter half of ver. 26, "that He might be just"—His righteousness. "The justifier of him that hath faith in Jesus," R.V.—God's righteousness.

v. 30.—"Seeing it is one God which shall justify the circumcision by faith and the uncircumcision through faith"—Commentators are much puzzled to account for the different prepositions "by" and "through" used here. It is strange that they almost all omit reference to that which makes it clear, viz., that the second "faith" has the article, whereas the first has not. R.V. notes this in the margin. If we render this definite article by a demonstrative pronoun, as is sometimes done, it will show its force: "Justify the circumcision by faith and the uncircumcision through this faith." Having opened the door of faith to the Jews, God lets the Gentiles enter in through this same door.

MAY 29.—ROMANS IV.

Three distinct principles of Gospel salvation had been enunciated at the close of the last chapter, which (to aid the memory) may be put thus: (1) Boasting excluded. (2) Gentiles included. (3) Making void the law through faith precluded. These three principles are now taken up in this chapter and illustrated in the case of Abraham. Verses 1—7 illustrate "boasting excluded." Verses 9—12 illustrate "Gentiles included," and verses 13 to the end illustrate "making void the law precluded," because the blessing is shown to have come from another source, "grace," and through another channel, "faith," which does not interfere with law, but rather "establishes" it, for the law's sentence is now carried out in a Substitute, who "was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification" (ver. 25).

On this last verse Godet has some admirable remarks. After insisting on the preposition "for" being rendered "on account of" in both clauses, as the Greek properly requires, he says: "In the same way as Jesus died because of our offences, that is our merited condemnation, He was raised because of our (accomplished) justification. Our sin had killed Him; our justification raised Him again. When the debtor is proved insolvent, his security is thrown into prison; but as soon as the latter succeeds in clearing the debt, the debtor is legally free, and his security is liberated with him, for he has no debt of his own."

MAY 30.—ROMANS V.

The division of chapters is here unfortunate as severing the connection between the ground of justification stated in the last verse of chap. iv. and the enjoyment of it by faith with which this begins. Godet's words may again be quoted: "And now what is the part of faith in relation to the resurrection thus understood? Exactly that of Abraham in regard to the Divine promise. On hearing the promise, he no longer saw himself as he was, but he considered himself as the promise made him. So the resurrection of Christ once completed we have no longer to see ourselves as we are in ourselves, but as this fact reveals us to our view: justified. For this resurrection is the incarnation of my justification. If death is the payment of my debt, resurrection is, as it were, the acknowledgment of this."

vv. 12-21.—The key to this most interesting passage is in the words spoken of Adam, ver. 14, "Who is the figure (or type) of Him that was to come." Adam transmitting to all his posterity sin and death is a type of Christ transmitting to all his posterity righteousness and life. But as we are united to Adam by the first birth, so there must be a new birth to connect us with Christ.

vv. 15, 17.—"Much more."—"The meaning is (says Godet), Much more certainly. He is not aiming to establish a contrast of quality (between life and death), or a contrast of quantity (more of life than of death). It is a higher degree of certainty which he enunciates and demonstrates. Justified, we shall reign still more certainly in Christ, than as condemned we are dead in Adam."

MAY 31.—ROMANS VI.

There are two distinct questions asked in verse 1 and verse 15. The first is, "Shall we continue in sin?" and the other, "Shall we sin?" which are not to be confounded. The one has to do with a sinful state or condition; the other with sinful action. The deliverance from the sinful state is by the death of Christ, into which the believer has been baptized outwardly in water, really and effectually by the Holy Ghost. This union with Christ in his death and resurrection is the ground on which the believer is told to reckon himself "dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God in Christ Jesus," R.V. It is not reckoning oneself "dead to sin," and "alive to God" in oneself, but in Christ Jesus; and therefore this reckoning belongs to the domain of faith rather than of experience. The practical conflict with sin begins at verse 12, "Let not sin reign therefore," &c. &c., and is taken up again in answer to the second question, "Shall we sin because we are not under the law but under grace?" and is carried on to the end of the chapter.

v. 19.—"I speak after the manner of men because of the infirmity of your flesh."—Mostly explained of intellectual infirmity or dulness of apprehension which made the figure used necessary. But Godet rightly urges that the infirmity of the flesh denotes a moral rather than an intellectual state, and so the exhortation to holy practice is based on the fact that it is called for, seeing that the flesh is what it is.

vv. 1-6.—The following remarks of Dr. Gifford (the present Archdeacon of London), in the Speaker's Commentary will be found very helpful to a right understanding of the illustration of the wife freed from the marriage law by her husband's death:—

"St. Paul's application of the figure is quite clear if we follow his own guidance. The wife represents that inmost self, or personality, which survives all changes, moral or physical, and retains its identity under all conditions of existence. The first husband is 'our old man' (vi. 6), and as long as the old man was alive we were under the law. The death of the first husband is the crucifixion of 'our old man' with Christ. The wife set free by her husband's death, and herself made dead to the law of the husband, answers to the soul set free by the crucifixion of 'the old man' and itself thereby made dead to the law. The purpose of the freedom thus acquired is the same in your case as in hers, 'that ye might be married to another, to Him who was raised from the dead.'"

v. 9.—"I was alive without the law once."—To what period does he here refer? Two principal answers are given. To his early childhood, say some, before he was taught the law; to the period before his conversion, say others, when the spiritual claims of the law had not yet reached his conscience. The latter view is much more satisfactory, as corresponding with Scripture teaching as to the sin-convincing work of the Holy Spirit

v. 14.—"I am carnal, sold under sin."—Rev. H. Moule remarks, "To the question, 'When was he thus sold?' we answer, 'At the fall and in Adam.'" The same author (Cambridge Bible for Schools) makes the following remark on the vexed question, Whether the Apostle in the passage that follows describes the experience of a converted or unconverted man? "The primâ facie view of the passage certainly is, that by the first person and the present tense St. Paul points to one aspect of his own, then present, experience. And is not this view confirmed by what we know of his experience elsewhere? (1 Cor. ix. 27; Gal. v. 17.)"

v. 3.—"God sending his own Son . . . condemned sin in the flesh."—Beware of the explanation which makes this refer to Christ condemning sin by his life. However true that may be, it is not the truth taught here, for God, not Christ, is the nominative to the verb "condemned," and it was at the cross that God condemned sin.

v. 4.—"That the righteousness (ordinance, R.V.) of the law might be fulfilled in us."—The word for righteousness is used in Rom. v. 16 for "justification," and is there, as here, opposed to "condemnation." The common objection to taking it here in this sense is that sanctification, rather than justification, seems to be the subject of the passage. But this objection fails to discriminate between a sentence of justification pronounced and one fulfilled or carried out. When a man is condemned to death the sentence of condemnation is pronounced, but when he is put to death the sentence is fulfilled. So when the law awards life, the sentence of justification is fulfilled in those into whom life is put. And those "who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit," as the chapter goes on to show, are those who give evidence of possessing spiritual life.

v. 24.—"We are saved by hope."—"By hope were we saved" (R.V.). So far right that the word hope is put into the emphatic position it occupies in the Greek, and the verb is put rightly into the past tense; but the R.V. takes no notice of the definite article before "hope." The most accurate translation gives by far the simplest meaning: "To this hope (the one spoken of before) were we saved."

JUNE 3.—ROMANS IX.

v. 3.—"I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren."—"The form of expression (literally, 'I was wishing' or 'praying') implies a real but passing wish, not calmly weighed and deliberately retained, but already resigned as impracticable."—Speaker's Commentary. "The words here were perhaps written with a tacit reference to the memorable passage, Exodus xxxii. 32, 33. The answer there given to the request of Moses would alone suffice to forbid the completion of any similar request thereafter."—Camb. Bible for Schools.

v. 13.—"Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated."—"Comp. Genesis xxix. 33 and 30 for proof that this word, in contrast to love, need not imply positive hatred, but the absence of love, or even less love. One verse there tells us that Jacob "hated" Leah, the other that he "loved Rachel more."—Camb. Bible for Schools.

v. 18.—"Whom He will He hardeneth."—Six times, it is said, the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart, but before this, six times it is said that Pharaoh hardened his own heart. It is like what we read in i. 28: "Even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind."

v. 22, 23.—"Vessels of wrath fitted to destruction." "Vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory."—The agent in the first expression "fitted to destruction" is not expressed, but the contrast with the other expression, where God is described as the agent, implies that God is not the agent in the first. It may be "the spirit who worketh in the children of disobedience," or it may be "self-fitted," both are sad facts; but the only escape is to obey the call, and be among the number of those "whom He hath called not of the Jews only but also of the Gentiles."

HELP FOR CRIPPLED BOYS.—In the National Industrial Home for Crippled Boys, Woolsthorpe House, Wright's-lane, Kensington, W., there are eighty crippled boys, from all parts of the kingdom, once destitute, neglected, or ill-treated in their own dwellings, now happily engaged in industrial employment. Some have lost a leg or a foot, some both legs, and others are disabled in various ways. They must have, however, the use of their hands. Here they are maintained and educated on Christian principles for three years, and taught a trade, either carpentering, tailoring. relief-stamping, or saddlery and harness-making. Good reports are continually coming in from all quarters of youths who have left the institution, and some of them have commenced business on their own account, and are doing well. There are very many candidates always waiting for a vacancy, who cannot be received for want of funds. It has been computed that there are not less than 100,000 crippled children in the kingdom. There is now accommodation for 100 boys. There are, however, only eighty beds in the Home, owing to want of funds. The committee desire to urge upon their friends and the public the importance of keeping the boys well employed, by orders given to the respective trade departments, as by this means they are instructed and encouraged to aid in their own maintenance. Price-lists will be sent on application. The resident secretary is Mr. F. J. Bovis.

"It was a privilege to know Miss Esther Beamish personally, and we cordially thank her sister for extending the circle of those who would gladly have been numbered amongst her friends. Wide and varied as were her labours and influence, we trust many more may be brought within reach of the latter, and led, through a perusal of these pages, to follow in her footsteps now she has been called to higher service. This is a volume we should like to know was in the hands of many of our readers.—Our Own Gazette.

"This record of a truly beautiful life can scarcely fail to be read with advantage. Miss Beamish was evidently one of those who loved to be at work for the Master, and she was not slow in finding opportunities for usefulness and in turning them to account. Several of her letters are given in this volume, and the bright genial tone, and earnest Christian spirit, breathing through them all, cannot fail to impress the reader."—The Rock.

"With the memory of this sister and servant of the Gospel still fresh in our hearts, how near to us she seems. As we lovingly scan this simple record of her beautiful life, what ought not the story of her Eastern tour to do in the hearts of the young who read it? Notices of Books, &c.

NOBODY'S BOY, by DANIEL DARLINGHURST (6d. Jarrold), is a charmingly told tale of a waif who was befriended and restored to his relatives. The story shows how priceless human pearls may be found for the seeking, and in the most unlikely places.

HOUR BY HOUR; or, The Christian's Daily Life. Compiled by E. A. L. 2s. 6d. Nisbet. Elegantly got up, and containing choice extracts of prose and poetry to illustrate selected passages of Scripture. It may be ranked as one of the best of the many "daily helps."

SANCTIFICATION, AS SET FORTH IN THE SCRIPTURES. By WILLIAM COLLINGWOOD. John F. Shaw & Co. Brief, incisive, common-sense thoughts, on a subject which is often injudiciously handled. The writer has very clear views, and states them plainly, though not dogmatically.

THE SQUIRE OF OAKBURN. By EMILY FOSTER. National Temperance Depôt. A story of the country, vividly depicting the evils of the drink, and proving at the same time how much may be done by proprietors to promote Temperance reform. A useful book for the village library.

STEPS UNTO HEAVEN. By Archdeacon RICHARDSON. Elliot Stock. In these truly Gospel "Steps," all true members of the living Head will recognise the experience of a spiritual mind. Simple yet searching, these chapters are indeed valuable and blessed. That upon "Purity" might well be issued as a present-day tract.

THE ANTIQUITY AND GENUINENESS OF THE GOSPELS: A Hand-book. 2s. W. H. Allen. A scholarly and singularly helpful work. The author spares no pains to make his book what it purports to be—a popular hand-book. His remarks on the remoter sources of modern unbelief are based upon Divine law and light, and bear the impress of wide spiritual thought and cultivated reading.

ETHICS OF THE HOLY GHOST. By Rev. PHILIP NORTON. 1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Of this little work Rev. Charles Bullock, who writes the preface, truly says: "In the following pages, the reader who is 'following after holiness,' will find a treasury of spiritual teaching." This teaching is not deep, as the title might seem to imply, but it is fresh and instructive, and is full of "sound doctrine."

KISSING: ITS CURIOUS BIBLE MENTIONS. By JAMES NEIL, M.A. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. The author discourses learnedly upon the various forms of this scriptural method of salutation. It is delightful to read the varied meaning of this essentially Eastern custom, whose history is here so lucidly and carefully written. Mr. Neil has caught the Oriental spirit, and treats of his subject with ease and gracefulness.

SCRIPTURAL STUDIES. By the late Rev. CHARLES BRIDGES, M.A. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. This work, in its ninth edition, "will bear a favourable comparison with Bengel," says the preface. A careful study of the contents confirms the truth of this statement, and discloses a wealth of spiritual thought and power of assimilation rarely to be met with. On every page there are flashes of light, gems of truth, stores of help.

PAUL THE APOSTLE: A Poem. By JOSEPH BEVAN BRAITHWAITE. Messrs. Seeley & Co. It seems almost incredible that the author of this book, who was asked to celebrate a certain event by writing "a little poetry," should, as he says, "never have attempted anything of the kind before." While there is nothing of the sublimity and grandeur of the highest class of poetry, there are order, definiteness, and a handling of the subject that bespeak genuine power.

OUTLINES OF THE MENTAL PLAN, and the Preparation Therein for the Doctrines of Christ. By L. W. MANSFIELD. Phillips & Hunt, New York. These "Outlines" provide abundant material for thought. Though the careful reader will not always agree with the author's premises, he will often accept his conclusions. The work is highly speculative, but the speculations are put before the reader with such legal precision and order that unconsciously the mind is led to grasp and appropriate the author's deductions. God as an all-sufficient Creator, man as a complex creature, with spiritual, mental, and physical needs to be met, and nature as a teacher subservient to, yet supplied for man, are clearly set forth; the greatness of God as He is, and of man as he ought to be, are reverently dwelt upon. The mysteries of primitive existence, the incarnation, the new birth, and the Holy Ghost are wisely and spiritually handled. The work is full of rich surprises, is conceived on a high level, and deserves more than a general reading.

"THAN MANY SPARROWS." By ANNIE COURTNEY. 2s. 6d. T. Woolmer. In this pathetic narrative of the experiences of a "town sparrow" the lights and shadows are fairly intermingled, though of course the clouds of poverty and sorrow disappear in due time and the sun of prosperity shines forth. Like many tales of the kind, this one, we fear, sins against the average probability; it is often pleasanter to read, we admit, about what ought to be than about what actually is.

PAMPHLETS.—"The Holy Catholic Church: What is It?" By JOHN JARDINE, M.A. Elliot Stock. The author truly says that there is only one Church which deserves the name of Holy, and that is the Bride, the Lamb's wife. A useful little tract, impartially written.—"Earth to Earth, and Reasons against Cremation." By FRANCIS SEYMOUR HADEN, F.R.C.S. Two publications of the Earth to Earth Society, designed "to expose and remedy a great social evil." The words on "Funeral Reform" are excellent.—"The Voice of an Intelligent Horse." Home Words Office. A sensible plea for Sunday rest for man and beast.

In a little book (2d., Shaw & Co.) Mr. W. GREENE describes a recent visit to the earthquake districts of Andalusia, Spain. The reader will be interested not only by the personal experiences of Mr. Greene, but by the details furnished as to the spiritual condition of this priest-ridden country, and the opportunities now afforded for the dissemination of Gospel truths.

The first of a series of papers by some of the most eminent Biblical scholars of the day, in which the work of the Revisers will be examined in detail, will appear in THE EXPOSITOR for July. Genesis and Exodus will be dealt with in this number by Canon Driver (Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford), Canon Kirkpatrick (Professor of Hebrew in Cambridge), Dr. T. K. Cheyne, Professor A. B. Davidson (of Edinburgh), and Professor J. M. Fuller. Revs. A. C. Jennings and W. H. Lowe (authors of "A Commentary on the Psalms") will contribute "A Critical Estimate of the Revised Version," which will also be commenced in the July number.

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

DISEASED LUNGS.—"RAISED FROM A MERE SHADOW."

The patient whose case is here appended was over three years under my treatment in the whole, and the correspondence amounted to nearly fifty letters.

When first writing me, his condition was considered hopeless if treated by the usual means. Both lungs were reported diseased. There were all the symptoms of consumption in aggravated form.

It was not long after commencing my treatment that he writes that his doctor, after a careful examination, reported:—"The disease has been certainly arrested, and there is no active progress now." Slowly and steadily he improved; and, to use the patient's own words, "he was raised from a mere shadow to new life."

I have just received a letter, dated April 18, 1885, in which he says:—"I am pleased to say I am better in health than I have been for years. When I consider the hopeless condition I was in, I must express my gratitude to you. I should have been in my grave but for the blessing of God on your treatment. You are at liberty to make what use you like of my name and testimonial for the good of others.—John Tunstall, 89, Coventry-street, Kidderminster."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

Crawshaw's Crystal DYES

Are specially manufactured for the purpose of dyeing at home faded articles of Clothing, &c. Silks, Ribbons, Feathers, and Woollen Goods, take the dye readily. The colours are beautiful and brilliant, and comprise all the popular shades. They are easy to use, and almost anything can be dyed in a few minutes, for a few pence. Sold by all Chemists, 6d. each (free by post for 7 stamps). CRAWSHAW & CO., 80, Fann Street, Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

MANNA CAKE.

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. Hayward, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."

Ask for Manna Cake, price 1½d. per cake, or 1s. 3d. per doz. of any chemist or medicine vendor. Wholesale of Barclay's; Edwards; Hovenden's; Newbery's; May Roberts; Sanger & Sons; Sutton & Co.; &c., &c.

The Christian.

IS THE REVELATION JEWISH ?—I.

HALF a century ago many Christians awoke to the fact that there were dispensational distinctions of persons and periods which had been very much ignored; and the many headings to chapters in the Authorised Version of the Bible justified the assertion that all the prophetic blessings had been appropriated to the Church, and all the curses given to the Jew. The result of this revived study of "Dispensational Truth," however, was that in the reaction from former interpretations the pendulum swung to the other extreme. Previously, the Jews' portion in the Scriptures was spiritualised away; now, the spiritual truth which lay beneath the surface-letter of the Word was literalised away. Formerly, the promised glory of Israel in such a prophecy as Isaiah lx. was understood only of "the enlargement of the Church;" now, the comfort which a troubled saint drew from Isaiah xl., "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people," was denied, or at best he was told that if he could get any comfort from it he might; but the promise did not belong to him, but to Israel. If a dying Christian pillowed his head on "Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive; and let thy widows trust in Me," the pillow was turned into a stone by his being told that that was Jewish.

But instinct, which leads the child to the mother's breast, leads new-born babes in Christ to desire the sincere milk of the Word, that they may grow thereby. And as they grow, they find that they, too, have their portion, for the Prophet bids them, "Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her: that ye may suck and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of her glory." And lest they should seem to be intruding on pastures which were not their own, one of the Apostles of the Lamb told the Corinthians, Gentiles though they were, "Ye are the temple of the living God, as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." And lest these exceeding great and precious promises should be snatched away from them, he adds: "Having, therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God," the Hebrew of the Hebrews thus associating himself with those Gentiles of the Gentiles, as heirs together of Israel's promises; believing Jews and believing Gentiles equally constituting the Church of Christ and the Israel of God.

Not that we would, for a moment, go back to the old error of ignoring the dispensational distinction between the earthly calling of Israel after the flesh, and the heavenly calling of the Israel of God; for we are not ignorant that the latter belongs to Israel after the flesh, while the spirit belongs to the true Israel, to those who are Jews inwardly, whose circumcision is of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter, whose praise is not of men, but of God.

For the heir of God throughout the ages is one person—one Church—though the childhood, and the school-time, and the manhood are divided, for the purpose of education and training, into dispensational periods. From Adam to Moses, without law. From Moses to Christ, under law, as under tutors and governors (Gal. iv.). In Christ, putting on the new man, which, after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness. Analogous to which dispensational training of the Church which is in God the Father, is the education of every son of God: A child, without law, rejoicing in the forgiveness of sins and justification by faith (Rom. iii.—v.) Under law to Christ (1 Cor. ix. 21, R.V.), obeying that form of doctrine which was delivered them, and, being freed from sin, becoming servants of righteousness, yet often crying, "O wretched man that I am; who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" (ib. chh. vi., vii.); but learning in due time that there is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, for the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made him free from the law of sin and death (ib. chap. viii.).

But the danger of being bound to the letter of Scripture and debarred from seeking the hidden riches of secret places, the blessings of the deep that lieth under the letter of the Word, does not cease with the Old Testament. Not only one or more of the Gospels and several of the Epistles, but the flower and fruit of the whole wondrous plant, the Revelation, is treated in the same Judaising way. M.

GUILTY LEISURE.

IN a recent number of The National Review, Lord Brabazon makes an appeal to men of leisure, which is well worthy the serious consideration not only of those to whom the paper is more immediately addressed, but of those whose lives are fully engaged in the pursuit of unworthy objects.

It is readily admitted that more voluntary and unpaid work is now undertaken for the love of God than ever was the case before; but Lord Brabazon urges with only too much reason that the proportion of men of the "leisured" class which devotes itself to unpaid, useful, religious and philanthropic work, is a small one. He goes on to seek the reason for the fact, by no means creditable to those concerned, that whilst women can be found in plenty "who make it the duty and the pleasure of their lives to minister to the wants and to alleviate the miseries of poor sufferers," thousands of men who have both time and means and health and strength for philanthropic work stand aloof, and refrain from applying to the social sores of the time "the healing remedies of personal ministration and Christian sympathy."

Personal, rather than pecuniary help, is what is most needed. The loving touch of the hand, rather than the penny tossed in charity. It would certainly be to the advantage of many, whose lives are now devoid of all serious or useful occupation, if they would respond to the appeal made by one who is untiring in much noble work; and devote some portion of their time, talent, and energy "to the benefit of their fellow-creatures, and to the advancement of his kingdom upon earth."

If the saying of one of our greatest thinkers be true, as undoubtedly it is, that "the beauty of holiness must be in labour as well as in rest," Lord Brabazon's earnest words should touch the hearts of others besides those who are spending their lives in the pursuit of pleasure; for there are many religious communities in which there are numbers of people who are simply in a receptive condition, eager enough to enjoy the advantages of their position, but unready and unwilling to take part in any labour which has for its single object the spiritual or temporal well-being of others. Although men and women are dying round about them for want of bodily and spiritual assistance, they are content to meditate and dream, deaf to the voice of Christ which bids his people go to work in his vineyard, visit his sick, clothe his naked, feed his hungry.

Such a life, although its foundation is upon a higher platform than that of the sensualist, is undoubtedly a selfish one, for it seeks the enervation of comfort and rest, rather than the spiritual strength which comes from the manful exercise of all the powers in the service of God. It is equally true in spiritual matters that "life without industry is guilt," and the Church of Christ can ill afford to have members who would simply share in the joy and reward of triumph and victory without having taken their part in the warfare and tribulation. Should such be led to resolve to live a higher and nobler Christian life, the nearest court will furnish a mission field wide enough for all their labour. Every back street has more suffering than they will be able to alleviate; but the cup of cold water, so light to carry, will be heavy with blessing if it be given in the name of Christ, and the little kindness done for Jesus' sake will not be without its reward even in the consciousness of a duty faithfully discharged.

There is room in the shortest Christian career for the due exercise and development of each of three essentials of a complete life—meditation, prayer, and work. In the perfect existence of the Master, the night of prayer upon the hushed mountain both followed and preceded the working day of toil, labour none the less because the hands were divine, and the task was the alleviation of human suffering. If He and his disciples went into the desert place it was not only to meditate, but because there was the pressing need for rest. In a rightly balanced life prayer will sweeten toil, and meditation will be repose; and when the hands are folded it will not be in the weariness of idleness, but because the day's labour is done and the voice of the Master is heard in the eventide inviting his servants to "come apart and rest awhile."

JAMES BOWKER.

AN EDINBURGH HOME FOR CHILDREN.—We have received the seventh annual report of the Summerbank Home, 8, Bellevue-street, Edinburgh. At present it shelters sixteen little children, all rescued from lives of terrible destitution and want. The account of the progress of the children is very satisfactory, the only unpleasant feature being the lack of funds. The gift of £100 from any one able and willing to give so large a sum would place the Home on a solid footing, and greatly encourage those engaged in the work. It may be well to add that every halfpenny given goes directly to the maintenance of the children, there being no secretary or collectors to be paid. Further particulars can be given if desired. Old clothes are always thankfully received. The hon. secretary is Miss Agnes M. Logan, 26, East Claremont-street, Edinburgh.

THE CHIP AND THE BEAM.

By Dr. DONALD FRASER.*

"And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."—Matt. vii. 3, 5.

THE Lord Jesus exposed the prevailing faults of the Scribes and Pharisees, and showed his disciples that they should be quite otherwise minded. They should not be covetous of earthly gain, but lay up treasure in heaven. They should not be ostentatious, but pray secretly and give alms modestly. They should not be censorious, but be just and charitable in their estimate of others.

(1) It is a delicate operation to correct the faults of other men.

It may be likened to the feat of taking a chip of wood, a hair, or an insect's wing out of an inflamed eye. A clumsy operator may easily make things worse. So may a clumsy or unkind censor offend his brother, and do no good, but rather harm. All the greater is the delicacy if one undertakes the task as a volunteer. One may accept reproof from a person whom he regards as having a right to advise and even to rebuke, such as a parent in a family or a pastor in a Christian flock; or he may take it well from a private friend with whom he is on confidential terms, and whose council he has often sought; and yet he may not be at all willing to have his faults indicated and handled by anyone who thinks proper to assume the function, and to constitute himself a fault-finder and fault-mender to society. It is only under an imperative sense of duty, and even then with the greatest diffidence, that a wise and humble man will venture this operation on one who, though a brother in the faith, is personally a stranger to him; for, even in the most favourable instance, the moral function which is attempted is a difficult one, and calls not only for a fine tact, but also for much self-knowledge in the operator, and much charity.

(2) Self-ignorance and self-conceit incapacitate one for performing this operation.

It cannot be said that faultiness in one's own character disables him as a critic of other men's morality. On the contrary, most accurate and pungent moral strictures may proceed from men who are quite aware that their own lives will not bear close inspection. There are men of broken character and bad habits who, writing anonymously for the Press, show a keen perception of ethical distinctions, and lash the vices of the age with much vigour and effect. Nay more, men of the worst stamp are often found to have a wonderfully sharp eye for delinquencies on the part of their Christian neighbours, and are loud in condemnation of their shameful inconsistency. The case indicated by our Lord is that of one who is insensible of his own faultiness, yet presumes to deal with the faultiness of others; and He addresses such a person by the strong term of disapproval, "hypocrite," which He often applied to the Scribes and Pharisees. If one thus blind to his own faults assumes to be a censor and corrector of morals, he plays the hypocrite in this sense, that he affects to be zealous for righteousness and impatient of evil, while all the while he excuses evil in himself, and condemns it only in others. It is a false zeal which flies at extraneous evil and spares that which is in our own homes, our own hearts and lives. First examine and arraign and amend thyself!

(3) An honest Christian reserves his strictest judgment for himself.

Self-love will suggest excuses, and even tempt a man to ignore his own faults, or, at all events, to change their names; but a supreme love of righteousness, such as ought to possess the Christian mind, keeps conscience at work, and enjoins self-judgment and self-correction.

Then, as to the comparative seriousness of faults, there is a strong tendency to regard one's own misconduct with leniency, though meting out a hard censor to similar delinquency in others. Ours is the mote or chip, and our neighbour's is the beam. But when the spirit of Christ enters into us, all this is changed. Ours is the beam; our iniquity is great; our fault is heinous. We know what checks and warnings we have had to keep us from it, what remonstrances of conscience, and what impulses and examples to counteract the evil temptation. And yet we are at fault. Nay, we have persisted in what we know to be wrong till it has acquired the force of a habit, neutralising good, and unfitting us to exert a healthy moral and religious influence on others. The beam is in our own eye. It is our neighbour who has the mote or chip.

So at least it should appear to us in the judgment of charity. By this is not at all meant that we are to make light of evil, or out of good nature to affect not to see what is censurable. It is not charity, but a morbid feebleness of the moral nature, which cannot bear to condemn anything but strictness, and glibly excuses or lightly tolerates conduct that is vicious or dishonest. Nothing in our Lord's teaching may or can be construed into a sanction of that species of leniency which makes all its allowance on the dangerous side. On the contrary, it is required by our loyalty to Him and to the best interests of society that we endeavour to maintain in ourselves and promote in others a moral tone that is brisk and vigorous, honouring the virtues of truth, justice, and purity, and reprobating the opposite vices. But there is no reason why this tone of rigorous discrimination between good and evil should not be combined with a gentle and charitable judgment of the character and motives of our neighbours and fellow-Christians.

"Have fervent charity among yourselves, for charity covereth a multitude of sins." Such was the rule for the early Christians, and it is as much in force as ever. There is no religion that goes so deep as ours into the exposure of human sin, and consequent misery, or has a moral tone so firm and vigorous; but at the same time there is none that is so pervaded with the spirit of kindness and hopefulness. It charges us to forbear and forgive, and above all things, to "put on love, which is the bond of perfectness."

FLOWERS FOR GREENWICH INFIRMARY.—The workers thank those friends who have kindly sent flowers and text-cards for this work. They have afforded a great deal of pleasure to the patients. The visitors have not thus far received nearly enough to supply all the wards, and will, therefore, be grateful for further and continuous help. The visiting day is Thursday, and parcels should reach them on Wednesday evening or Thursday morning. They should be sent to Miss Alice Day, Arreton, Blackheath-park, S.E., or to Miss L. M. Lidgett, 69, Shooters'-hill-road, Blackheath, S.E.

SURBITON Y.M.C.A. — This branch of the Y.M.C.A. was lately favoured with the visit of a deputation from the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society. Exceedingly interesting addresses were delivered, and it is hoped that a deeper missionary spirit among the members may result.

BATTERSEA.—A tea and testimony meeting was recently held in connection with the work at Chatham Hall. Over 200 members of the congregation sat down to tea, and a Conference of Members was presided over by Mr. Robert Paton. Mr. Robert Ward, congregational secretary, reviewed the work of the last three months, which was of a most encouraging character, both financially and spiritually. A financial statement was made concerning the Building Fund, which now amounts to £400 out of a required £1,100 by the end of June to complete the purchase of ground. Mr. J. Randall Wood afterwards presided over a praise and testimony meeting. After an address by Rev. J. H. Topping the meeting was thrown open. Testimonies of a most interesting character were given, and in the majority of cases reference was made to the first seed having been sown at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings held at Lavender-hill. Mr. Cameron, in conjunction with the South London Evangelistic Choir, will erect a tent near the Wandsworth-road Station on June 4, for nightly Gospel work.

* Extracted from METAPHORS IN THE GOSPELS (6s. Nisbet). In these short studies on the similitudes used by our Lord in his public utterances Dr. Fraser has concentrated an amazing amount of valuable teaching. Tersely and freshly written, they are admirable specimens of practical pulpit talk, of which our extract is a fair example. There is not a prosy page in the book; it will bear repeated perusal, each time with added profit. Young preachers will find it a mine of suggestiveness.

THE REVISED BIBLE.

THE article in The Quiver for June, by the Dean of Canterbury, on the Revised Version of the Old Testament, demands the careful study of all who love the Holy Scriptures. Its information is very timely and valuable. Rarely have ripe scholarship and a chastened modesty been so perfectly combined. It is a beautiful setting forth, by one of themselves, of the spirit, purpose, and method of the Company of Revisers, and its readers will anticipate with strong interest the Second Paper.

It may appropriately be mentioned that Dean Payne Smith is the writer of the Commentary on Jeremiah, in "The Speaker's Commentary." This spiritual and invaluable exposition has not received the commendation it deserves. The careful perusal and re-perusal of it have only deepened a sense of its worth. To many readers it has come as a new revelation of the mission, fidelity, and messages of the mournful but loyal-hearted prophet. In no book of Scripture has the modern division of chapters been more perplexing than in that of Jeremiah. The Dean, by the wisdom given to him, has separated into sections the burning addresses of the prophet, and has invested the whole book with a fresh, most instructive, and delightful interest.

Cardinal Hugo and Robert Stephens, who divided the Scriptures into verses, were men before their time. They foresaw the need of breaking the bread of life into small pieces if the people were to eat it. But the work was not in all cases well or wisely done. The narrative, and worse still, the argument, was often seriously interfered with. But the idea was good, and with the advance of printing, the paragraphing of MSS. before being put into the compositors' hands has received increased attention. Imagine a work of fiction being printed with page after page unbroken by a paragraph. Truly the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light.

The Revisers of our one inspired book, the Bible, have undone the valuable work of their brethren in the sixteenth century, and have retrograded behind every other editor of the Scriptures in this respect. We have had various Paragraph Bibles of late years, but none in which the paragraphs have been so long, nor in which so little method has been displayed. If the Revised Version had many more advantages than it has (and it has many), the fact of its being printed in solid blocks of uninviting-looking matter would be enough to prevent its ever superseding the Authorised Version for general reading or for pulpit use. The versification of the Authorised Version should only be altered so far as is necessary to preserve unbroken the thread of the prophecy, narrative, or argument. The shorter the paragraphs, consistently with this, the better for the reader.

The Editors of the Paragraph Bible published by the Religious Tract Society were alive to this fact, and they tell us that great care was taken by them to secure the advantage of brief division and frequent pauses, without injury to the sense. With this before them, it is incomprehensible why the Revisers and the Printers of the R.V. have been at no pains to follow so wise an example.

Brixton Orphanage for Girls.—The foundation-stone of a new schoolroom, dormitories, and other buildings of this institution was laid last week. The number of children now cared for is 202. When the new building is completed there will be accommodation for 300. The cost will be £2800, of which only £800 is yet secured, leaving £2000 to be raised.

For the Young.

THE LILY AND ITS MESSAGE.

IT has been truly said, "Life is made up of little things," and we all have known how a kind word, or a smile, the gift of a leaflet, the gentle pressure of some loving hand, or a flower, has dissipated clouds and brought sunshine into sorrowful lives. It was a lovely lily, certainly, that was growing that keenly-bitter day in December, in a greenhouse surrounded by many others. I am reminded of what one single flower has done, when its kindly owner ordered it, with some of its choice neighbours, to be cut, so that she might take them to cheer a lonely mourner. The lily, willing to do its Maker's bidding, did brighten the Christian widow's heart, and silently spoke for Him.

Its work, however, was not done. Its quiet ministry had but commenced, for this child of God remembered her Master's words, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," and sent this messenger of love and peace to gladden yet another life. Now it was to one called aside from active work, to bring forth fruit unto Him in patient suffering. This lovely spotless lily, how glad it makes her! Surely it shows the Father's goodness, giving us so much more than is necessary, and making beauty and fragrance to deck our path. What is its lesson to her? Just as the lily, by being passive in God's hands, has become a thing so full of joy and delight to others, besides of loveliness in itself, so may the Christian, willingly being fashioned by Him, become his delight, "well pleasing unto Him," and may possess the very "beauty of holiness."

Our lily in this path has given its Master's message. Yet another sphere awaits it, however, for the invalid hears of one who is about to become a bride. What flower so suitable to adorn this young friend? Its whiteness, its exquisite form and scent, all tell of its appropriateness, and it goes too on this errand with whisperings of hope and joy for the future. We know our flower did this ministry also well, and the last we heard of it was that the happy wife had pressed it carefully in recollection of the past.

In thinking over this short history of two days in a flower's life, shall we not ask those who know God not only as their Maker but their Saviour, are they doing as much as "only a flower" did for Jesus? They may bring brightness and cheerfulness into more than three lives, and tell to many others by a holy life of what his love can do. Dear children, do not let a flower bring more glory to your Lord than your life does. The Master says, "Go work to-day in my vineyard."

"Only a word for the Master,
Lovingly, quietly said,
Only a word,
Yet the Master heard,
And some fainting souls were fed."

LITTLE JOHNNIE'S BUN.

This true story is written for some of the youngest readers. It is about what happened no longer ago than last Good Friday.

Nearly every child in England has been taught about the sad day, the first Good Friday, when our Lord Jesus Christ was cruelly killed by being hung on a wooden cross. He could have stopped the wicked men who nailed Him there; but He did not, because He knew that if He did not die to save us from our sins, we could never be really happy now, nor go to his bright heaven when we die.

Last Good Friday morning a dear little gipsy boy of four years old, named Johnnie, was beginning his breakfast very happily, and on the table there was a great treat for the children—a plate of nice hot cross-buns. Little Johnnie was given one of them by his kind mother, but directly he got it, he said—

"Mother, I can't eat that bun."

She asked him "Why?" and he answered—

"'Cause it's got a cross on it. Jesus was hurted by a Cross, and p'raps if I eat it I may hurt dear Jesus too." And the sweet child would not eat a bit of it.

Of course, this was the fancy of a very little boy, but his love to the Saviour made him willing to give up something he liked very much, for the Lord Jesus' sake.

Later in the day he was offered another of these buns, but he would not have it. Don't you think that little Johnnie is a brave little soldier for Jesus? Shall not big boys and girls, yes, and grown-up people too, take a lesson from this little boy? Shall we not all pray that we may never do anything of any sort which we even think may "hurt dear Jesus"?

A CITY MISSIONARIES' HOLIDAY.

FEW members of the community need a holiday more than the London City Missionary; and certainly none deserves it more. With much thoughtful kindness Mr. C. M. Sawell, one of the District Secretaries, arranged that the missionaries and their friends should have a sea trip to Margate on Tuesday of last week. The early morning did not promise well, but its performance was all that could be desired, and everyone of the large company on board the Eagle seemed to enjoy to the utmost the four and a half hours' sail down the lordly Thames to the point where the cliffs of old Albion strike westwards.

A hearty reception awaited the excursionists at Margate. An informal meeting was held on the pier after landing; and they were certainly no formal words in which Messrs. Hindley and James, pastors in the town, welcomed the London toilers to the famous seaside resort. Mr. Hindley, the vicar, and his flock, were most generous in their treatment of the visitors, most of whom carried back some floral reminder of the trip, while some thirty-five of the older missionaries received a copy of the Revised Bible. The return voyage was also made under the happiest auspices. It may well be hoped that the pleasant memories and benefits of the day's outing will long abide with these earnest Gospel workers among London's poor.

The Seaside Home of the City Mission at Ventnor, Isle of Wight, is an institution that may fitly be mentioned in this connection. It was secured to the Mission largely through the combined efforts of Mr. Sawell and Rev. P. B. Power. For years past it has proved a perfect mine of blessing to the Society, in recuperating the workers, by a yearly fortnight's sojourn there, sending them back to their loved work refreshed in body and in mind. Some 200 of the London districts have a special endowment fund that defrays the cost of these annual breaks in the wear and tear of visitation among the slums and alleys of the town. It would be a great boon to the Society, and would relieve its ordinary expenditure, if the remaining 200 odd districts were similarly provided for.

MENTAL HEALING IN BOSTON, U.S.A.

BY A CORRESPONDENT OF "THE TIMES."

THIS city has become the headquarters of a religio-metaphysical furore, which within a few months has infected so many people of all classes in New England that the mental contagion is almost sure to spread beyond American limits. The science of mental healing—nothing that originates in Boston is less than a science or an art—is the ambitious name of the movement which its leaders have assumed. The Press of the country find frequent occasion to make sharp allusions to the "Boston mind-cure craze," but it is a long time since any local paper has been so indiscreet as to make slurring references to the new pathology. Absurb and idiotic as some of the ideas are which the prophets of the system advance, the movement has far outgrown the limits of a popular but temporary craze. The "wonderful cures" of the mental healers have been so persistently proclaimed that a large proportion of average Bostonians are willing at least to admit that "there is something in it." Hundreds claim to have been benefited in varying degree by mind-cure treatments. Many such become themselves healers, and thus the new idea has spread. Just now the religious features of the new departure more prominently engross public attention, and clergymen of all denominations are seriously considering how to deal with what they regard as the most dangerous innovation that has threatened the Christian Church in this region for many years. Scores of the most valued Church members are joining the Christian Scientist branch of the metaphysical organisation, and it has thus far been impossible to check the defection. It is a movement far-reaching in its influences, and including many thousands among its sympathisers whose ordinary good intelligence entitles their judgment to respect. A study, therefore, of the details of the novel scheme becomes at once interesting and soon fascinating.

Here is a familiar Boston parlour scene. Two ladies sit a little way apart in Quaker-meeting silence for perhaps twenty minutes. The face of one is as hotly flushed as if she had been indulging in violent exercise, physical instead of mental. The other, the patient, apparently dozes in her chair. Externally this is all that constitutes a mind-cure treatment, to which hundreds hereabouts are daily submitting. The fundamental idea that underlies the system of mental healing is that there is no such thing as sickness. Disease, say the mental healers, is an error of the mind, the result of fear. This startling hypothesis entails some very strange and absurd conclusions. The leader of one of the factions, for there are several in sharp rivalry one with another, gives these instructions for healing:—"Reason in your mind that God made everything good. He is not the Author of disease. Therefore, as disease is not a creation it has no existence, but it is merely a delusion of the mind, the effect of fear. Fear is faith inverted and perverted. You are to gain the confidence of your patient; make him tell you the cause of what he thinks is his disease. But with your clearer mind you see that it is not sickness at all. You attain the power of healing by dwelling mentally upon the truth and wisdom of God, and thus the faith of the healer meeting the fear of the patient produces a chemical change in the fluids of the system which results in health."

Many invalids are naturally willing to accept this or any other sophistry in explanation of cures if they themselves are physically benefited. But among the intelligent people in everyday life who are studying the mind-cure theories, and to a greater or less extent are testing them, the ideas of the teachers are very much modified. Indeed, hardly any two have just the same conception of the "science." One lady believes that to be a consistent healer one must be a Universalist in religious faith. Another insists that the minds of her patients shall be made entirely free from guile, and accordingly she asks for a full statement of their lives. Many persons who study the system renounce all religious and superstitious ideas in connection with it, but recognise the physical phenomena, which they do not attempt to explain, and practise the art as successfully as any. A lady in Hyde-park, Massachusetts, who takes this position, says she finds herself possessed of a power over many serious ills, which she hardly knows how to use. She says she prays earnestly, and the ailment of the sufferer seems to be transferred to herself. Then she is able easily to throw it off. She does not know whether to call it mind-cure, faith-cure, or magnetism. Some operators say they use no will-power, but simply keep before their minds an image of perfect health, and let God or the truth work through them. Others exert the will intensely, to drag out the disease, as it were, by main force.

To be consistent, the leading mind-cure theorists have to maintain some very absurd ideas. Poisons, they say, would be harmless if the fear of them were removed. Children, they explain, are affected because of unconscious hereditary fear. Mrs. Mary B. G. Eddy, leader of the Christian Scientist division of Mental Healers, claims that her husband, who died three or four years ago, was murdered by an enemy among the Scientists who "thought arsenic into him." Some of these queer enthusiasts maintain that mental influence does not recognise distance, and that, therefore, the presence of the patient under treatment is not necessary. Another Hyde-park lady has an intimate friend in Sacramento, California, who a few months ago was given up by physicians to die of inflammatory rheumatism. It was arranged by mail that at three o'clock, Boston time, on certain days the invalid should submit herself mentally to the treatment of her friend in Hyde-park. It is claimed that improvement was immediate, and that within a month the patient was able to visit San Francisco with her husband. Another lady in treating absent patients puts a doll in a chair upon which to fix her mind in lieu of the sick person. Most of the mental healers profess contempt for the laws of hygiene. They bid their patients eat what they please and act as they please. Mrs. Eddy, however, makes the proviso that they must be of strong faith that what they eat and do will not harm them.

When the inquirer attempts to investigate the actual accomplishments under the new pathology, he encounters a vast array of witnesses and testimony. But after attempting to sift the evidence it is quite impossible to return a sweeping and decisive verdict. It would be useless to deny that, under the influence of the mind-cure practitioners, beneficent and in some cases remarkable results are attained. It is not surprising that they are able to "cure" hypochondriacs, whose ills exist only in imagination, and it is easy to understand that their peculiar influence is more potent than that of medicine in cases of certain disorders of mental and nervous origin. But when more marvellous cures are claimed the average sceptic falls back on Dr. Peabody's assertion that a physician's success depends upon the degree in which he possesses the confidence of his patient. Complete harmony of mind and confidence in any remedial agency is a more potent factor in any case than most people, even medical practitioners, generally recognise. This fact is the real secret of the mind-cure craze, and, with a foundation so substantial, it is, after all, hardly wonderful that so vast and fantastic a structure has been erected. Investigation of any of the miracles which it is claimed are wrought is unsatisfactory. Although cases are cited by the hundred of alleged cures of paralysis, cancer, tumour, consumption, rheumatism, scarlet fever, spinal complaint, nervous disorders, and minor complaints, there appears to have been no genuine, scientific test of the system. Their is testimony in abundance, radical, positive, and undoubtedly honest, from people who claim to have been cured by the new agency of organic disease of long standing; but investigation develops so many weak or incredible points that close analysis is almost always unsatisfactory in its results. Illustrations might be detailed by the score, but a single well-authenticated case will suffice. A prominent dentist of this city fell, and severely injured his knee. He sent for a surgeon of good repute, who examined the limb and diagnosed a fracture, saying that he could plainly detect the grating of the broken edges of the bone against each other. The patient was properly treated, and was advised to reconcile himself to several weeks' confinement. But, yielding to the importunities of his wife, he allowed her to call in a mind-cure practitioner. He treated the injured man according to the tenets of the new school, and tried to persuade him that he was not really hurt. Finally, he induced him to get up and walk, which he did, at first with difficulty but soon with comparative ease. The dentist walked into the office of the surgeon who first attended him the next morning, and the doctor thought for a moment that he saw a ghost. This case is naturally reckoned a great triumph of mental-healing over old-fashioned methods. The old-school surgeon, of course, simply acknowledges that he made a mistaken diagnosis, and says the gentleman sustained only a strain of the knee-joint.

Until recently the popular excitement on the subject had not been utilised for fraudulent purposes by "scalawags" and professional impostors. A large majority of the mind-cure converts have been women. If they have been themselves benefited, or think they have, they begin to study the art and become practioners. None of this class have sought to fill their purses by practising the new method. Most of them have treated their friends gratuitously, as described above, or have given their time to strangers for some trifling recompense. There have been instances, however, within a few months, of gross swindling of the credulous by professional quacks, who find it profitable just now to put on the mind-cure mantle. A case in point occurred recently. An ignorant but smooth-tongued rascal, who is getting rich upon the mind-cure craze, was called to treat the wife of a wealthy gentleman. She was suffering from cancer, and the disciple of mental healing guaranteed that he would cure her. Presently the patient died. But the mind-cure man persuaded the husband that he had succeeded in partially curing the cancerous trouble when death supervened, caused by consumption. Accordingly, a bill for 4,000 dols. was sent in, and the husband finally paid 3,000 dols. rather than suffer the embarrassment of a lawsuit.

For several weeks past, as stated at the outset, the religious revolution involved in the new departure has overshadowed the consideration of the physical phenomena in the public mind. The theological innovations are confined to the creed of the Christian Scientists, who constitute the largest division of the mind-cure host. They make the principles of a new theology indispensable in their theories of mental healing. They are led by Mrs. Eddy, who is the high priestess of the whole movement. She claims to be the founder of the science, though rivals deny it, and her account of the divine origin of the faith is worth mentioning. In 1866, according to her story, she fell accidentally upon the side walk and suffered spinal injury and paralysis, which physicians declared would result fatally in a few hours. Her pastor called to see her just before the end was apparently at hand, and offered her consolation. She begged him to return in the afternoon, but no one believed she would then be living. By revelation from heaven at that time God's actual relation towards her and to the human race was made clear, and she realised that her hurt was but an error which, when supplanted by the truth, would disappear. By the light of her new knowledge she brought herself by mental process into a proper attitude toward Jehovah, and when the clergyman called, a few hours later, expecting to comfort a bereaved family, she met him at the door. Ever since, Mrs. Eddy says, she has had the power of healing others as she was herself healed. The creed which she has formulated as the basis of her system is a peculiar theological mixture. But, as Professor Stacy Fowler said in a recent paper on the subject, "if they heal, people will not stop at a question of theology. If they heal, they will carry the day, and they ought to." Hence it is that Hawthorne-hall, where the Christian Scientists worship, is thronged for an hour before the time for service each Sunday. So eager are the people to hear, that after the standing room is all taken people crowd around outside the doors, where they can catch only an occasional word or two. The service consists of ordinary devotional exercises preceding a sermon by Mrs. Eddy. But the creed she teaches is so blindly and illogically presented, is so full of apparent inconsistencies, that it would be an impossible task to describe it even in outline. "God is an infinite mind; matter is nothing. Personality is the embodiment of mind. Forgiveness of sin means destruction of sin"—these are fragmentary ideas gained by listening to one of Mrs. Eddy's rambling talks.

Rev. Dr. Gordon, a prominent Baptist clergyman who has studied the books of the Christian Scientists thoroughly, and talked with all the leaders, pronounces their creed a mixture of Pantheism and Buddhism. The delusion, he says, is most insidious. The large use of the Bible, the strenuous demand for holiness and self-abnegation in the disciples, the results apparently effected in the ministry to the sick—these are very powerful considerations for attracting converts. And so hundreds of young ladies especially are drawn into the system under the impression that they are getting some finer quality of Christianity. Dr. Gordon predicts that this is not the final issue. If the body is only a phantom, and the flesh only a shadow, by and by some very practical sinners will take refuge under the system, and insist that the sins of the body and the transgressions of the flesh are harmless, since they are only the phantom of a phantom and the shadow of a shadow. Dr. Gordon regards the whole system as a sort of witches' cauldron, in which every conceivable heathen and Christian heresy is seething and simmering to produce the subtle essence called "mental medicine." On the other hand, the Rev. O. P. Gifford, another Baptist clergyman of equal standing, and several other prominent ministers, defend the Christian Scientists, and endorse much of their philosophy, while admitting that much more of it is unintelligible.

But the clergy, as a whole, now regard the subject with grave apprehension, and on all sides they are discussing the situation with great earnestness. They hardly know how to deal with the danger, for the sincerity of all infected with the new faith is undoubted, and any policy of opposition or denunciation serves only to increase their ardour. Scores of applications have been made to evangelical churches of the Baptist, Methodist, Congregational, and Episcopalian denominations for letters of dismissal, that the applicants may join the Christian Scientists' church. All such applications have been refused, but the converts to the new idea nevertheless worship with those of the new creed. The public discussion of the new theology was begun a few weeks ago by the Rev. Joseph Cook, upon his Monday lectureship platform. He endorsed the views of Dr. Gordon, and denounced the Christian Scientists unsparingly. Since then the subject has been discussed from week to week at one or more of the Conferences of ministers of the various denominations.

The persons who are most affected by the craze, except the actual converts, are the physicians; but from them least is publicly heard. Perhaps the best antidote, after having spent some time in canvassing the views of the mental healers and in discussing the theological side of the subject, is to call upon some good old-fashioned physician, who has been adding years to men's lives for half a century. "Doctor," a veteran practitioner was asked recently, "why don't you take in your sign now that these mind-cure people have shown that no one need be sick unless he has a mind to?" "Don't make fun of fools, young man," the reply came, "it only strengthens them in their folly. When people ask me if there is anything in mental healing, I say yes, of course there is. Every physician knows that when a patient's mind or imagination is in sympathy with him, the work of curing is in many cases half done. In dealing with mental and nervous diseases, one object aimed at is to secure absolute peace of mind on the part of the patient. Then nature will work her own cure. Sometimes it is necessary to administer a few bread pills or a few drops of coloured water to induce full confidence. But it is useless to argue with people who try to show that there is no sickness and that poisons won't kill. The craze might as well run its course."

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

"ARISE, lift up thy hands toward him for the life of the young children, that faint for hunger in the top of every street" (Lam. ii. 19). As a Christian band, we have endeavoured to carry out this injunction during the past winter, not only with crying and tears, but with patient love. Again our song is thanksgiving and praise. He has led us, and enabled us to train and send forth another sixty. They are "mothered" by our sister, Mrs. Merry, who sailed with them on May 21, from Liverpool. Many of them are motherless girls, or entire orphans, whose sad, unhopeful surroundings have drawn out our hearts to take and share with them our home life, until the right one offers for their adoption in Canada.

Our nephew writes most encouragingly, telling us that nearly all the sixty-five boys who left on April 2 are already placed out in good situations, and are earning their own bread, education, &c. The Government of Canada have also sent to us an encouraging letter, conveying their hearty approval of the work done by the Home of Industry during the past fifteen years. Thus cheered, we now go forward to finish the training of those still remaining in the Home, and to gather in another thirty, expecting to sail with them about the end of July, for our Home in Canada.

Those who are our daily armour-bearers and sharers of our joy by prayer, will be glad to know that during the past winter and spring we have had wonderful answers to their petitions. Self-willed waifs and wanderers from their homes, caught by the allurements of city life, lads whom nothing but the love of Jesus could melt, ere they left us we saw clothed and in their right mind, sitting at the Master's feet.

Many of these are now sending to us well-written and well-composed letters, describing the large farms, the kindness of the farmers in teaching them to drive, &c., and best of all, how they continue to look up to their never-failing Friend to help them so to live as to please Him.

One, whose father is quite unable to work, from an incurable tumour, and who was an obstinate truant from school and from a praying mother, thus closes a long and grateful epistle: "Dear Miss ——, I will always pray for you, and ask God to send enough money to buy food and clothing for all the other children. . . . I have found a great friend in the Lord Jesus Christ, and He helps me in everything I do. I know and feel that Jesus has washed me in his precious blood.—Yours very thankfully, ——."

Almost daily, loving, grateful letters are being wafted across the ocean for our encouragement, speaking of healthy surroundings, marriages, &c. The following is an extract from the letter of one who four years ago was an orphan and utterly destitute girl in East London: "I suppose you will hardly believe it when I tell you that I am going to be married next Saturday, April 19, after telling you so long ago about it. The reason was that we had not got enough saved up, but now we have enough to fix up nicely. My mistress has made me a nice wedding present of a silver fruit-stand, with everything complete, and my master gave me a carving-knife and fork."—Yours in Christ's service,

"FRIENDS" AND PUBLIC MORALITY.

NOT the least interesting of the gatherings held during the yearly meeting of the Society of Friends which has just closed in London, was the annual meeting of the Friends' Association for abolishing the State regulation of vice, some of the members of which were among the first to distinguish themselves by their efforts to put down the foreign traffic in English girls, and to secure generally the better legal protection of female minors. Mr. Wm. Fowler, M.P., the President, would have presided, but was detained at the House of Commons. His place was taken by Mr. Richard Littleboy, of Newport Pagnell. The company included many persons not only of great influence in the Society of Friends, but also in public life.

After a brief verbal statement of the work of the association during the past year, given by Mr. George Gillett, the Hon. Secretary, followed by the re-election of officers, Professor Stuart, M.P., and Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, who were present as visitors, were called upon to speak. Professor Stuart dwelt upon the importance of endeavouring so to influence the selection of candidates for the new Parliament, that men would be chosen whose moral character would make them right on all matters relating to Social Purity. Mrs. Butler gave an interesting account of the remarkable work of healing, without the aid of any human physician, which is carried on at her little hospital for the fallen at Winchester.

A resolution was then unanimously adopted, deploring the continuance on the statute book of the Acts for the regulation of vice, and urging the Government to bring in at once a Bill for their total and unconditional repeal; and also expressing the conviction that legal protection to female minors against those who seek their ruin should be extended to the age of 18 years.

Mr. Samuel James Cooper alluded with thankfulness to the support which friends had given to the fund which he had raised for the circulation among members of Y.M.C.A.'s of Mr. Alfred S. Dyer's Lectures to men upon Purity, one of which was originally delivered on the premises at Bishopsgate-street, where they were then met. Thirty thousand copies had been circulated by means of this fund.

Among the other speakers at this interesting gathering were Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry, of Bristol (the Chairman of the Friends' yearly meeting), Mr. John Edward Ellis and Mr. Edward R. Allen (both of whom many are expecting to see in the new Parliament), Mr. Wm. Rowntree, J.P., of Scarborough; Mr. Frederic Wheeler, the well-known Abolitionist worker of Rochester; Mr. Jonathan Grubb, the venerable Quaker evangelist and apostle of Total Abstinence; Mrs. Frederick Clark, of Newcastle; and Mrs. Henry Richardson, of York, one of Mrs. Butler's right-hand workers in the cause of morality.

If other Christian churches were as earnest and active on the side of Social Purity, in proportion to their numbers, as the Society of Friends, there would soon be a considerable difference in the aspect of our legislation on this subject.

JEWS IN NEW YORK.

IN my wanderings, during the last year, through the United States, I have visited various centres of Christian work; but nothing that I have seen has impressed me more than the blessed work carried on by Rev. Jacob Freshman among the 80,000 Jews in this city. Mr. Freshman is son of a Jewish Rabbi, who, with his whole family, was brought to believe in Jesus as the true Messiah, and who, with his father, became a minister of the Gospel. He is an earnest, pathetic, and fluent speaker, in both English and German. Though it is yet the day of small things with this work, Mr. Freshman finds cause for encouragement in the fact that his meetings have multiplied, and souls have been saved.

He feels the need of permanent headquarters. A suitable place is in the market, which he is trying to purchase, but he needs more help. The price of the building is about £4000, towards which he has nearly £1000. The American Christian public are not yet alive to the importance of the conversion of the Jews, and help is needed from other lands.

CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSION SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of this Society was recently held at Willis's Rooms, the Bishop of Truro presiding. The hall was well filled, and great enthusiasm marked the proceedings throughout. Rev. S. W. Darwin Fox, secretary, read the report for the year. There has been a larger number of missions in connection with the Society's operations than in any previous year. At the same time, there is increased need of a supply of thoroughly efficient and highly-gifted mission preachers. After existing for more than two years in connection with the parent society the Church Army has now entered, it is hoped, upon a career of extended usefulness, as an independent society. 302 missions were held last year. The Society supplied 65 churches with mission preachers during the late London Mission.

The Chairman, taking up first an appeal for increased funds made by the secretary, defied any person to take an ordinary epistle and read it quietly through—especially that to the Corinthians, which had very special bearing on the condition of English society in the present day—and to ask God to guide him as to its meaning—and then not to rise up with a feeling that in the very fore-front of all his evangelising work he must put the definite systematic habit of almsgiving. He must not leave to God the fragments of his income, but must dedicate to Him the first-fruits, setting apart a definite portion for the glory of God and the work of his Church. Unless there was preparation before a mission, and careful shepherding afterwards, he believed they had better leave the mission altogether out of a parish, and let it alone. That was a matter upon which opinion was divided. He recognised that diversity, and was merely speaking for himself. Wherever there was simple dependence on the Holy Spirit, and faith in the reality of the forgiveness bestowed through the precious blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, the hearts of the missioners were gladdened by seeing men who had been self-righteous, external Christians, brought with broken, contrite heart to the foot of the cross, wrestling from darkness into light, and going away rejoicing in the power of the all-atoning blood of Jesus Christ.

Rev. Sir Emilius Bayley said the time had happily passed when it was necessary to defend the principles of these missions. He quite endorsed the remarks of the Bishop with regard to preparation for a mission, but he added that he did not look at it as a matter of a few weeks' preparation, but rather as a matter of years. He also urged the necessity for faithful, systematic teaching in Sunday-schools and in Bible-classes, and personal visitation, bringing heart to the side of heart, and conscience to the side of conscience. That being done, there would always be sympathetic hearers, ready to welcome the mission preachers, and then they might expect great results. He could conceive nothing more profitable than for a clergyman to be brought into contact with zealous and faithful evangelists, and to be led to see with what weapons they reached the souls of sinners. Many lessons were to be learned from the mission services. By them the clergy were led to be more simple, more practical, and more diligent, and to rest more upon the great positive truths which had been so well summed up by the Chairman, and upon which the salvation of souls turned. In the presence of that great work they lost sight of party distinctions and watchwords.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn mentioned some instances in which great results had followed from missions, and confidently appealed to the meeting to subscribe the £400 for which the Society was in debt.

Rev. H. Armstrong Hall, Vicar of Swindon, said the first object of the Society was to secure, under God, a means of raising the whole tone of spiritual life, and for that purpose he thought the Society might launch out a little into work somewhat different from that which it had hitherto undertaken. For instance, they might have missions not for evangelistic purposes, but to raise the tone of Christian life among people in the parishes; from that would flow evangelistic work after the missions were ended.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken said it was often asked of the missioners whether, although they excited at the time a good deal of feeling, they effected any permanent results. In answer to that inquiry, he mentioned the case of a small country parish in which a mission twelve months ago had produced a permanent, strong Christian feeling, with an increasing eagerness to carry on Christian work. On every side there were indications of permanent results; he held that if this Society did its work well, and received God's blessing, there was no other Society for the spread of the Gospel that would not benefit from its success. He specially, and with emphasis, urged the importance of promoting this mission work among the country people, many of whom, in contrast with people in towns, had very limited opportunities of hearing God's word preached, remarking that too often country clergymen fell into a habit of going round, and round, and round, in a sleepy, monotonous fashion. Such men wanted waking up now and then, and he was satisfied that these missions might be made of the utmost service in country districts. Mr. Aitken cited some other instances of successful missions; pressed the need for more money, and fresh openings, and urged the friends of the Society, not only to give more, but to use their influence wherever they could on behalf of the Society.

SCRIPTURE READERS IN THE ARMY.

FROM the time of the Crimean campaign down to the present date, there has been a continuance of systematic endeavour to spread a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ among the rank and file of the British army. This department of evangelistic effort is undertaken, among other agencies, by the Army Scripture Readers' and Soldiers' Friend Society. Many cheering tokens of Divine approval were mentioned at the recent annual meeting in Exeter Hall; General Basden filled the chair in the afternoon, and Colonel Sandwith presided in the evening.

An encouraging report was read by the secretary, Mr. W. A. Blake. The balance-sheet revealed a slight increase of income. Eighty-seven readers are employed at the chief military centres at home and abroad. Five of these have shared the perils and fatigues incident to warfare in Egypt and the Soudan. One of them is with Sir Charles Warren in South Africa. Most of the agents selected have served in the army, and are consequently familiar with the special temptations by which the soldier is beset. The regiments of Militia are visited and instructed during their periodical training.

Stirring addresses were delivered by General Sir Arthur J. Lawrence, Colonel Puget, Rev. C. S. Solbe, Colonel Battersby, Rev. R. Spooner (Wesleyan chaplain at Woolwich), Colonel Sandwith, Major Evered Poole, Captain Kirwan, and some of the Society's readers. Help is needed to sustain and extend the operations of the Committee.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

THE public meeting on behalf of this Society at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, was one of great interest and value. The London friends of the mission were thankful to the Archbishop of Dublin for finding time to preside on the occasion, and his address showed the deep interest he takes in the success of the work. The Archbishop said the Society was doing good service for the cause of Protestantism in Ireland. Referring to progress of recent events, he said the Roman Catholics are beginning to lose all respect for authority. Before long he feared we should see a great deal of both anarchy and unbelief among that class of the community. Towards the close of his address the Archbishop said his interest in the Scripture Readers' Society increased day by day. Indeed, from his earliest days in the ministry, he had known it, and experienced its advantages and help. He thoroughly honoured the excellent Readers, and, instead of giving them the counsel which they would ask of him, he often felt he could have sat at their feet as he heard them tell their experiences. He trusted that the sympathy of friends in England would be stirred up. In closing, his lordship read a telegram which had been received from Captain Kearney White, the secretary, who was unable to be present, conveying a kind word to the friends in England, and desiring to be remembered by them in return.

Rev. Dr. Neligan (Dublin) said he looked not despondingly, but hopefully, on the spiritual condition of Ireland.

Rev J. Ormiston (Bristol) said he had known the work for several years, and when he succeeded his old friend Mr. Walker, at Bristol, he had felt constrained to sustain the work which that godly man had so well carried on. Mr. R. C. Morgan spoke in high terms of the absent Secretary, and said that the seven virtues to which the Apostle Peter refers —"add to your faith virtue," &c.—were, in a very great measure, manifested by the Readers of this Society, whom he had from time to time the pleasure of meeting.

EVANGELICAL CONTINENTAL SOCIETY.

AT the Union Chapel, Islington, the Rev. Dr. Allon, pastor, occupied the chair, at the fortieth anniversary of this society. The Secretary (Rev. R. S. Ashton) read the report, which stated that the work of the society had been carried on with great spirit and zeal in Spain, Bohemia, France, Belgium, and Italy. The special evangelistic fund had again been a very precious auxiliary. The committee earnestly pressed the claims of Continental missions upon the attention of the churches at home, as millions still groped in spiritual darkness.

The Chairman said that if they recalled the state of Europe, religiously, when that Society was organised, and contrasted it with its present state, they would see what a quiet, silent, but wonderful revolution had been wrought. There was need, however, for a reformation to be wrought over and over again. The Society sought to carry evangelical truth throughout the Continent, and the state of the Continent abundantly justified their endeavour to spread a purer religion throughout the different nations. Rev. Dr. Bevan expressed his opinion that the work of the Reformation was seriously injured by its association with the secular forces of the time and its alliance with the powers of the Princes and Kings and the States of Europe.

His Excellency Chedomille Myatovics, Servia, thought that the Society had taken a task in hand of urgent necessity. Speaking of his own country, he said it was high time that the truth of Christ in its simplicity were preached to the people. The higher classes were imbued with infidelity, but generally there was a desire among the people to read the Bible. Rev. Hugh Price-Hughes regarded the Society as one of the most unsectarian which celebrated its anniversary at this time of the year. He claimed that at the present time a smaller area of Europe was Protestant than on the day when Luther died, owing to their fathers having quarrelled instead of properly carrying on the work of the Reformation. Rome was shorn of her strength, and Europe was in much the condition of Asia in the time of Alexander the Great—ready to fall before the first heroic man who was bold enough to invade. Mons. le Pasteur Mouron, Secretary to the Evangelical Society, France, and Rev. W. Newell, Paris, also addressed the meeting on behalf of the Society.

SAILORS' HOME, DOCK-STREET, E.

THE fiftieth annual meeting of this Home, established with the object of generally tending to better the conditions of the shore life of our seamen, was held last week, under the presidency of the Hon. Captain Francis Maude, R N., and in the presence of a large and representative gathering. The report, read by the secretary, Mr. T. Balding, stated that 8603 seamen of all nationalities had been accommodated; last year 320 shipwrecked men had been received; £7261 had been paid during the year into the Bank by boarders; £35,000 had been forwarded to the Institution by seamen when paid off, and £6,047 had been remitted to their friends at home. The Chairman pointed to the condition of the neighbourhood before the establishment of that Home as being the vilest that could be imagined. A considerable change for the better had now been effected. Rev. J. Simson, Rev. Brooke Lambert, Mr. T. Gray, of the Board of Trade, and others spoke.

LONDON AGED CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.

THIS Society, instituted in 1826 for the purpose of giving permanent relief to the decidedly Christian poor of both sexes who have attained the age of 65 years, held its 59th annual meeting in Exeter Hall last week, Mr. Geo. Williams presiding. The report stated that there were 152 pensioners, an increase of 18 on last year. Mr. R. C. L. Bevan had for the 16th time continued his annual donation of £100. The funds of the Society had been exhausted, and the small reserve fund diminished by £100. The Chairman referred to the absence of that venerable "aged Christian," the Earl of Shaftesbury, who had now for a great number of years been serving his generation according to the will of God, and whose time for promotion from this world to a brighter sphere, some were afraid, could not be far distant. At any rate, his life had been an inspiration to all classes of the English people, from the poor little shoeblack to the most aged amongst them. Mr. Williams said he rejoiced in the object of that Society, and heartily commended it to their sympathy and support. Rev. F. F. Goe, Colonel Sandwith, Rev. Sir Emilius Bayley, Dr. Gritton, Revs. U. Davis, A. W. Cribb, and Mr. E. S. Eardley also addressed the meeting in support of the Society's excellent work.

RAGGED CHURCH AND CHAPEL UNION.

THE thirty-second anniversary of the Ragged Church and Chapel Union was held in Exeter Hall, on Friday evening, May 22, Mr. Joseph Peters presided. After prayer by Rev. J. F. Stanion, an excellent report was read by the hon. secretary, Rev. Burman Cassin, and the financial statement by Mr. W. A. Blake, in the absence of the treasurer. Addresses were delivered by the Chairman, Revs. Thomas Fielder, Dr. J. S. O'Brien (Somers' Town), W. Tyler (Mile End), Major Evered Poole, and Major John Smith. With an income of less than £450, as many as 104 mission halls have been assisted with grants. This organisation was founded by the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G., and a few like-minded coadjutors, nearly three decades before "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London" was circulated, and has been signally blessed of God. The movement is thoroughly unsectarian, and aims at propagating Gospel-truth in simple and homely language. Many instances of conversion were narrated at the meeting. Funds are urgently needed.

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.

THIS Society recently held its annual meeting in Exeter Hall, Mr. J. G. Alexander in the chair. The secretary, Mr. J. R. Mackenzie, read the report, which contained many striking instances of good done by the tracts sent through the post. A grand total of 1,402,044 tracts, &c., had been issued during the year, being an increase of 282,402 over the total of 1883.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes said it was desirable the public should understand that this society seeks especially to evangelise the educated and the upper classes. The influential classes need to be taught the truth as it is in Jesus quite as much as the poor, but they are not so accessible. In the ingenious and prayerful use of the Press and penny post, the Monthly Tract Society is doing a very important and a greatly needed work that scarcely anybody else is attempting. Mr. Hughes urged the issue of a special tract to journalists, who possess such a mighty influence in the land.

Rev. T. H. Moran said the Society was wide in its sympathy, clear in its testimony, and admirable in its arrangement. It not only reached out to those in our own country, but extended its operations abroad. He had read nearly every one of the tracts published last year, and had been particularly struck with their intellectual character, and at the same time with the simplicity of the way in which they brought the truth before the people.

Rev. Dr. Gritton, Rev. W. Frith, Dr. Wicks, Mr. Stabb, and the Chairman, also spoke warmly in support of the Society's operations.

AGED BLIND WOMEN.

THE North London Home for Aged Christian Blind Women, ventured, at the suggestion and expense of Mr. George Williams, to hold its annual meeting this year for the first time in Exeter Hall. The hon. sec., Rev. J. F. Osborne, was able to give a good report of the past year's proceedings, and one full of hope for the future. God's goodness had been specially vouchsafed in securing to them the £350 asked for at the previous meeting for completing the new wing of the Home, and in increased support for the Institution generally. The number of inmates had risen from 22 to 29. Gladly would the Committee extend the work and double the accommodation if funds sufficed. The superintendent will be glad of orders for woolwork, knitting, &c. The address of the Home is, Mansion House, Hanley-road, Hornsey-rise, N.

The claims of the institution were urged by Dr. Armitage, one of its most generous supporters. From personal knowledge he could say that in every way it was worthy of support. Many of these aged disciples must have gone to a workhouse but for this Home. Rev. John Robertson said that when he looked upon the one blind eye of his own loved boy, it made him feel sympathy for those in total darkness. Mr. T. A. Denny had something to say on each word—poor, blind, aged, Christian—and thought there were many compensations for the loss of sight. Very heartily could he commend the Home. Rev. J. R. Wood, of Holloway, followed in warm commendation of the institution.

The Chairman, Mr. George Williams, said he was glad to hear of ladies going to the Home, and taking the blind inmates out for a walk. Rev. Henry Bright, the Superintendent, himself blind, was eloquent and enthusiastic in the plans he urged for increased support. Dr. Roper, from America, and Mr. J. Hawkings, a trustee, also addressed the meeting.

SCRIPTURE READERS IN THE NAVY.

THE Bishop of Dover presided at the annual meeting of the Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society at Exeter Hall on the 20th ult. The income for the past year was £109 0s. 6d. less than the previous year, and the Committee earnestly appeal for the increased support required. The meeting was addressed by Rev. E. A. Williams, Captain Poulden, Rev. J. Gilmour, Admiral Sir E. Sotheby, Admiral Hon. A. Duncombe, and Admiral Sir F. L. McClintock.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of this useful Society was lately held in Exeter Hall, Mr. F. A. Bevan presided. The secretary, Mr. J. E. Hazelton, read an abstract of the annual report, which was of a very encouraging character. 1076 aged poor, members of various sections of the Christian Church, are now upon the books, and upwards of £6590 have been distributed in pensions alone. Upwards of 770 of the pensioners are over seventy years of age. In the four asylums or homes of the Society, 180 of the pensioners have peaceful abodes in the evening of their days. Funds are required for these branches of the work. The pensioners live in all parts of the country, and many interesting particulars respecting them were narrated. The generous gifts of Mr. J. T. Morton, were referred to. He has caused to be distributed amongst the pensioners, blankets, flannel, coals, and groceries. Copies of the report will be sent on application at the office, 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

SPANISH AND PORTUGUESE CHURCH AID SOCIETY.

THE Archbishop of Dublin presided last week over the annual meeting of this Society at Exeter Hall. The report showed many features of interest in the work of reform in Spain; the fact of £1000 having been given for a new church in Lisbon was most encouraging. In Oporto large congregations had been gathered in the new church. The Archbishop said he thought they might thank God, and take courage. There appeared to be an advance all along the line, not only as regards the work being carried on abroad, but also in the work of Church aid, which was carried on at home. Addresses in support of the Society's work were delivered by Rev. H. Webb-Peploe, Rev. Gilbert Karney, Rev. Canon Hawkesley, Rev. S. D. Fox, and Rev. J. B. Cabrera (Bishop-Elect of the Reformed Spanish Church), whose account of evangelistic efforts in Spain excited general interest.

PRINCESS LOUISE HOME.

ON Saturday afternoon Lord Brabazon presided at the annual meeting of the Princess Louise Home and National Society for the Protection of Young Girls, held in Exeter Hall. The Secretary's report showed that thirty-six girls have been admitted to the Home; the same number have left for service, and twenty-four have been restored to their friends after disciplinary training. There are, however, twenty-nine cots tenantless for lack of funds. An additional duty has been undertaken by the committee, in protecting young girls on their way to service through London, so many being waylaid and subjected to evil influences. During its existence the home has saved over thirteen hundred girls. Seventy-one are now under its care.

The Bishop of Bedford remarked on the perils to which young women are nowadays exposed. Who could tell what our own children would have been but for preserving influences! The girls themselves he counselled in fatherly and loving tones to be useful, studious, and industrious; above all let faith in God ever be the first and most important thing with them. Mr. E. Thornton appealed for more liberal support, as also did Hon. and Rev. E. Carr-Glyn, Mr. Jacob Montefiore, Dr. Harvey Philpot, and Mr. William Barlow.

Then followed the distribution of prizes and rewards by Lady Brabazon, the articles including books, money, writing-desks, Bibles, and garments. Several of the girls now in situations were present and received prizes, while letters from their present mistresses were read, expressive of great satisfaction at their general conduct.

The Chairman's address was valuable as showing that both he and Lady Brabazon purpose taking a more active interest in the institution than ever. It was suggested that if every one present would make known the fact that thirty beds were vacant through lack of funds the needed amount would be forthcoming.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

WORKERS, converts, and friends of this Mission show undiminished interest in and enthusiasm for its customary Bank Holiday gatherings at Kilburn Hall, where they are privileged to come together for prayer, praise, and mutual edification. From four o'clock on Whit Monday the number of those who attended continually increased, notwithstanding the unfavourable weather, until the hall was quite filled for the evening meeting. Much prayer was made throughout the two meetings, and believers present doubtless derived an increase of spiritual encouragement and strength from the various addresses, and from intercourse with one another.

Next month's Footsteps of Truth will contain full notes of the first address by Mr. J. Denham Smith. Referring to Revelation iii. 7—10, Dr. McKilliam maintained that the Philadelphian Church, whose name, "love of the brethren," is comprehensive of all God's waiting people, will be taken away "from the hour" of the world's temptation. True holiness is only experienced in occupation with "the Holy One," and not merely in receiving from Him. We must by faith put ourselves into his hands for what we cannot accomplish. In the midst of present denial of truth, a hold upon mere doctrine is not sufficient; our safety lies in abiding in Christ as "the True One."

At the opening of the evening meeting Mr. Russell Hurditch gave particulars of intentions with respect to summer work, including the encouraging opening of village work in Dorset; and Messrs. Edward Hurditch and F. C. Spurr's second tour, beginning at Reading in the first week of June. Sites for twelve tents have been fixed, but twenty might be used were means forthcoming to support them. Prayer was desired for blessing on the summer work, which will involve an expense of about £2,000.

Captain Acton remarked that the truth of the Lord's Coming, received in the heart, elevates above selfishness and every evil. He deprecated getting truth into the head and turning the back upon the God of truth. Mr. F. E. Marsh traced seven aspects of "Christ for us"—Propitiation, Peace, Pathway into the holiest, Pleader, Power, Pattern, and Personal friend. Mr. Edward Hurditch said "Christ is all and in all" with respect to creation, the typical aspect of truth, in the New Testament, and in heaven. Is He experimentally all to us now? Mr. F. C. Spurr said that though he was told "your system fails," Christianity is not a system, but a Person. While every man lives forever, eternal life is to "know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ Whom Thou hast sent." The progress of life is seen in the Epistle to the Galatians: i. 16, the revelation of Christ; ii. 8, Christ mighty in me; 20, Christ living in me; 2 Cor. xiii. 3, Christ speaking through me.

Dr. Popham said those who have nothing spiritual to impart to others, are spiritual paupers with a workhouse religion. Those under the law are condemned felons with a gaol religion. Other persons may be called rhubarb Christians, for they are as colourless as that fruit when grown in a cellar. He wished to see all those now in the outskirts of spiritual life remove into full joy, liberty, and peace. Mr. T. Walters, of Hastings, said all who believed were once together. In Christ's name his members now gather together, and sleeping and living saints will be caught up together to meet their coming Lord. Meanwhile, his word to us is, "Occupy till I come." The anxiety of each one should be not to find others their places in the Church, but to find what is his own individual service. After an earnest Gospel address from Mr. Charles Inglis, the meeting was closed in prayer by Mr. George Hucklesby.

ERRATUM.—In a recent obituary notice of Lieut.-Colonel Sandford Brome, R.N., the surname was erroneously printed Browne.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND.

FAREWELL MEETING IN GLASGOW.

ON Monday, May 25, Rev. E. P. Hammond concluded a series of meetings in Glasgow which extended over a period of eleven weeks. The farewell meeting was held in the large hall of the Christian Institute, which was very nearly full, the audience consisting exclusively of adults. The platform was crowded with ministers and laymen interested in evangelistic work. After an exposition of parts of the twentieth and twenty-first Chapters of the Book of Acts, several of the ministers and laymen gave interesting reports of the meetings held in their respective localities.

Rev. A. C. Fullarton, in reporting the result of the meetings held in his church, said his Sabbath-schools were attended by about 800 children, a large proportion of whom attended Mr. Hammond's meetings. There were present, also, as was afterwards shown by the cards containing the names and addresses and church connection of those who professed to have received spiritual benefit at the meetings, persons connected with twenty-eight different congregations in almost every quarter of the city. Many young persons who had previously been more or less awakened to concern about salvation, came to Mr. Hammond's meetings, and found a blessed wave of spiritual power that floated them into the harbour of assured safety. With the view of nursing as many of the young Christians as were connected with the congregation, the Kirk Session had unanimously agreed that for a time the forenoon service should be adapted, as far as possible, to the young. The children also had a prayer-meeting of their own, and it was truly touching to hear them lead in prayer.

Rev. Mr. McLauchlan, of Martyrs' Free Church, reported the results of a single night's work in his congregation. There had been very deep impressions and many reliable cases. He was particularly struck with their clear views of the ground of acceptance with God.

Rev. Mr. Mackay, of Free Trinity Church, stated that he had much cause to thank God for the real work that had been done in his church. They had been favoured with a season of spiritual awakening some months previously; now, in connection with Mr. Hammond's meetings, they had a second wave of blessing. The workers had been very careful in dealing with the children who made a profession, so as to secure that they really understood what was implied in it. At the end of the week they found a large number had professed to have undergone a spiritual change during that week. The Sabbath forenoon service, for some months, had been given to the young, with the result that the attendance of grown-up members had been greatly increased. They had received benefit from Mr. Hammond's meetings in their congregational work all round, and he was deeply thankful for the impulse given to their spiritual work through means of his visit.

Rev. Mr. Andrew, of Plantation Free Church, in the absence of the pastor, reported regarding the work done in Mr. Riddell's church. It had the deepest and the best success. The church had been filled to the door every night, and there was deep conviction and earnest decision. The numbers who professed faith in Christ were very large, and in so far as man could judge the work was deep and intensely real. Mr. Andrew stated that his own practice was to devote a portion of the forenoon sermon to the young.

Dr. Andrew A. Bonar reported on the work in Finnieston. There had been remarkable cases of deep impression night after night, so that a real spiritual impulse had been given to the work of God in the congregation. He had endeavoured to follow up the work by preaching on subjects suitable for young people.

Mr. James S. Napier stated that he had followed the meetings through most of the districts in which Mr. Hammond had laboured, and had probably seen as much of the work as any other worker, except Mr. Hammond himself. He described the methods followed and the results which, by the Divine blessing, had been produced. He was particularly struck with the depth of feeling found in some of the after-meetings, and the reality and thoroughness of the decision shown even by very young boys and girls. He referred to one meeting in Mr. Riddell's church, in which hundreds seemed melted and moved by a Saviour's love. He had experienced the greatest delight in the work, and was only sorry that Mr. Hammond's period of work in Glasgow had come to a close.

Mr. A. MacKeith, the Glasgow "Children's Minister," referred to the lessons to be learned from Mr. Hammond's mode of dealing with children. Not only had they received blessed results from the meetings, in the spiritual awakening and quickening of many, but they had also obtained valuable lessons in the management of children's meetings.

Rev. Mr. Howie, Rev. Mr. Gullan, Rev. Mr. Ross, Mr. George Stewart, advocate, Mr. Wm. Sloan, Mr. Archibald Orr Ewing, and others, expressed their thankfulness for the results produced in connection with these meetings, and their sense of the need of following them up with watchful care and sympathy. A most interesting meeting, which had lasted nearly three hours, was then brought to a close.

A MINISTER WHO WAS PRESENT.

ALEXANDRIA, VALE OF LEVEN.

Alexandria is a place on which God has showered much blessing in former years, so that from God's believing children earnest prayer rose up to Him for blessings on the Vale of Leven. In connection with Mr. Hammond's visit God has indeed answered prayer; not only have many, old and young, been found for the first time earnestly inquiring the way of life, but many who seemed hitherto to be hesitating have taken their stand determinedly on the Lord's side and have begun to work for Him.

We felt impelled to go to Alexandria from Glasgow, where we had shared in the blessing. We found the Town Hall crowded with old and young, many ministers being present. Rev. Mr. Dempster, in the course of a few remarks, said many of his members and office-bearers were the fruits of Mr. Hammond's last visit. The meeting on Saturday night, which was chiefly praise, was very impressive. It seemed as if Jehovah Himself filled the house, and many in the after-meeting met their covenant-keeping God for the first time.

Already some of the fruits of the work in Glasgow have been gathered home. One day lately a little boy while playing during recess, in front of the school, was knocked down and kicked on the head by a passing horse. He never regained consciousness, and died ten minutes after. The schoolmaster, after breaking the news to his mother, said, "Can you tell me anything about Jimmy?" "O, yes," she said, and bringing his Bible took out his "Covenant Card," dated March, saying, "He brought this home one night, and has been like a recruiting-sergeant ever since among his companions, trying to get them to the meetings." This little fellow had gone, every Saturday since his conversion, to one of the City poor-houses, to read to an old woman who had been taken there from the "close" he lived in.

Another, a little girl, Lizzie, took scarlet fever. Her favourite text was John iii. 16. None of the family ever went to church. One day after having had the fourteenth chapter of John read to her at her own request, she said to her father, "Are you coming to the many mansions?" On the second day of her illness her father said to a worker who had come to visit her, "If there is a God He will not take her." The answer was, "The Lord sometimes takes the lamb that the sheep may follow." Her frequent prayer was, "Father, thy kingdom come." Before her death she sang, "There is a happy land," and then repeated the words, "Peace, peace, peace." Father, mother, and brother have professed conversion, and now the whole family attend church regularly.

Many hearts in Glasgow and the Vale of Leven are crying out to God for blessing on Mr. Hammond's mission to Sheffield. Although our brother must have learned the lesson of relying alone on the mighty God of Jacob, we trust he will meet with many sympathising hearts in this new field, and a large and hearty choir to stand by him at every meeting.

A. L.

Mr. W. Davidson, of Edinburgh, writes:—Something like 500 professed conversion during these eight days' work in Alexandria. Yesterday (May 29) Mr. Hammond conducted a meeting in the late Dr. Guthrie's church in Edinburgh. His address was listened to with the deepest attention, and from the very first it was evident that the sympathies of the people were with him. At the close of the meeting it was touching to see old friends flocking around Mr. Hammond, some with tears in their eyes, recalling scenes of bye-gone days. A gentleman told how he walked twenty miles to hear Mr. Hammond speak when he was in Dumfries; he thanked God he was then led to trust the Saviour, and had since been a missionary of the blessed Gospel.

Many expressed a desire that Mr. Hammond would come and hold meetings in Edinburgh, where there had been such a work amongst the young men through the students, and it was suggested that if Mr. Hammond came to Edinburgh, the same work might be done for young women.

THE POLICE AND TEMPERANCE.

ON Thursday last the inaugural meeting of the Metropolitan and City Police Temperance Union was held at the Mansion House. Admiral Sir W. King-Hall presided in the unavoidable absence of the Lord Mayor. After prayer, Mr. A. P. Coote stated that the object of the Union was to advance the principles of total abstinence in the police force. When it was contemplated, the matter was put before Sir E. Henderson, who promised the movement his warmest sympathy and support. About five years ago, said Mr. Coote, a police inspector founded such an association at Birmingham, which had secured about 140 pledges. The London Union had only been established a short while, but they expected great results.

Mr. J. Monro, Assistant-Commissioner of Police, expressed the warmest sympathy with this movement. It was a painful task to have to deal with cases of intemperance among the police. At the same time, one could scarcely realise the great temptations to which they are subjected, and it is little wonder that these are sometimes yielded to. Such cases, he assured the audience, were very few in proportion to the large number in the force. He would not palliate the offence, but rather seek to remove the causes of it by inducing the men to join the Union.

Dr. Sinclair Paterson, speaking as a medical man, strongly recommended total abstinence. There is no doubt that many drink without abuse, but for the sake of those who cannot do so, we ought as Christians to show them an example of self-denial. In eloquent language he urged his hearers to abstain from that which is a stumbling-block to many, and thereby advance the kingdom of Christ.

The gallant Chairman spoke of his experience as an abstainer of twenty-three years' standing. He urged the policemen present to sign the pledge and to keep it by asking God's help every morning, by steering clear of public-houses during the day, and by thanking God at night for his mercies. If they should subsequently yield to temptation, let them get up and sign again. Several other eminent Temperance speakers addressed the meeting, each one urging the audience to make a bold stand for Temperance. A selection of sacred songs and solos, principally from "The Christian Choir," were very effectively rendered by the members of the Police Choir. An excellent recitation by the son of an inspector, aged twelve, entitled, "The Golden Street," gave additional interest to the meeting.

THE PORTSMOUTH RESCUE SOCIETY and Protestant Home for Fallen Women, situated in Brunswick-road, Southsea, again reports prosperity vouchsafed to the labours of the Superintendent and workers during the year. A successful series of midnight meetings has been held, a restaurant has been opened, about 140 admissions have been registered, and systematic visitation in various parts of the borough has been kept up. The needs of the Home include £500 to discharge a mortgage on building, about £80 for debt on restaurant, money to support two missionaries, and funds for the general expenses of the entire Institution. Mrs. Colebrook has the oversight of the work.

OPIUM SMOKING IN CHINA.

THE following letter was written a short time since to Mr. Broomhall, Secretary of the China Inland Mission :—

Nearly everybody in Yün-nan smokes opium. Even the women smoke to the proportion of at least 50 per cent. ; of the men at least 80 per cent. are smokers. As to its harmlessness, I may mention that children born of opium-smoking mothers are born with a craving for the drug. To relieve this the mother has to inhale the smoke, and then breathe into the baby's mouth the smoke which she has inhaled. From the time of birth the child looks old and wan, haggard and bloodless, stunted and shrivelled, with a lifeless expression.

A woman came to us the other day who smoked two mace a day, costing her ninety or 100 cash daily—as much as she could earn by constant employment. She had recently given birth to a child, but the opium had evidently prevented the secretion of her milk; the child was in a half-starved condition and has since died of a fit.

I asked my teacher to ascertain the number of opium dens in this city. He made inquiries, and told me afterwards that there are 245 dens, besides very many shops where the article is sold. Some deal solely in the drug; others are general store dealers. These latter combine the sale of opium ; it is the article for profit. Frequently on the road here I met as many as sixty to 100 coolies in a company carrying opium to Hu-nan, Kwang-si, Canton, Chiang-si, and Fu-Kien. Each coolie carries from 93 to 100 English pounds. In the Ta-Li district raw opium may be bought for 11 taels silver (or about £2 18s.) per 100 taels opium, equal to 133 English ounces. In this city it is about 13 taels per 100. I have met and also heard of smokers who consume daily as much as one tael, two mace, or rather more than 1½ ounces. Such persons are scarcely capable of doing anything beyond smoking the opium and then sleeping from its narcotism, only to wake and renew the process.

We have been quite busy lately from applications for opium medicines. We have had a few cases of giving up the habit; this has created a demand, especially amongst women. The medicine we use is compounded of native drugs; the formula is from a tract on the evils of opium smoking, published by Mr. Griffith John, of Hankow. It is so difficult to get medicine of foreign manufacture from the ports so far as here, and this seems very little inferior to the morphia or compositions containing the same.

The evil one seems to triumph in his power in this land. We have been endeavouring for some time to obtain a shop on some thoroughfare in the city for preaching. We are almost wearied with applying to people for their premises. The manifest dislike and scorn, coupled with fear of us, is most painful to bear. Two places which I made application for have since opened as opium dens within one month. In all directions they are increasing. The Viceroy has built about 300 new shops without, and some within, the city. Many are rented as opium dens.

Mr. Broumton mentioned in a recent letter to me that the new Governor of Kwei-Chou had forbidden the growth of the poppy, but he did not issue the proclamation till after this year's crop was all safely gathered. The fact is, the Government seems powerless now; the mischief is done, it cannot be undone. We might as well expect to stamp out the drink traffic in England as stay the growth and consumption of opium in China. A day of retribution is drawing nearer upon those who introduced it to satiate their own covetousness. Its effect is everlasting; it cannot be compared to any other evil—war is scarcely to be compared, terrible as its destructions are. The effects are slower, but they are all the more sure and more universal than those of war (i.e., in China).

I have been told again and again that the finances of Yün-nan can only be sustained by the trade in opium. There is an imperial law against its production; to evade this, the revenue thus obtained is described as medicine in all accounts rendered to the throne.

The thing which remains for us to do now is to give the people the Gospel of the Lord Jesus; meanwhile to use every effort to induce our Government to abolish the trade as far as India is concerned. We must wipe our hands of this dirty trade, though we cannot wipe out the past; the harvest has been sown. The Chinese regard it as a direct act of plotting the nation's destruction, equally as much as the conduct of a man who is guilty of administering poison to another for some evil advantage.

I was talking with two men yesterday upon the subject of opium. One was a young fellow who is now using medicine to break off the habit. As we were talking of its effects, he stamped his foot, exclaiming, "Alas! alas! from where did it first come?" I answered, "From India; but," I added, "no one has forced you to grow it, neither forced you to eat it. There is no foreign drug to be bought here; it is all your own production." Nevertheless, the fact remained that Englishmen introduced it, or at least introduced the practice of habitual smoking; before that, it was scarcely known, if known at all.

The English nation are undoubtedly the sowers of this dreadful seed; it has yielded an abundant harvest of death and ruination in China. So prevalent is the habit here, that the bulk of the people do not rise before ten or eleven o'clock in the forenoon, and no business is commenced in the commercial houses until nearly mid-day. In Szi-chuan the people are astir soon after daylight. Here they do not open shops till ten o'clock. A man who does not smoke gets through as much work in one day as smokers do in three.

YOUNG WORKING WOMEN IN THE CITY.

THE hearts of many interested in the welfare of young business women in the City of London were much cheered on Tuesday, in seeing the Lecture Hall of the Y.M.C.A. well filled, to listen to a stirring Gospel address from Mr. William Noble. The hearts of many in the large audience appeared to be deeply moved, and we believe that real blessing was the result.

On the former day we had the privilege of holding a thorough heart-to-heart service for an hour in the work-time in a mantle warehouse. One young sister had just been taken from their midst to glory, who had been only lately brought to Christ through some special services. We have the great joy of conducting Gospel services weekly in connection with "The Old Welcome." We should be so thankful of more help from ladies, either in singing during the dinner-hour or in speaking a few words from the Scriptures.

We have been much tried lately in meeting the financial needs of the work. We are now obliged to part with our Bible-woman; her work must be taken up by those whose hands are already quite full. We are also compelled to relinquish the use of our meeting-room every night in the week but one, on which night we have two services for young Christians to suit the times of closing. We want our room nearly every evening, but to reduce the rent we have been glad to sublet it. We hope our friends will be led to remember this important preventive mission work, and will also be enabled to continue their practical sympathy. Hampers of flowers will be gladly received at "The Welcome," Cross Keys-square, Little Britain, E.C.

CHANTILLY, FRANCE.—With respect to the letter which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN of April 30, concerning Gospel work for English grooms and jockeys, I have received a letter from an evangelist, who might perhaps be engaged to carry on the work if funds were forthcoming to meet the expenses of two members of his family. A well-managed and attractive coffee-palace, to which might be attached the undenominational hall already referred to—would prove a great boon to Chantilly, where there are so many low cafés and temptations to drinking, gambling, &c. I shall be most thankful if any friends will help in the good cause.

Yours in Christ, N. L. BLUETT.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

THE past year has been one of much blessing in the history of this excellent Society. One reason of the success may probably be found in the remarkable adaptation for the work of the evangelists selected by the Committee. The report recently published says:—"We generally reckon our numbers to be somewhere about two hundred. Many of these are men well instructed in the Scriptures, faithful preachers of the Gospel, whose preaching has been blessed by the Holy Spirit to hundreds of souls. They are men of special gifts; many have been working men, possessed of great natural ability, and are now refined and cultured."

Last year more than 19,000 services were held, about 1000 missions were conducted, nearly 4,000,000 persons attended the meetings, and in more than 1000 places in England, Scotland, and Wales, were the evangelists invited to labour. As ever, the tent-work has been productive of very encouraging results. One writes:—"I have no doubt that more than a hundred intelligent believers could be found within fifteen miles of Dartmouth, who had been brought to God in that tent alone. There is nothing shadowy or uncertain in this statement." A valuable testimony comes from an eastern-counties farmer, who says, "I know of no single agency that has been so greatly owned of God during the past seven years, as the plain earnest preaching of the word by your evangelists."

Considering that the operations of the Society are carried on strictly upon the lines of unsectarianism, it is gratifying to know that every year hundreds of letters are received by the secretary from Christian ministers of all denominations, testifying to the blessing which they see resting upon the labours of agents sent forth. The report contains a number of letters of this kind, showing that the most cordial sympathy exists between the minister and the evangelist. These remarks apply also to Scotland, where missions have been held during the year in seventy different places. That fourteen pages are devoted simply to the acknowledging of "Thank-offerings" from persons and places for benefits received is a fact that needs no comment.

Among the interesting cases of conversion recorded is the following:—"A poor woman, in extreme wretchedness and despair, tried to hang herself from a beam. She was found and cut down just in time to save life. She went to a meeting where one of the evangelists was preaching, and was deeply impressed with what she heard. She went again and again, as long as the mission lasted, and learned not only to know her sin, but to know and believe the love of God in Christ Jesus. Having yielded herself to Him in repentance and faith, she went about telling others of God's great mercy in having rescued her from the very brink of eternity." A letter, written by a north-country miner, is also given in extenso, showing the marvellous change wrought in "one who formerly was notorious for his wicked life." Another says:—"I, my wife, and my two brothers-in-law, owe our conversion under God to meetings held by your Society, and all of us are now working for the Master."

Time and space would fail us adequately to represent the work that has been done. The Committee state, in conclusion:—"All who are willing to assist in the work by donations, by preaching, or by promoting meetings in the places where they reside, are invited to apply to the hon. secretary, at the offices of the Society, 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C." The total income for the past year amounted to £12,526.

THE MANCHESTER AND SALFORD SOCIETY for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children have issued a report showing the total number of cases dealt with since the commencement of the present year. The details are painful indeed, indicating the suffering endured by poor children through assault, neglect, exposure, begging, vagrancy, &c. Mr. Thomas R. Kirlew, 14, Major-street, Manchester, is one of the secretaries.

Notes and Comments.

THE date of the four days' Conference on the Second Advent, announced to be held at Niagara Falls, has been changed to July 14—17. Full particulars may be had from the Secretary of Committee, Willard Tract Depository, Toronto, Ontario.

The controversy that has been carried on in The Guardian between certain Christian advocates and Mr. Romanes, the eminent scientist, has turned upon the most important of subjects. The question whether there is in man a moral faculty, the intuition of "ought," the notion of rightness, not resolvable into the promptings of self-interest (as pure evolutionism must maintain), goes to the root of a great cause of scepticism. So far, the advocates of the supernatural in man have had the advantage in the argument, as they must have in the long run.

This controversy deserves mention on another account. On both sides it has well illustrated the wisdom of the apostolic injunction—"Be courteous." In these days, when men turn with pain from politics because of their invectives and bitter calumnies, it would pre-eminently serve the cause of religion for those who have just occasion to defend it, to guard against fierceness, bitterness, and unwarranted judgments. This discussion has well shown not only an example, but the advantage, of courteous consideration for an opponent.

There has not often appeared a narrative that more appals and sickens the reader than that recently published, "Russia under the Tzars" (Ward & Downey). The author, who adopts the pseudonym of Stepniak, is a writer of recognised reliableness and authority. Such a woful state of society as he pictures has scarcely an historical parallel. An irresponsible bureaucracy rules everywhere. Men and women are seized and carried off in the dead of the night, without knowing what offence is laid to their charge; the demands of justice and mercy are totally ignored, and thousands of such victims are at this hour suffering imprisonment without trial, attended by merciless horrors which cannot be described.

The Emperor of Russia is represented by the author of this work as tied by red-tapeism, and practically powerless. The empire is governed by others, and they rule through an all-pervasive and unscrupulous police, who appear to be brutally indifferent to age or sex, and to all considerations of human right. We ask, What will be the end of these things? Let us be sure of this, that there can be no gigantic wrong which does not bring gigantic judgments. Let us discard the dream of an enlightened development of humanity if left to itself, and let the faithful set their hope in Him, of whom it is predicted that "He shall not fail, nor be discouraged, till He hath set judgment in the earth."

The facts connected with the death of the boy F. C. Bourdas, while attending King's College, have properly aroused public opinion. The case, it is hoped, will go to end three crying evils: school authorities will be no longer shielded from legal inquiry and control; boys of sensitive nature will no longer have their lives filled with a terror which is all but inconceivable; and big lads will no longer be allowed with impunity to indulge a heartless brutality which has degraded their whole moral nature.

A lady correspondent, at present residing in the island of Java, makes an urgent plea for the evangelisation of the dwellers there. She writes:—

> "The prevailing religion amongst the natives is Mahommedan, but the poor Soedanese in the interior are so grossly ignorant, living perfectly savage lives, having no idea of morality or purity, that the word Mahommedanism is to them a mere name, nothing more. If one out of a family dies, the living have to pay the priest and give a feast so many days, but that is, I believe, the utmost to which they carry their religion. To be sure, there are a few Dutch missionaries scattered throughout the island, but they are few and far between."

A correspondent thinks that many Christian ladies could render valued service to their invalid sisters by the exercise of a little self-denial. Instead of attending Sabbath evening service, they might occasionally devote an hour or two to visiting the sick chambers of lonely and wearied sufferers. If such cases are unknown to the visitor, most probably they could be ascertained from any medical attendant.

> "All that ever came before Me are thieves and robbers; but the sheep did not hear them."

Some of Mr. Carty's friends want to explain to us how he identifies Moses and the prophets with the thieves and robbers of John x. 8. But the idea of such identification shows an ignorance of Scripture which quite disqualifies anyone entertaining it for the position of a Christian teacher. The key to the passage is in the word came. Jesus was "He that should come." He came in "the fulness of time," in his Father's name, when "all things were ready;" that we "might have life abundantly." He came by water and blood; "in due time Christ died for the ungodly." All who came before Him, claiming to be the promised Messiah, were thieves and robbers. And "the sheep did not hear them." Their false pretensions found no response in the hearts of those who, like Simeon and Anna, "waited for the consolation of Israel," but who recognised in the infant Jesus the Lord's Christ; as Peter discerned in the man Christ Jesus the Son of the living God; and as Thomas worshipped Him when risen, "My Lord and my God." (See Dr. Westcott in "Speaker's Commentary.")

Rev. Peter Carmichael, late of Airdrie, N.B., commenced his ministerial labours in London as co-pastor with the Rev. Dr. Edmond, of Highbury Presbyterian Church, on Sunday evening last. He preached an earnest, eloquent sermon to a crowded congregation from the words in Psalm li. 16, 17: "Thou desirest not sacrifice, else would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt offering." We cordially welcome into the ranks of the London evangelical ministry a scholar so able and a preacher so effective as Mr. Carmichael. We heartily wish him God-speed in his new and important sphere.

Dr. Barnardo was present at the noon meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday, with his party of rescued girls, who sail this day (Thursday) from Liverpool, in the Polynesian, under the care of two of the "mothers" from Ilford, and of Mr. W. R. Nicoll, who is, after his return, to go out again and take charge of the Home in Canada. The number going is 77. This makes a total of 736 children sent out since April 1, 1882, in addition to 645 sent out previously by other agencies.

An "International Anti-clerical Congress" was announced to be held in Rome on Saturday last, the anniversary of Voltaire's death; 200 delegates were expected from France and Algiers. What a commentary on the Romish system of religious faith! If the holders of the clerical office throughout Europe had in past times lived and laboured for the true elevation of the people, instead of keeping them in sacerdotal bondage, is it credible that they would now be regarded with such antipathy?

Just now there seems an epidemic of fanaticism in the moral atmosphere. No craze seems too monstrous or too silly to be received eagerly, whether it be the immortality of this present corruptible body on the one hand, or the impropriety of carrying an umbrella on the other.

It seems opportune to remind our readers that there is scarcely a book in the New Testament which does not warn the saints against false teachers; against those who draw away the disciples after themselves; against those who cause divisions, factions, and schisms; against being like children blown about by every wind of doctrine; against being carried about by divers and strange doctrines; against being many teachers and having bitter envying and strife in our hearts. That the Apostle Paul again and again beseeches his beloved ones to avoid contentions, and exhorts them to prove all things, holding fast that which is good; as John also calls upon us to try the spirits whether they be of God, because many false prophets are gone out into the world.

If any teachers derive their doctrines from some private (or special, R.V.) interpretation of particular passages of Scripture; and if the tendency of their teaching is to draw the disciples after themselves, and to produce factions and divisions, we have three Scriptural evidences of their not being in harmony with the Spirit of Truth.

Mr. Quarrier, of Glasgow, is preparing for going to Canada on June 11, with a party of 130 girls.

In a letter to The Times, Miss C. M. Tucker (A. L. O. E.) makes a strenuous appeal on behalf of the Christian Vernacular Education Society, which is a memorial of the great Indian Mutiny:—

> "The object is to provide India with pure literature, and to train native teachers imbued with Scripture knowledge. Never was the Society more needed than now, when Government is educating tens of thousands of youths without the Bible. As one who has devoted her life to working among the natives of the Punjab, I can testify to the value, I had almost said the necessity, of the Society."

The Sentinel, in reporting the case of Mrs. Jeffries, shows, as we had already done, that the counsel for the prosecution virtually pleaded for the defendant, and had the hardihood to say that—

> "With regard to the particular circumstances under which these houses were conducted, there does not appear to have been the slightest proof of disorder, robbery, or anything like a breach of peace, usually connected with the management of such houses. The case really resolved itself into allowing people to assemble together for improper purposes. . . . Undoubtedly they were free from public scandal in the ordinary sense of the word."

There was no need for robbery when her "noble" customers were prepared to lavish money without stint, so long as she ruthlessly catered for their pitiless sensuality. And it was an essential condition that attention should not be attracted to their shameful secrecies.

It is not to be wondered at, after this, that the defending counsel should have made the audacious assertion that "of the importation or exportation of women there is not a particle, not a shade of any sort or description of evidence," and submitted to his lordship on the bench "that if ever there was a case calling for lenient consideration it is the present."

The next scene of the farce was the retirement of the Assistant Judge and the magistrates, to consult for twenty minutes over a foregone conclusion.

Of course we shall be blamed for dwelling on this scandalous covering up of crime. But our marching orders are, "Cry aloud, spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and declare unto my people their transgressions, and to the house of Jacob their sins." The conspiracy of silence has lasted long enough. The affectionate fathers among the Peers, who refuse protection to young girls lest their sons should be found criminals under a Criminal Law Amendment Act, must not have it all their own way.

An important letter on opium smoking in China, given on another page, comes at an appropriate time, when the British public are informed that the question of the Indo-Chinese traffic has been arranged between the two Governments. This arrangement, so far as we have been able to ascertain, only regulates the inland tariff on the imported drug, and will rather help than hinder its wider introduction among the Chinese. In view of the baleful effects of the habit of opium smoking, described in Mr. Eason's letter, this will scarcely be regarded by English Christians as a satisfactory settlement of the matter.

The usual invitation has been issued by Mr. Robert Wilson, of Carlisle, and Mr. H. F. Bowker, of London, to another Convention at Keswick, for the deepening of spiritual life, from Monday, July 27, to Saturday, August 1:—

> "The time is short, and since these Conventions were first held, ten years ago, many loved ones who were wont to meet with us have been called home. May we then, in thus uniting under the Headship of our Risen Lord, enjoy a foretaste of the glorious time when, all the family gathered in, we shall be reunited and with one song praise Him, through whose all-atoning blood such blessing is ours. We ask you to join with us in earnest prayer, that the Holy Ghost will so fill the hearts of speakers and hearers, that all that is said and done may be to the glory of our God; that all hearts may be bowed before Him, and experience such self-surrender as will make our profession that "we are not our own," a living reality; and that henceforth we may truly say, "Our will is the will of our God."

The arrangements will be similar to those of past years, the larger meetings being in the tent. Rev. J. N. Hoare, Vicar of St. John's, has again granted the use of the Lecture Hall, and agreed to open the Church as usual. Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick, will kindly act as Hon. Secretary, to whom application for lodging or hotel accommodation may be sent, stating what is desired.

We have received a number of additional communications respecting "Stores v. Shops," but we have already given as much space as we can afford to this subject. For ourselves, we are chiefly concerned to insist on the golden rules, to do to others as we would that they should do unto us, and to do good unto all men, especially to them who

The gambling nuisance on board Atlantic steamers continues to evoke loud protests from Christian voyagers. A writer in The Christian Commonwealth of last week, who crossed to New York on the newest Cunard steamer, the Etruria, asserts that the evil is growing instead of diminishing:—

> "Men who never think of gambling at home occupy nearly their whole time at games of chance while crossing the Atlantic. The gambling fever is usually excited by selling pools on the runs of the ship. This is supposed to be a very innocent amusement, and many respectable men, and even some who call themselves Christians, think it first-rate fun to invest in these pools. But after careful investigation I am satisfied that they are for the most part in the hands of a gambling ring, who usually pocket a large sum of money from the uninitiated. But this is not the worst of it. The demoralising influence of this pool-selling soon begets a gambling spirit, and it often happens that some very unsuspecting persons are unloaded of a hundred pounds or more before reaching New York or Liverpool."

All who value sound morals will endorse the strong protest of this correspondent. He calls on the steamship companies to interpose their veto on such demoralising and illegal practices. It seems nothing less than ridiculous to suppose that the officers of the companies have not the power to terminate the evil practice, if carried on in the public parts of their ships. The writer says:—

> "I have reason to believe that the Cunard Company, at least, would be glad to have a reformation as regards this matter. Mr. Cunard himself, who was one of the passengers on the Etruria, seemed to be mortified at the unblushing effrontery with which the gambling business was conducted. As this company now is in the lead, as regards all improvements relating to steamship navigation, let them be the first to set an example in clearing out from their smoking-rooms the infamous business of auctioneering pools on their magnificent vessels."

Mr. William Tallack, of the Howard Association, in a letter to The Times of Thursday last, makes the somewhat startling statement that alongside the growth of prohibitory legislation in the United States there has been "a terrible and disheartening increase in the consumption of intoxicating liquors." The figures given refer, however, to the country generally, and it would have been much more satisfactory if Mr. Tallack could have furnished comparative and reliable statistics, showing the proportion of increase (if any) in the States affected by Prohibition. As the figures stand, we are not at all convinced that legal Prohibition is useless in staying the course of the evils that flow from the traffic in drink.

Nor, indeed, is this Mr. Tallack's contention; but that moral suasion must go hand-in-hand with legal prohibition. Doubtless they act and react upon each other. Yet there is great moral suasion, to a law-abiding people like the Anglo-Saxon race, in the mere fact of legal enactment.

At the same time, there is not a little force in these remarks of Mr. Tallack:—

> "No mere extension of suffrage, nor efforts to enforce sobriety by law, can be expected to avail on either side of the Atlantic, except or until, by moral suasion and similar influences, the great body of the people have been brought to see the necessity for self-denial or self-control in this direction. Even the success of prohibition in such States as Maine has only been rendered practicable through a most persevering preliminary education of public opinion. And in proportion as the continuance of such moral suasion has anywhere been relaxed, the actual observance of prohibition has also become imperilled."

Mr. Tallack's conclusion is that public opinion must be persistently educated and question; and, further, that the provision of popular and harmless substitutes for intoxicating drink must receive more attention. These are suggestions with which every thoughtful and unprejudiced man will coincide.

"Scratch the Russian and you come to the Tartar." Truth, which poses as a radical of the Radicals, and as enthusiastically devoted to the interests of the people, takes sides with the peers' sons against the people's daughters, and sneers at the protection of girls above the age of fifteen, or indeed of twelve, or indeed of any age. To extend it above fifteen would, according to Truth (?), only lead to extortion and black-mail!

It is a mischievous thing to set class against class; yet this is of necessity a class question, which will never be solved until the people understand it to be the question whether their families shall be the hunting-ground of wealthy voluptuaries; whether the working man's daughters shall be, like the slave-girl of the rice-swamp, so pathetically described by Whittier as

"Toiling through the livelong day,
And at night the spoiler's prey."

God will be on the side of the People when they lift up their hand to heaven, and swear by Him that liveth for ever and ever that it shall be so no longer.

Tyre and Sidon and Philistia had sold a boy for a harlot and given a girl for wine, that they might drink. "Will ye render Me a recompence?" asks God; "and if ye recompence Me, swiftly and speedily will I return your recompence on your own head." Read England for Tyre. Every day brings some new and startling revelation of the hideous traffic in flesh and blood.

THE STORY OF A PICTURE.

THE issue of 15,000 copies of a shilling picture within the space of sixteen months is a fact worthy of more than a passing note. We refer to an allegorical picture, "The Broad and the Narrow Way."* The picture is of German origin. Between thirty and forty years ago a Mrs. Reihlen, the wife of a wealthy merchant in Stuttgart, designed it, and induced a Mr. Walker, also a German residing in Stuttgart, to paint it. It was then lithographed, and scattered through Germany as a wall-print. Afterwards a Dutch edition was published, and some seventeen years ago, when Mr. Gawin Kirkham, secretary of the Open-air Mission, was in Holland, preaching to the Dutch by interpretation, he brought a copy from Amsterdam. After 4000 copies of this Dutch edition had been sold in this country, an English edition was produced, followed rapidly by two other editions.

The picture may be described as a kind of Continental Pilgrim's Progress, and has the well-known passage in the Sermon on the Mount for its basis, "Enter ye in at the strait gate," &c. (Matt. vii. 13, 14). The picture in its English garb is 18 inches by 25, one edition being tinted and the other coloured.

During the past sixteen years Mr. Kirkham has expounded it 564 times, having for this purpose a large copy, 9 ft. by 12 in size. Many souls have thus been led from the broad into the narrow way, and the authoress being dead continues to speak to succeeding generations by this happy product of her thoughtful mind.

ITALIANS IN GLASGOW.—In an upper room of the Gallowgate may be found, several nights a week, a little company of Italians, mostly children, gathered in by the daughter of a city clergyman. She speaks their language fluently, and has endeared herself to them by her kindly interest in their welfare. She is assisted by another lady and an Italian student. An old wrinkled father may sometimes be seen writing a copy-book by the side of his son. They sing hymns, listen attentively to Bible stories, and receive instruction in reading and

SUCCESS IN HOME MISSION WORK.

By Rev. JAMES WELLS, Glasgow.

From an address at the Free Church Assembly, Edinburgh.

FOREMOST among the conditions of success, we must place a creed. I have always found that the most successful workers hold more firmly than others do the Apostle's Creed in its entirety, purity, proportions, and tone. Philanthropies and social reforms apart from the Gospel have as yet done very little, and, I fear, will never do much for the sunken; but they who seek first the kingdom of God among them see all these things added and preserved. We must have a creed that gives us a message of mercy from God to the perishing, and makes us dare to expect the greatest moral and spiritual revolutions among the most abandoned. I believe that among us the chief hindrance to eminent success is what may be fairly called evangelical moderatism. This moderatism may reveal itself in a great concern for culture and a nervous fear of being reproached with cant, and a lack of sympathy with liberality and science, or it may appear as a self-centred doctrinal orthodoxy which seems more anxious to save propositions than persons. In either case it robs us of that happy, unstrained intensity which is needful for great impressions; for the light of the Gospel, like the light of electricity, is spread by concentration.

A well stored and cultivated intellect is now needed more than ever in our mission pulpits, for, thanks to our School Boards, the humblest in our land receive substantially as good a school education as the wealthiest; and, out of school, their struggles for self-support give them an additional education which many of our better off youths have not. I do not believe that any man who is not a real student can permanently interest and instruct any home mission flock. The true home missionary will strive to gain all the culture he possibly can, but he will not suffer anything calling itself culture to tamper with the essence, matter, and contents of his message. He will have a care not to adulterate the sincere milk of Christ's evangel with the water of modern philosophy.

Visitation is the second grand element of success. The other year some London pastors invited the churchless to a conference, and asked, "Why don't you come to the church?" A man at once replied, "Because the church does not come to us." There was excellent philosophy in that reply. It was an unconscious echo of the words of Christ: "Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." This work must be done largely by personal influence, by house-to-house and face-to-face visitation. The ideal Home Mission minister gives special attention to the notorious blackguards, for he hopes to see them one day monuments of saving grace. He never speaks of the lapsed masses, for sound theology has taught him that universal mankind is one lapsed mass, and he has discovered the essential sameness of man in intellectuals and spirituals. He makes as great efforts to gain the friendship of the abandoned as other men make to gain the friendship of their social equals or superiors.

We must not forget the children, for they are the largest part of our mission field, the most interesting, the most hopeful, and, in view of the future, the most influential. The law of gravitation is scarcely more unfailing than that by which the poorest children are attracted by Christian kindness, and the poorer the children the mightier is this magnetism among them. We all find that the noblest young hearts often beat under rags, and that they are very open to Christian influences. Many of them show great sensitiveness of conscience and a notable readiness to respond to the claims of Christ when simply presented to them. Work among the young should be a specialty in all our Home Mission flocks. Success must be limited where the children are not enlisted. The minister who takes a warm interest in them will be amply rewarded.

Organisation contributes greatly to success. One of our standing problems is how to call forth the zealous and sustained efforts of the membership. Vast possibilities of service belong even to the humblest people. Many of our mission converts, especially while in the glow of their first love, are really spiritual geniuses. To enlist, hearten, and train these is a task worthy of our highest efforts. It is a mistaken spirituality which neglects organisation. A minister will be powerful just in proportion as his own work becomes relatively a small part of the work of the whole flock—just in proportion as he can touch the spring of action in others and set agencies agoing which can move on without him. At the same time we often find that the most promising converts are gathered in by personal influence apart from organisations. In days of revival our churches increase by neighbour bringing neighbour, schoolboy his schoolfellow, and shopman his shopmate. We should, therefore, strive to inspire with the idea of Christian usefulness the many who can have no recognised place in our agencies, and remind them that the very highest service is within their reach also.

MILDMAY DEACONESSES' WORK.

SOLID work is often slow work, often hidden work. Sudden bloom often crowns a late spring. Those who ask where the Mildmay Deaconesses work, should visit the Conference Hall on Whit-Monday, and see the 1200 men, women, and children who are invited there to spend their Bank Holiday once a year. This year it was wet, but they came all the same. They are selected from the classes conducted by the deaconesses in some dozen or more parishes in different parts of London, and are a splendid proof of the blessing vouchsafed on the labours of these devoted Christian ladies. The heart of any spectator would be gladdened to see their happy faces enjoying their holiday in a rational and Christian manner, and this joy would be further heightened by remembering what they might have been if no effort had been put forth for their salvation.

The garden, so well known to Conference attendants, is usually a merry place on this occasion, but the persistent rain drove the guests into the large hall, where Mr. Kirkham expounded to them his never-failing Dutch picture of "The Broad and the Narrow Way." Then came the welcome tea-time; two large marquees in the garden, in addition to the basement rooms, enabling the whole party to feed at the same time. And, finally, there was a most attractive programme for the evening in the large hall. After listening with intense pleasure to five of Dr. Barnardo's rescued boys discoursing sweet sounds upon their fine peal of hand-bells, came a series of beautifully executed dissolving views of Bible subjects, familiarly explained by Pastor Frank White, and interspersed with charming singing by the North Evangelistic Choir. The abatement of the rain enabled the people to reach their homes with comfort, to reflect for another year upon this red-letter day.

COUNTRY TOWNS MISSION.—In the forty-eighth annual report before us, the Committee thankfully report continued blessing on the agents' labours. The secretary is Mr. G. H. Mawer, 18, New Bridge-street, E.C.

TO ENGLISH CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

MAY I propose a question for you to put to yourselves? "What am I doing for those far-off sisters of mine, scattered over the vast continent of India? I have heard something of their pitiable condition, &c., and now and again my sympathies have been drawn forth towards them, but have I done what I could to alleviate their sorrows?" This is really a solemn question, for it touches a solemn duty. God has entrusted India and her millions of women to our country, that we may convey to our Indian sisters "living water"—the "bread of life"—even Jesus and his grace. Thus, every English Christian woman has a duty to fulfil—a duty which she cannot evade. Be, then, in earnest—not to do all that needs to be done, that is beyond the power of any of us,—but to do what we can, and try to interest others to do what they can.

Above all, let us be faithful in prayer—that mighty power which moves the hand that moves the universe; that "effectual, fervent prayer which availeth much"—continuous, persevering, believing prayer. God's response will be full and free, and we shall have to give thanks to Him at no distant time (Heb. iv. 16). If there is one thing more than another we would press on our friends it is an increase of trustful, expectant supplication. Ask that the child-widows of India may be released by the speedy abolition of early marriage. Ask that the wrongs which have so long afflicted them may be redressed—that the Hindus as a nation may be delivered from this cruel custom, which blights tens of thousands of youthful lives. Ask that the many secret believers among both men and women may have their way opened to declare themselves Christians openly; that the network of social and religious observances in which Hindus are enclosed, and from which escape is so difficult, may be rent asunder by the mighty power of God, for man cannot rend it.

Ask, also, that power from on high may be given to believing Hindus, that they may see vividly, and fulfil faithfully, their special duties—to be in earnest in evangelising their own people, that many a Silas and Timothy among men, and many a "beloved Persis, who laboured much in the Lord," among women, may arise and go forward in this all-important work.

A CHRISTIAN WORKER'S JOURNAL.

THE Gospel Union News, a twenty-four page monthly journal, is published at New Haven, Conn., by John C. Collins, in the interest of Christian workers. It contains news, items, suggestions, plans, correspondence, sermons, sketches, &c., for the furtherance of special Christian work in the churches, by evangelists and otherwise, to reach the masses and unevangelised classes of America. The subscription is placed at the nominal sum of 75 cents for a year, or 1.00 dollar for sixteen months. The June number contains portraits, finely engraved from recent photographs, of Rev. Dr. G. F. Pentecost and Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stebbins, the Gospel singers, with brief biographical sketches and full details of the great evangelist and pastor's methods of work in the Tompkins-avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N.Y., by which this church has grown in four years from a membership of 200 to one of 900, and become in many ways a model working church. Many of Dr. Pentecost's plans may easily be made use of in other churches. This number will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of 10 cents.

THE MILDMAY MISSION HOSPITAL in Turville-street, Bethnal Green, established in October, 1877, has already treated 2094 in-patients, and over 30,000 out-patients on strictly Temperance principles, no beer, wine or spirits being ever permitted in the hospital, or sanctioned outside. Among the patients, who are drawn from the poor and often degraded population of that dense neighbourhood, many have been hard drinkers up to the time of their admission, but no permanent bad results have been seen from the immediate stoppage of stimulants.

MISSIONARY BREAKFASTS.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

ONE of the pleasantest of May Meetings is the "Missionary Breakfast" of the Religious Tract Society. The annual gathering of friends there is, in fact, unique. Nowhere else are seen together so many men whose faces, familiar as they are, call up before the mind so many varied forms of Christian enterprise at home and abroad. The speakers represent missionary effort in every part of the world, not only in well known fields like India and China, but in the remotest and most obscure regions, and on the Continent of Europe nearer home. And the work described is of a kind rarely touched upon at ordinary missionary meetings. Christian literature in all languages, its preparation and its distribution, this is the topic on which the speakers are instructed to dwell.

Nothing could be more replete with interest than the proceedings of this year's breakfast. First there was the Servian Minister, an evangelical member of the Greek Church, who has himself translated the "Pilgrim's Progress" into the Servian language. Then there were Mr. Muirhead (L.M.S.), from Shanghai; Mr. Warren (C.M.S.), from China; Mr. Bentley (B.M.S.), from the Congo; Mr. Carss (C.M.S.), from Bombay; Mr. Shaw (L.M.S.), from Madagascar, Mr. Lewis (L.M.S.), from South India; together with an American gentleman, Mr. Newell, to tell of evangelistic work in Paris, and Mr. Bloomer, to describe missionary efforts among foreign sailors on the Thames; all of them telling of the influence, not so much of the living voice as of the printed page; and all acknowledging with gratitude the help given in producing the printed pages by grants from the Religious Tract Society.—Record.

TALBOT TABERNACLE.

Among the varied institutions carried on in connection with the Talbot Tabernacle, Bayswater, is the Annual Missionary Breakfast. On Whit Monday morning, Pastor Frank White once more found himself surrounded with a large number of friends, who had come to Powis Hall to hear about missionary effort, and to provoke one another to increased love and good works in relation to its sustenance and extension. And certainly not a little of the enjoyment consisted in the converse on spiritual and experimental topics which the gathering afforded.

After a substantial breakfast, which was kindly provided by some members of the congregation, Mr. White heartily welcomed the assembly, and hoped that greater missionary zeal might be the outcome of the meeting. Among those who had gone forth from their midst, some were in India, some in China, and some in Africa. Those who go thus to distant lands do so at no small sacrifice, but he had generally marked that those who suffered most for Christ's sake seemed to think the least of it.

Mr. Stevenson, of the China Inland Mission, referred to the tidings from Shanghai, concerning the wonderful work of Grace there, in connection with the meetings held by the Cambridge students.

Rev. G. A. Shaw (Madagascar) will be long remembered by those who were present, for his deeply interesting and instructive address. It was, so to speak, a history in miniature of missionary work in that island, noting the alternate periods of persecution and toleration which the great movement has witnessed, with the steadfastness and heroism of the converts all through. It was touching to hear that amid the suffering they endured through the recent French invasion, they never prayed for vengeance upon their enemies, but only for grace to manifest a Christian spirit. The remarkable growth of the work was seen in the increase from eighteen Christian churches in 1868 to more than two hundred and fifty in 1880, while the number of professed Christians has risen to seventy thousand. One of the most hopeful features is the Evangelistic spirit which exists among the converts. There is a band of preachers in each of the churches, and not less than 450 native preachers and teachers. Let it not be supposed, however, that the island is all Christian; although the national idols are cast away among the Hovas, yet three-fourths of the entire nation retain them. It is painful to be compelled to refuse aid to deputations who come from heathen parts of the island imploring help, and asking for Christian teachers.

Not less instructive was the address that followed, by Rev. W. H. Bentley, of the Baptist Congo Mission, who gave a graphic sketch of the history of the mission from its commencement. Great opposition was offered by the natives to the advance of the missionaries, but failing in one route they found out another. The learning of the language (marvellously rich), the trading with the natives, the rearing of the mission stations, were described in detail, leaving a vivid impression on the minds of the hearers.

A few words from Rev. Evan Hopkins, showing the kind of men needed for missionaries, came in most appropriately. A converted costermonger had recently remarked to him, "My soul is now under new management;" so will it be with all who yield themselves entirely to Christ to be fully possessed by Him. At Keswick he heard of a ploughman who was always looking behind him to see if he had ploughed straight; consequently the man did his work badly. So will it be in our experience if we are ever looking into ourselves rather than unto Jesus.

THE CHURCHES IN NEW YORK CITY.

A NEW interest is felt in the general subject of City Evangelisation, and inquiries are being constantly made as to the best means of overcoming the poverty and wretchedness of the large cities. The number and the condition of the churches are being carefully investigated, and suggestions made as to the character of the services. Many of the old-established conservative churches in prominent positions have adopted an informal service, to which all are freely invited, pains being taken to make the seats entirely free and open.

The past season has been one of unusual encouragement. The churches have been active and aggressive, and many have been brought under the power of the truth. The various evangelistic services outside of the churches have been attended by large numbers of all classes, and many who seemed almost hopelessly down have been lifted up, and set upon their feet again. THE CHRISTIAN brings to us glad news of the work of the "Missions" in London, and a similar effort is to be made by members of the Episcopal church in this city.

The New York City Mission is sending out its fifty missionaries on their errands of love and mercy. There being large districts of the city without any church accommodation, the City Mission is also erecting large commodious houses of worship, and organising churches of the people. One of these is now being built in the centre of a Ward of 30,000 people, now without a single English-speaking Protestant Church. The larger number of the City Missionaries are women, mostly of New England origin and training. For the charge of these churches for the people, the City Mission looks to the colleges and seminaries for the brightest and most earnest of thoroughly consecrated young men. Further information of the plans of the City Mission, and of the general subject of city evangelisation, may be had at the head-quarters of the City Mission, 50, Bible House, New York City, United States of America. FEMALE PRISONERS.—On Thursday, May 21, "Mercy House" was formerly opened as a Branch of the Nine Elms' Prison Mission. Sir John Kennaway presided. Mrs. Meredith explained that in consequence of the removal of prisoners from Tothill Fields Prison to Millbank, it seemed imperative to secure a house contiguous to Millbank. After some difficulty the present house was taken, affording a temporary haven for discharged women prisoners; not only will their temporal wants be attended to, but they will hear of Jesus, the Saviour of sinners. Space will not admit of a description of "Mercy House," but an account of it will be found in the April number of Open Doors.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN PAISLEY, N.B.

SINCE Mr. Moody's last visit to Paisley, in the summer of 1883, several attempts have been made, with varying success, by the Evangelistic Association here to continue the good work then so auspiciously begun. Several well-known evangelists were brought to give addresses, and though all of them had souls for their hire, yet their meetings did not awaken any very general interest. For the past ten days a new attempt has been made to arouse the careless and stir up believers to renewed spiritual activity; we are glad to say it has met with a large measure of success. The meetings have been held in the Free High Church, where Mr. Moody was so signally owned and blessed of God on his first visit to Paisley.

Before the services in the church began, large open-air meetings were held near by, presided over by Mr. Alexander Andrew, the missionary of the congregation, who was assisted by nearly all the missionaries in town. The hearty co-operation of these earnest and devoted men did much to secure the success of the meetings. In the church Rev. J. B. Sturrock, the minister of the congregation, presided, and the ministers who gave the addresses were all from Glasgow, where they have been instrumental in winning many souls. There were Rev. Messrs. Hill, Brown, Andrew, Forsyth, Ross, Gullan, Girvan, Fullerton, Glendinning, and Lowe. With marked simplicity of speech and yet with great spiritual power, all of these preachers pressed Christ on the people, their texts fitting into each other in a marvellous way, as if they had been prearranged to aid each other in gaining some definite end.

From the outset there were inquirers, and it was somewhat touching that the first of these should all have belonged to the large company who, more than two years ago, at Mr. Moody's meetings, decided to be the Lord's. Since then they had evidently found out some of the difficulties in the Christian life, and were standing in much need of comfort, which was freely given them out of that horn of plenty, the Word of God. Many were domestic servants, who apparently find it difficult to keep up such connections and companionships as would aid them in the divine life. One was asked, who had evidently been left alone to fight with her doubts and fears, "Why did you not go to your minister and tell him all this?" Her answer was, "I didn't like;" and yet she came forward in the warm atmosphere of an evangelistic meeting to tell her case to a stranger. This is suggestive, and, at least, gives rise to this question: Should there not be such services in connection with every congregation?

Whilst good has been done at all the meetings, much fruit was gathered on the Friday evening, when Mr. Gullan gave the address, one of the missionaries stating at the close that the first four persons he spoke to told him that they had accepted Christ during the service. That evening the people seemed reluctant to go away, and ever since all have remained to the after-meeting and entered into its short but impressive services with evident interest and pleasure. Quite a feature of these meetings has been the frankness with which God's people have expressed their indebtedness to the services for quickening, and as they have come from various congregations in turn, we should expect that the indirect influence of this movement will be widespread.

One of the most interesting cases that came under the observation of the workers was that of a man, who was seen night after night in the front seats, where he sat listening with eager interest. On being spoken to, he said, "Yes, I'm a changed man, since these meetings began." "Ay, that he is," said his wife, who was with him; "last week we had family worship for the first time in our married life. I bless God for the meetings; they have brought joy to my fireside." It is hoped that this short evangelistic effort will be repeated ere the year is out.

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN ITALY. — The fourteenth annual report contains a résumé of the negotiations for effecting a union of the Protestant Churches in Italy, and the result. Extracts are given from pastors' and evangelists' letters showing the encouraging progress of the work all over the country. The report of the Italian Evangelical Schools is also before us, showing that although the schools still suffer at the hands of the priests, they enjoy the sympathy of the people. The writer, Rev. J. R. McDougall, Scotch Church, Florence, would esteem it a favour if Christian travellers would visit these schools.

CHINA'S PERISHING MILLIONS.

THE past year has been one of eventful interest in the history of the China Inland Mission. As Mr. Broomhall, the Secretary, remarked, at the annual meeting last week, there is no disguising the fact that the mission has now become quite popular—thanks, to a large extent, to the public attention aroused by the dedication and departure of "the Cambridge party." An indication of this increased interest was to be found in the unusually large attendance in Mildmay Conference Hall at the afternoon and evening gatherings on Wednesday week. On both occasions the spacious area of the hall was filled, and the audience of the afternoon overflowed into the gallery.

In the regretted absence of the Earl of Shaftesbury, the afternoon meeting was presided over by Mr. THEODORE HOWARD. At the commencement of the proceedings, Mr. Hill (Hon. Secretary) read portions of a letter received from Mr. Hudson Taylor, and dated Shanghai, March 31, in which he said:—

"You will wish to know a little of God's goodness to those of us who have recently left the country. The completion, and more than the completion, of 'the Seventy' for whom we prayed, has already given cause for thanksgiving to God; and the journeys to China of the latter parties of missionaries have been owned, and blessed to fellow-travellers, as were some of the earlier journeys. Notwithstanding the unsettlement caused by war, no less than seven brethren have been able to proceed up the Han towards the North-west, four also have been located in what were out-stations in the central province of Ganhwuy, in which we have long wished to see resident missionaries. A happy party of our sisters from Scotland are rejoicing in the Lord in Yang-chau. The first converts in Yun-nan have been given to our brethren during the present year—two at Ta-li Fu, and three at Yun-nan-Fu. In God's good providence, Messrs. Foucar and John Smith have obtained passports for Yun-nan, where Mr. George Clarke is anxiously awaiting them, in order to see satisfactory arrangements made before coming down to Eastern China. We have been greatly cheered by the arrival of the last party, consisting of Mr. Stanley Smith and his companions. Not only were they able to labour for the Lord on board the steamers in which they travelled, but five meetings were held at Colombo, one at Penang, one at Singapore, three at least at Hong Kong. On arrival in Shanghai, a series of public meetings, afternoon and evening, were held, which have been productive of much good, and which have more thoroughly affected Shanghai than any series of meetings that have ever been held.

"Our friends and readers will be already acquainted with the interruption to the work at Bhamo and Upper Burmah, by the state of rebellion and anarchy which prevails. It is feared that all our own mission property will be found destroyed when peace is restored, as we know is the case with regard to a great deal of the property of the American missionaries. It is cause for thankfulness that the missionaries and native pastor were got away in safety, and, as far as we know, the native Christians have not personally suffered.

"Though not in any way connected with our own mission, we cannot leave the above short reference to Cheh-kiang without mentioning the remarkable work of grace which has cheered the hearts of the missionaries of the C.M.S. in the Choo-ku district. May God grant that such refreshing revival may be speedily recorded from all parts of China, and in connection with the work of each mission labouring in this empire."

Mr. BROOMHALL did not present any formal report of the development of the work during the year, but in a short statement referred to its outstanding features. While recognising the fact that the mission had within a short period become popular, he said they could not at such a time forget the devoted and successful labours of the pioneers of the mission, many of whom had now gone to their rest and their reward. Looking at the present aspect of the work generally, Mr. Broomhall went over scriatim the different provinces into which the Empire of China is divided, mentioning the population, and the number of workers stationed in them in connection with the Inland Mission. There are missionaries now in 14 provinces, but the number is so few in proportion to the population that Mr. Radcliffe was quite justified, when at the evening meeting he designated them a "skeleton army." There are in all 163 workers in the field, of whom 34 are the wives of missionaries; 18 of these were mission workers in China before marriage. During the past year 46 went out to swell the staff; Miss Minchin, one of these, has since died in Shanghai, but not before she had done noble work among sailors visiting that port. Alluding to the question of finance, the Secretary said that the income of 1884 was close on £18,000, some £1670 in excess of the previous year. This year £8000 have been received from Christian friends on behalf of the work, about £2000 in advance of the corresponding period last year.

The mission, while thus growing in favour with man, is also manifestly growing in favour with God. Converts are being won in the different provinces, so that in some of the stations a goodly company of Church members have been gathered. Considerable blessing has also followed the testimony of the outgoing missionaries on board ship. One case, not hitherto published, to which Mr. Broomhall referred, was that of a pronounced Freethinker who had been a victim to the power of strong drink. He was brought to see his condition and led to trust in Christ for salvation. He destroyed his infidel publications and went on to Calcutta, where he has since been actively engaged in Christian work. Mr. Broomhall had a good deal to say, of course, about the Cambridge party — Messrs. Stanley Smith, C. T. Studd, and the five others whose names are now familiar to us all. These brethren were not chosen because of their social position, or their intellectual attainments, but because of their whole-hearted consecration to God. "We thank God for them," said the Secretary, "and we shall be thankful if He sends to us others of the same kind." The current issue of China's Millions contains detailed and deeply-interesting accounts of the voyage out, written by the Cambridge brethren, besides other matter well calculated to sustain and enlarge the interest of English Christians in this great mission field. The re-issue of Mr. Hudson Taylor's book on "China's Spiritual Need and Claims" is in its sixth edition, and it is earnestly commended to all who would acquaint themselves with the conditions of the people and the country.

With respect to the present and special needs of the mission, Mr. Broomhall said that new premises were much needed in Shanghai, which is the point of arrival and departure of all outgoing or returning missionaries. A new prayer-meeting room at Pyrland-road would also be a great boon. Besides this, more men and women are urgently needed still further to reinforce the band of workers in the field. At the beginning of this month Mr. Hudson Taylor telegraphed for thirty more men to be sent out without delay. Many are applying for enrolment in the ranks of the Mission, and it is hoped in due time to send out the number asked for. The indispensable qualifications are a fair English education, good health, plenty of common sense, well-ascertained success in mission work at home, and, above all, full consecration of heart and life to God, love to the Saviour and to the souls of men. Mr. Broomhall concluded his statement by a reference to the opium trade arrangements just made between Great Britain and China. The result of the convention, which we were led to suppose would happily remove this standing outrage on national morality, appears to be that still greater facilities will be granted for the introduction of opium from the coast. In view of the early election in this country, Mr. Broomhall threw out the hint that electors should require satisfactory pledges from candidates for Parliamentary service. We must never rest till the Indian Government ceases to cultivate the baleful drug and export it to China.

After some earnest and sympathetic words from the Chairman, Mr. Thomson, of Edinburgh, told the remarkable story of revival among the students in that city that began with a visit from Messrs. Studd and Stanley Smith, and is now extending to all parts of the northern kingdom. This story, in its results at least, has already been related in these columns by Dr. Moxey, so that we need not now go into details. As it came from Mr. Thomson's lips on this occasion, it created a deep impression. One point specially touched upon was of importance in its bearing on the future of the movement. Not only were some of the best known Professors in Edinburgh University taking an active part in the work, but not a few of the ablest and most promising students had come within its influence. A goodly number of the young student converts had already offered themselves for medical mission work, with a view to go, in due time, to some distant and heathen field of labour. At the evening meeting Mr. Thomson resumed and finished his narrative, speaking chiefly of the spread of the movement throughout Scotland, by means of the students' holiday deputations. The following places he said had been visited, and in each there were saving manifestations of the power of God's Spirit, through the simple testimonies of the young men—Bathgate, Stirling, Perth, Falkirk, Boness, Queensferry, Dunfermline, Musselburgh, Wick, Greenock, Jedburgh, Cupar-Fife, Alloa, Kirkcaldy, Broxburn, Dunse, Arbroath, Crieff, and, in England, Bradford and Brighton.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe having offered prayer, a vigorous and telling address was given by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. He earnestly pleaded for the work of the China Inland Mission, because of the vastness of the field, because of its undenominational character, because of the favourable crisis that now exists in China, where the sleep of bygone ages is being cast off, and the people are receptive of outside influences, because of the influential character of the Chinese race, and because they have special claims on British sympathy and help. On the last point Mr. Hughes spoke strongly as to the guilt of England in connection with the opium war and the opium trade. Incidentally he referred in terms of strong approbation to the paper on Missions, by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, that appeared in our last issue.

Lord Radstock followed in a brief address, and led the meeting in prayer for the power of the Holy Ghost to rest on the work and the workers.

At the evening meeting Mr. George Williams, who presided, referred very forcibly to the greatness of the mission-field in China, and pleaded for much liberality on the part of Christians at home in supporting the work of the Inland Mission. Deeply interesting accounts of the Mission operations were given by Dr. Douthwaite and Mr. Parrott, both of whom have laboured in China for a considerable period in connection with the Mission. Their narratives of travel, of Gospel effort, and more than all, perhaps, of God's faithfulness in providing for their physical needs, were such as to strengthen and encourage the workers abroad and the helpers at home.

The last address was by Mr. Radcliffe, who, in his rousing and characteristic way, threw into bold relief the tremendous spiritual needs of the heathen lands, and the comparative supineness of professing Christians throughout Great Britain and America. Before the interesting proceedings closed, Mr. Williams made a warm appeal for increased pecuniary help to the Mission in its efforts to increase the band of missionaries at work in the broad fields of China. He said that any sums would be gratefully received by the Secretary, 2, Pyrland-road, N.

THE HOME FOR ORPHAN GIRLS, Cumberland-street, Walthamstow, still holds on its way. The last report issued by Mr. Parsons, the superintendent, says:—"Very often I have spent the last penny, and frequently only the Lord has been told of it. But again and ever has He remembered his word, and sent help at the right time." Then follow the interesting experiences of a remarkable interposition on a certain Monday. Mrs. Pearson intends having a sale during the present month of June, at the Town Hall, Walthamstow, and will be glad of any help that friends can render.

COUNTRY AIR FOR CITY CHILDREN.

SIR,—May I repeat my customary appeal at this season of the year, in aid of a fund to provide the Committee with the means of giving the poor children of many of the ragged-schools a day in the country? Over three thousand enjoyed this boon last year. It is proposed, in addition, to give a fortnight's change of air to as many as possible of the convalescent or enfeebled children specially needing it, and for this purpose a country cottage has been secured on a beautiful common in Surrey. 306 weakly children had this fortnight's healthful country change in 1884.

The number who will obtain this great moral and physical benefit this summer, either for the shorter or the longer period, will largely depend upon the response to this appeal, which I earnestly commend to the generous sympathy of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN. Yours faithfully,

SHAFTESBURY.

[We gladly insert the foregoing, as customary, because the Ragged School Union represents such a vast constituency of youthful candidates for a day or a stay in the country. There are hosts of other though smaller companies of children eager to enjoy the like boon, and the sums contributed by our readers will, as far as possible, be equitably distributed.—ED.]

NORTH LONDON EVANGELISTIC CHOIR.

FOR more than ten years these Christian singers have devoted themselves to strengthening various branches of the Lord's work by their services of song. Similar choirs exist in various parts of London, forming a practical result of the missions held by Messrs. Moody and Sankey and their helpers during their visits to the metropolis. They have, doubtless, done much to sustain the interest which is felt in the Gospel songs which the evangelists have left as a legacy to this country.

A service of song was recently given at the Gospel Hall, Wood Green, which will serve as a specimen of those held in other places. About forty members were present, under the leadership of Mr. J. W. Godfrey. After a congregational hymn and opening prayer, the object of the choir was briefly explained. This was followed by which struck the keynote of the evening, the subsequent pieces being illustrative of our Lord's ministry in Galilee.

"Memories of Galilee," (Songs and Solos).

A few well-chosen remarks from Luke iv. 16—20 prepared the way for the singing of "Abundantly able to save."

(Christian Choir).

From Matt. iv. 18—22 the leader set forth the claim the Lord has upon those whom He has called to His service, necessitating a definite choice between the things of earth and those of heaven. These remarks were appropriately followed by

"Who is on the Lord's side?"

By Mark i. 39—45 the love of Christ was shown towards "him that hath no helper," while His willingness to heal is only equalled by His power to save. These and similar blessed thoughts were embodied in the hymn,

"Christ receiveth sinful men."

Some of the remaining pieces sung were: "Peace, be still," "Jesus knows thy sorrow," "I'll stand by you till the morning," and "Come to Jesus, ye who wander," which were preceded respectively by comments upon Mark iv. 35—41, Matthew ix. 28, Mark vi. 47—51, and Matthew xi. 28—30.

The entire service lasted about an hour and a half, and formed a very pleasant and edifying mode of attracting outsiders, who are often led to enter a hall by the sound of bright and frequent singing. Various subjects of a similar character are chosen from the Word of God and illustrated by appropriate hymns. Mr. Godfrey's remarks throughout the evening were of a pointed and striking character, dealing often with familiar subjects in a fresh and interesting way, but with a direct purpose to reach the hearts of those who were present. We believe that the Spirit blessed the message both to Christians and to the unsaved. Engagements for the services of the choir may be made by communicating with the Secretary, Mr. T. Howe, 5, Baronsmere-road, Finchley, N.

MISSION WORK AT PANGBOURNE.

A MISSION has been held here by Mr. Israel Sida. He first commenced a series of Gospel Temperance addresses, which roused some opposition. Nothing daunted, the evangelist began distinct Gospel services. For the delivery of these he was compelled, for lack of sympathy and assistance in the place from those who might have lent suitable accommodation, to go outside the place to a boat-house for the purpose. Here again people's hearts were touched, both for and against the preacher, to such an extent that his personal safety was threatened by some, and others formed themselves into an escort to enable him to reach his temporary home in safety.

It is sad to think that though the services were evidently taking a hold on people's hearts, and winning souls for Christ, yet those who are supposed to be in responsible charge of all those souls, could not be induced to show any interest or sympathy in the matter. They were more than once appealed to in writing, in the spirit of plain brotherly love to do so. The attendance steadily increased to a large number, and when Mr. Sida left, tearful eyes acknowledged that he whom they had held to be an enemy, had in truth been the first who had shown them true happiness and liberty.

THE McALL MISSION AT ST. ETIENNE.

DEAR SIR,—Gospel work is progressing in this important town. Last Sunday we held a Prayer-meeting for all those who had publicly rendered their testimony in previous meetings. We were seventy on our knees imploring a renewal of the baptism of the Holy Spirit. During the meeting the Lord brought in three backsliders, who confessed their sin in tears before all.

Space would not permit me to give details of cases of those whom the Lord has brought into his fold. I may, however, mention the case of a young woman who confessed openly in a prayer-meeting that she had resolved to destroy herself a few days before she heard of our meeting, for she was suffering morally and spiritually. She was passing the door one night and heard singing. She went in out of curiosity, and the Lord spoke to her heart at once.

The Dispensary is well appreciated by the people, who come from all parts and long distances. I had over 800 patients in the month of April. It is a good way of spreading the word; each patient receives a copy of the New Testament, thanks to the kindness of Mrs. Robertson, of Hampstead, who has sent some Gospels to a friend of mine for distribution. Yours sincerely,

St. Etienne, France. HASTINGS BURROUGHS.

THE LEGAL PROTECTION OF THE YOUNG.

A WRITER in The Pall Mall Gazette having questioned the need of further legislation for the protection of minors, and stated that the existing law was sufficient, another correspondent cites the following fact as one out of many to prove the urgent necessity for reform:—

Walter Franklin, living in Rock-avenue, Fulham, was summoned for unlawfully taking Annie Summers, an unmarried girl under the age of sixteen, out of possession of her master, and against the will of her father. Mr. Gregory, who appeared to prosecute, said the girl was fourteen, and was in service. She met the defendant while on her way to her father to obtain a change of linen. He invited her to his house, where he kept her all night, and turned her out in the morning. She was found by her father in Chelsea. Mr. Shiel, the magistrate, thought that no charge had been disclosed as she was not in the custody of her father." That the orphans of the poor are rarely in the "lawful care" of any definable person, except their employers from time to time, is also obvious enough; and an employer has no "possession" of his drudges or his shop-girls to which these sections could apply. Legislation is indeed grievously necessary; if the danger were one that affected the rich, it would have been ended long ago.

Y.M.C.A. INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION.

THIS cosmopolitan gathering of workers among young men was held this year at Atlanta, in the State of Georgia. Some 400 delegates are reported as being present, not only from different parts of North America, but from Europe. The London Associations were well represented in the persons of Mr. M. H. Hodder and Mr. E. J. Kennedy; the latter, who is Secretary at Exeter Hall, is described in the reports as "the tallest man in the convention."

The Atlanta Constitution gives detailed reports of the proceedings; from these we extract some of the leading items. At the opening session a letter of fraternal greeting and good will was read from Mr. George Williams, on behalf of the British Associations. One of the foreign delegates was Mr. Phildeus, Secretary of the Berlin Branch, who said that a few years ago 16 young men were banded together in that city; now there are 1800.

The first evening Bishop Baldwin, from Canada, gave an address on the adaptation of the Bible to the needs of young men. He magnified the Word of God, and showed how blessing came to those who appropriated its truths and obeyed its precepts. On the following day, after much discussion as to ways and means, Bishop Baldwin gave an impressive and profitable Bible-reading on the work of the Holy Ghost. The railroad work was reported on the second evening; this appears to be a very extensive and flourishing branch of the American work. Many of the State secretaries had interesting cases of conversion to record.

On the third day gospel work among boys was considered, and most encouraging facts were stated as to the influence that the Associations are bringing to bear on this class. At the evening session a weighty address was delivered by a delegate from Missouri, commending Y.M.C.A. work to college youths. He said that college life was a most critical season, and offered peculiar opportunities for influencing those engaged in study. Experience proved, said the speaker, that educated men seldom become Christians after they have left college; all the greater need to try and reach them through their fellow-students. A delegate from Yale College said there was a great work of grace going on there. At a recent meeting held by Mr. Moody 700 students were present, and 37 rose for prayer. A representative of Sydney College, Virginia, said he had seen 27 young men in the president's parlour seeking salvation. Another from Princeton stated that before Mr. Moody's recent visit every unconverted man in the College had been seen, and fourteen came out for Christ. Yet another gentleman who represented two Colleges in Virginia stated that during the last few weeks more than forty young men had come to him to ask the way to Christ. At Oberlin College, said a delegate, one hundred students were converted last year, and half as many this year. One of the International secretaries said that twenty-six young men from the Colleges had last year given their lives to missionary work.

Y.W.C.A., INVERNESS.—The annual meeting of the Young Women's Christian Association was lately held in the rooms, 81, Church-street. There was a large attendance of members and friends, Mr. Morrison, Birchwood, presiding. After tea, an account of the work done during the year was read by Mrs. Black, Free High Manse, secretary. There is a library in connection with the Association, and Mrs. Black said that they would be glad to receive any gifts of new and interesting books that friends might be inclined to send them. Mr. Morrison, Rev. Mr. Mactavish, Rev. Mr. Connell, Mr. Petrie, and Mrs. M'Laren (Keighley) afterwards addressed the meeting. The meetings and classes in connection with the Association are all well attended, and much appreciated by the members.—Inverness Courier.

CAUTION.—I write you to draw your readers' attention to two men calling themselves evangelists, named Messrs. Gent, from Hull, and Kennedy, from Huddersfield. The former was apprehended, viz., Captain Gent, a short time ago at Nottingham, for deserting his blind wife at Hull, and sent to Hull gaol for six months' hard labour, and within a short time of liberation commenced to evangelise. Some two years ago these men visited various places, including Bridlington and Scarborough; at the latter place Mr. Kennedy was apprehended playing a cornet, and sent to York Castle, the presiding magistrates believing that their object was not genuine. They have been here some ten days, but no one took them by the hand; they can give no references. J. JACKSON.

NEWS FROM THE UPPER CONGO.

By Mrs. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

IT will rejoice many hearts to hear that good tidings have at last reached us from our friend and brother, Dr. Sims, of the Livingstone Inland Mission on the Congo, about whom we had been feeling somewhat anxious. He left his station at Leopoldville, on Stanley Pool, for a voyage on the Upper Congo, early in October last, and we had heard nothing of him since. Knowing the many risks and perils of travel in the far interior of Africa, this absence of nearly five months made us long for news, and most thankful for good news when they came. Dr. Sims' letter is dated February 25, and written from

OUR FIRST STATION ON THE UPPER CONGO,

Equator Station, where our brethren, Petterson and Eddie, are residing 757 miles up the river, at the point where the Congo in its southward flow cuts the Equator.

It was by the kindness of Mr. George Grenfell (B. M. S.) that Dr. Sims made this journey to the falls and back. They started from Leopoldville, on Stanley Pool, in October last, in the steam launch Peace. Our own steamer, the Henry Reed, was not launched till November, but she met Dr. Sims at Equatorville in February, having taken Mr. Eddie up to join our brother Pettersen at his station. It is pleasant, after the heavy outlay, hard labour, and deep anxiety, which the transport and construction of these two steamers involved, to think of them now running successfully on the Upper Congo, with thousands of miles of navigable lakes and rivers stretching around them in every direction, by which are brought within comparatively easy access. When we recall the toil and the risk to life involved in land journeys in Central Africa, we thank God, and take courage as we remember how much may in future be done by voyages on the rivers. It seems far easier and more practicable now to reach Nyangwe—the central town of Central Africa, right in the very middle of the Dark Continent—than it did a few years ago to reach Manyanga, though so comparatively near the coast. A grand highway into the heart of Africa has been opened, and all the tribes and kindreds of the Congo Basin accessible to missionary effort. And oh, how desperately they need it! Dr. Sims writes :—

> "The voyage, of which at the moment I cannot speak in detail, permitted me to see in a very complete way the enormous work to be accomplished. The horrid practice of cannibalism prevails everywhere, from Bolobo upwards. One poor man was killed the Sunday we were in Mangala, and three while we were absent. When we remonstrated, the reply was: 'You kill your goats without our interference; permit us also to kill our meat!' The roofs of houses are ornamented with the skulls of such victims, and about the Aruwimi squares and circles of them are formed in the ground. The victims are cut up and roasted or boiled at discretion, the brains and face being chosen pieces; and even the little children are given a taste, to endear to them the same habits."

Dr. Sims saw great towns of three or four thousand inhabitants, greatly surpassing anything on the Lower Congo, and found everywhere the atrocious practice of killing innocent people on the death of a chief, sometimes as many as six or seven being murdered for quite an ordinary chief. The system of beheading is to fix the victim firmly to the ground, and then to attach to his head a powerful bent stick, so that when the neck is severed by a single blow from the executioner, the head flies up, describing a semicircle in the air, and the spectators rush on the headless body, and tear and cut it into bits in a way too horrible to describe. Dr. Sims says, of Equatorville :—

> "At this place, on account of the death of a chief, the same thing will, I suppose, take place in a few days; but here, though powerless at present to oppose the horrible superstitious custom, our brethren will soon be trying to undermine them."

Dr. Sims was able to collect some 1500 words of the Mawembe language, spoken just above the Aruwimi; he was also working at the Kyansi vocabulary, which he has set in order, as well as completed the Kiteke sheets.

ARABS AT STANLEY FALLS.

He also picked up a good deal of the Swahili language, used by the Arabs and on the East Coast, for, sad to say, the Arabs are established at Stanley Falls. Their settlements have been growing for the last three or four years, and they have substantial brick houses and stores at the first and seventh Falls. The Arab slave-trader, Tippoo Tib, has an army of 1000 men, and says 2000 more are coming. The majority are old slaves taken in war, but they are officered by Swahili and Arabs, and they have Enfield and breech-loading guns. Dr. Sims says :—

> "That stretch of river from the Aruwimi to the Falls is deserted by its inhabitants, utterly devastated and burnt by the natives themselves, so that the Arabs may find neither refuge nor food in their towns; the gardens and the fishing are neglected, and the poor people flying like hunted beasts to the islands and forests. They are so clever in escaping and avoiding conflicts that probably not more than twenty or thirty captives have been taken here. The Arab leaders profess that they are sent by the Sultan of Zanzibar, and that they are to see to it that all the ivory goes to the east coast, and to claim the whole river as far as Banana in his name. If they can be restrained in proper bounds, the Arabs are desirable inhabitants in the country, on account of their industrious habits, their trade, and civilising influence."

Active measures will, of course, now be taken by the African International Association, or rather by the Government of the new Congo Free State, to ensure the protection of the natives, and to force the marauders to legitimate trade. But as they are in such force, probably a fort and a garrison will be needful at the Falls, to prevent their slave raiding descents of the river. These are not yet at hand, but will, no doubt, soon be forthcoming when Stanley returns to the scene of his great achievements. Dr. Sims adds :—

> "When you can send me the goods and tools, we will proceed to found a station at the Falls, give them some legitimate labour in building for us, and by preaching and persuasion get them to seek better things. I am quite prepared now, also, if the project is approved, to go, either at once, or after I have been home, to Nyangwe, buy a house there, and commence a mission to the 6000 natives and Mohammedans there. M. Amelot left the Falls November 1, on his way to Zanzibar, so that the Dark Continent will soon again have been crossed."

This journey of the Peace extended over 4000 miles of country, one-third of the distance having been new ground not traversed before by any white man. It would scarcely interest general readers to give a list of the rivers ascended and the places on them, as unless followed with a very recent map they would convey but little information. The travellers discovered one new river above Bolobo, and found it navigable for 120 miles; ascended several other tributaries of the Congo for longer or shorter distances; went 250 miles up the great Lomani river, on the South Bank, near the Falls, when the current became so strong that they had to turn back. On the North Side, opposite Irebu, they ascended the Mobanzi, which Dr. Sims says is

THE LARGEST TRIBUTARY OF THE CONGO.

Mr. Grenfell made a second ascent of this stream while Dr. Sims was at Equator Station, and reached as far as 4.50 N. latitude, when time obliged him to return. This is evidently a very important river, coming from far north of the line, and might well have a separate mission to itself. Indeed, as one tries to realise the vast extent of heathen darkness opened up to our knowledge in these regions, the efforts making to shed the light from heaven into them seem all paltry and inadequate. Our brethren, Petterson and Eddie, have at present the sad honour of being the only two missionaries on the Upper Congo. The Baptist Missionary Society have selected stations, but have no white men occupying them as yet. And yet the climate is much less dangerous than that of the Cataract Region; Stanley considers it no whit more dangerous than that of India; the people are willing to welcome teachers; the Association Stations afford protection if needed, the Mission steamers are ready to carry up supplies regularly, and to distribute as many missionaries over as large an extent of country as may be desired.

THE DREAM OF LIVINGSTONE

is already realised, and the very heart of Africa laid open to easy access from England. King Leopold of Belgium has lavished his treasure with right royal generosity to accomplish this object, and now the end of the geographical and political feats ought to be the beginning of worthy missionary efforts.

The management of the Livingstone Inland Mission is now, as our friends know, in American hands. But do let us continue to do all we can to aid in the mighty task. God Himself seems to be saying to his children, "Go, work to-day in my vineyard."

The interest which the world is taking in Central Africa, and the Congo Basin especially, should stimulate the Church. The very Jesuits put us to silence. On Easter Sunday they dismissed forty new missionaries at one time for Central Africa "to spread down the Congo, and fight a hand-to-hand battle with the Protestants of all denominations." When will the Livingstone Inland Mission or the Baptist Mission be able to send forth such a band at one time? Is the world always to be more active and enterprising than the Church? Oh, that some Leopold, some Stanley, for missions in Africa might arise! Is not the astonishing change in our knowledge of the continent, wrought by the work of the last twelve years, in itself a loud and imperative call to us, each to do what in us lies for this great, new, unevangelised world? What are we doing? God constrain us to be in earnest, to be obedient, to be faithful.

VICTOR HUGO'S FUNERAL.

SOUVENIR of Victor Hugo's Funeral! Such is the heading of a sheet of paper with texts on the great truths of Life and Resurrection through Christ, of which 100,000 had been printed by Miss de Broen for distribution by her helpers to the crowds that pour up every avenue leading to the Arc-de-Triomphe, to see the erection of the enormous catafalque, where late last night the coffin containing the remains of the great poet was laid. A ceaseless stream of living beings poured all day and evening towards the spot, and when so many now are bold in denying the very existence of God, Miss de Broen felt the privilege of being at least as bold to testify to his love, mercy, and salvation in Christ.

"C'est indigne!" exclaimed one interpreter of present-day sentiment, when the "Souvenir" was offered him, and with a blow he threw down on the pavement the whole packet of the distributor; as if the name of God was not to be breathed in this enlightened age. Other recipients, however, were of a very different character. "God bless you; it is well that you have the courage to speak of Him, when people are so blind," was said to Miss de Broen. Many interesting short conversations went on in the crowd. Ladies and gentlemen, as well as wearers of blouses, soldiers, policemen, and every kind of person received the papers, and many were the requests for more to send to friends. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray for a blessing on these papers?

Nine hundred people weekly pass through our Belleville Medical Mission, and the practical Christian work, as well as personal contact, does untold good. "This is really good," comes from the lips of many. God blesses the many branches of this work. There is much need to help our sister, who has all the responsibility of keeping up this mission. The extra effort of printing so many papers, which it would have been wrong to neglect doing on such an opportunity, has brought a good deal of expense. Miss de Broen carefully put the address of the Bible Society in Paris on the papers, in the hope of a desire being awakened to possess the whole Word of God. A. KER.

GOSPEL WORK IN GLASGOW.

PERHAPS of all the cities in the United Kingdom, none has been more favoured of the Lord in late years than Glasgow. Almost all the well-known evangelists of our own and other lands have been here, lifting up their voices for the Son of God. One of the local agencies, which has been much used of the Lord in bringing his servants to the city, is the Orphan Home Mission, with Mr. William Quarrier at its head. It was to this mission that Joshua and Mary Poole, Richard Weaver (recently), Henry Holloway, George Williams, and other evangelists, who have been largely used, owed their introduction into Scotland.

Having heard of the blessing which attended the services conducted by Mr. and Mrs. C. King in London and elsewhere, Mr. Quarrier was led to invite them to visit Glasgow. On Sabbath evening the 3rd of May, they accordingly commenced work in the hall of the City Orphan Homes. The season being so far advanced large meetings were not expected, but on the opening night the hall was too small to accommodate the people who came. On the second Sabbath of the mission the meeting had to be transferred to the large City Hall, which has been filled on the past three Sabbath evenings. Every week-night for three weeks the Home Hall has been overcrowded, some evenings many being unable to gain admission.

The word preached and sung has been attended by the power of God, and the workers know of some good cases of apparent conversion, and rejoice to believe that there has been much fruit that they do not know of. One somewhat remarkable feature of the work has been the conversion of several men while under the influence of strong drink.

Mr. and Mrs. King have got much natural ability for their work, and our prayer for them is that they may receive grace to abide in the hollow of the Lord's hand, so that they may be made a much greater blessing in the future than they have been in the past.

The meetings were transferred from the Orphan Home Hall to the Garscube Hall, on the 25th inst., where they will be carried on for other two weeks. The workers request the fellowship of the readers of The Christian in praise and prayer.

OUR SAILORS AND SOLDIERS.

ALEXANDRIA AND PORTSMOUTH.

OUR friends will be glad to know that God's work is prospering among us. A fourth lady has joined the party in Egypt, and they write very thankfully of the open doors of usefulness. Besides the meetings for soldiers and sailors they have opened a Sunday-school for English children, and Bible-classes for ladies and for young clerks, &c. They are also allowed to visit hospitals, barracks, and ships. As the Forces at Alexandria are now to be greatly increased, the hands of the workers will be very full. They ask for prayer that they may be rightly guided in all things.

Here, at Portsmouth, we have been encouraged and stirred up by a visit of sixteen days from our friend Richard Weaver. Three meetings each Sunday and one each week-night were well sustained; he was also able to address two afternoon meetings of women only, and one of soldiers at Fort Rowner (at the invitation of the Commanding Officer); sixty of the men present were under orders for foreign service.

Not one of the meetings held has been without tokens of God's blessing; not only have souls, we believe, passed from death into life, but there is a revival of earnestness, and boldness, and prayer among those who were already on the Lord's side. This was strikingly manifested at the "Fellowship Tea," at the close of the mission. Richard was unexpectedly called to London that day, but his Divine Master was among us, and it was most cheering to hear the testimony to God's power to save, to keep, to restore, given by old and young, soldiers and civilians, women and men.

I am thankful to say that even before Richard Weaver's visit our meetings were prospering. Mr. James Manning is here helping me for twelve months, and God is using him. I am greatly needing more ladies now that the work increases; also more money. Our subscriptions have sadly fallen off, in consequence of the extensive collecting for the various "Aid Associations." May I ask also for coloured pictures, scraps, old Christmas cards, &c., for "Sunday albums," for Alexandria? I shall be glad to hear from friends willing to make such.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. George C. Needham having closed a series of largely attended and most successful meetings in Mobile, Alabama, proceeded thence to Louisville.

Mr. Spencer Walton has concluded a ten days' mission in the iron room, Hill Brow, Liss, with many tokens of God's power and blessing. Though a country place, the nearest town being 3½ miles distant, the attractive power of the Gospel brought many to listen to Mr. Walton's addresses.

Messrs. Spiers and Westall in Brecon.—These brethren have had a happy and successful time among the children of Brecon, on whose behalf they are conducting a series of Gospel services. So acceptable have been the labours of the evangelists, that the meetings are arranged to go on to the 5th inst. Profitable conferences with parents and Sunday-school workers have been held.

Wooden Kirk Mission, Ayr.—Evangelistic meetings were held here from May 3, for two weeks, by Mr. W. J. Moodie. There were many clear decisions for Christ. On two evenings Mr. Moodie illustrated the Gospel by his experiences in the army while in Egypt. Mr. Moodie commenced a series of Gospel meetings in Port Glasgow on May 17.

J. M. C.

Winchester.—A fortnight's mission, chiefly for the militia, has been conducted in the mission hall here, by Staff-Lieut. Maggie Magee, of the Salvation Army. Great power accompanied the word, and about thirty souls professed to find pardon. The mission was the result of Mrs. Josephine Butler's love and zeal, in which she was heartily joined by many Christian workers.

W. W. Gibb.

Plymouth.—A correspondest of The Methodist Times writes: "The evangelistic mission conducted in the King-street chapel by Rev. T. Cook has been a great success. Of the thousands who filled the large chapel night after night, upwards of five hundred entered the inquiry-room; nearly half of these are uniting themselves with our own societies. The improvement in the devotion and size of the congregations during the two Sundays which have followed the mission is most cheering."

Church Army.—Short village missions are being carried on with great apparent success, near Belfast, by a Church Army evangelist. Other missions are beginning at Bordesley, Birmingham, Worksop, Bolton, Hereford, and Forest-gate. The Archbishop of Canterbury is to receive at Lambeth Palace the Church Army evangelists who are nearly all coming up to London for their Conference and annual meeting, on June 11, at Prince's Hall, Piccadilly.

Misses Owen and Moore have held services at Llandudno, in Welsh and English. St. George's Hall, which was taken for the evening meeting, was well filled with an attentive audience, who listened with deep interest to the "Wonderful Words of Life." Many, it is believed, decided for Christ. There were also services in the Welsh Chapel, as well as the little Mission-room at Pen-y-Frith. The ladies were besought to repeat their visit, which they hope to do ere long.

Y.M.C.A., Belfast.—Mr. E. W. Oakes, evangelist, has been conducting a very successful mission in the large hall of this Association. Quite a number of young men have professed to decide for Christ, while others have been revived and stimulated. A band of earnest workers have rallied round the evangelist night after night, while the Fellowship Choir have rendered valuable help by their service in song. Mr Oakes has a very clear and apt way of presenting the Gospel. His addresses are full of helpful teaching, and his appeals are pointed with appropriate illustrations, mainly derived from his own experience.

Belfast. Henry Montgomery.

Memphis, Tennessee.—Mr. Ben Hogan has been helping us here in evangelistic work. Before his conversion, seven years ago, he was known in sporting circles as a prize fighter and gambler, but grace has done great things for him. He knows next to nothing of worldly philosophy, but is posted on the subject of spiritual education. He preached for us every night for two weeks. The word was with power. I heard of over 50 cases of conversion. Christians have been considerably revived, and one specially good feature is the establishment of weekly devotional services, one conducted entirely by young men, and the other by young ladies. We hope for much blessing as the result of these extra services. There are two other churches holding special services now, and a good many have, it is believed, given their hearts to God.

David Leith, Pastor.

Memphis, Tennessee, U.S.A.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey conducted Gospel services in Dr. Pentecost's Church in Brooklyn, on Sunday, May 17. Speaking of the evening service for men, a Brooklyn paper says that before the after-meeting terminated, "quite a number were persuaded to declare themselves soldiers of the Cross."

N.E. London Gospel Missions.—Through the almost incessant downpour on last Whit Monday the usual open-air gathering in the Victoria Park could not be held. Advantage was taken of the leisure afforded by the Bank Holiday, and a very large number sat down to tea at the People's Hall Bow-common. After some happy testimonies in the adjacent street, a still larger meeting followed in the hall, presided over by Mr. Robert Paton, who expressed his joy at seeing so promising an addition to Mr. Chorley's work. The addresses that followed were remarked for power, and many present were ready to testify they never spent a happier season. Mr. D. H. Fry, Plashet House, Essex (treasurer), would be glad to receive further help towards the completion of the large hall in Devon's-road. Particulars would be gladly furnished.

NAVVIES AT WHITSUNTIDE.

BOURNEMOUTH.

THE Whitsuntide holidays have come and gone, and again it is our happy privilege to record the loving kindness of the Lord in granting us such a large measure of success in our second effort for the benefit of the navvies and men at work on the new station and line of rail connecting the east and west Cliffs of Bournemouth.

On Saturday afternoon the small Town-hall, which had been tastefully decorated with flags and flowers, and fitted up with Temperance refreshment bar, and tables covered with periodicals and games, was thrown open to the public. Arrangements had been made for an afternoon concert and evening entertainment for each day, and from morning till night there were ladies and gentlemen in the room ready to play a game or enter into conversation with the men.

Each day's proceedings were terminated by a short Gospel Temperance meeting, at which, during the three days, addresses were given by Rev. J. Townsend, Messrs. T. G. Glover, Haydon, Dr. Ambrose, General Hutchinson, Miss Wingfield Digby, Miss Pearetti, and at the farewell meeting on Tuesday evening by Mr. McLean, the Navvies' Missionary. On Sunday the Gospel meetings at 3.30 and at 7 p.m. were well attended. At five o'clock a free tea was given to all present, and the remainder of the interval between the meetings was profitably spent in singing Sankey's hymns.

On Whit-Monday, owing to the rain, the room was visited by many excursionists, who all expressed their pleasure in finding such an attractive place of refuge. It was most gratifying to all those concerned in the undertaking to hear again and again from the men themselves what a happy holiday-time they were having, and how they wished that in every place they went to they might meet with a similar reception.

EDINBURGH MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY have issued their quarterly paper, containing a sermon preached by Dr. Downes on the design, need, and progress of their work in Kashmir. An account is also given of a Medico-evangelistic tour in India by Dr. William Johnson; there is besides a letter from Cairo by Miss Whately, and one by the late General Gordon, regretting that no such institution existed at Gaza. An article is devoted to the work and premature death of the late Dr. Comber, of the Congo Mission, and another announces the affiliation of the Agra Medical Missionary Training Institution with the above Society.

CHERBOURG GOSPEL MISSION.—About three months ago Mr. H. Cook's Gospel-ship, Mystery, visited Cherbourg. Meetings were begun on board, and were held night after night. The Gospel was listened to by crowds of attentive hearers, to whom the Gospel of the grace of God was a new story. The meetings were continued up to the 4th of May, when the vessel had to return to England. Many testified to the good received. They have earnestly besought us to establish a permanent work among them. Mr. Lerendu, an earnest evangelist, and myself have determined to carry on the work in the name of the Lord. About £250 a year would be needed to carry it on efficiently. We therefore appeal to the Lord's stewards to help in our efforts to establish the "Cherbourg Gospel Mission."

Letters to the Editor.

SLAVERY IN FRENCH COLONIES.

Dear Sir,—Permit me to correct the error into which the brief statement about slavery in the French Colonies in your issue of May 2 is calculated to lead your readers. The French Republic is no more guilty of holding human beings in slavery than the English Monarchy. There have been no slaves in the French Colonies since the Revolution of 1848.

The facts are these: France was the first State to declare the freedom of the slaves in its colonies. On February 4, 1794, the National Convention declared all the negroes in the French Colonies free, and decreed that all the inhabitants of these colonies, without distinction of colour, were French citizens and enjoyed all the rights assured by the Constitution. The only colonies which did not obtain the benefits of this act of justice were Martinique and the Isle of Bourbon, then under our power.

Buonaparte, by a decree dated May 19, 1802, re-established slavery and the slave trade. Saint Domingo, in consequence, revolted and was lost to France. In Guadeloupe the negroes were only re-enslaved after a bloody struggle. The Empire, the Restored Bourbon Monarchy, and the Constitutional Monarchy under Louis Philippe, all continued slavery and the slave trade; although during the latter period continual ameliorations were made in the condition of the slaves, and their cause progressed towards a final victory. The leaders in this good work were first the ardent Republican and devoted friend of the negro races, M. Victor Schœlcher, and next to him the eminent Christian, the Comte de Gasparin, one of their leading opponents being Granier de Cassagnac, the well-known Bonapartist.

The Revolution of 1848 came, and one of the first acts of the Provisional Government was to decree the entire emancipation of every slave on French soil. This decree, published the 4th of March, 1848, was inserted in Article 6 of the New Constitution, and Article 7 declared the principle that the soil of France freed every man who touched it. Two months were allowed for the Decree to be carried into effect. An indemnity of six millions of francs was paid the slave-holders; 248,500 negroes being emancipated by this great act of justice. Yours faithfully,

Richard Heath.

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS AND THE ATONEMENT.

Sir,—Some time ago you reviewed a pamphlet, written by three ministers in the Society of Friends, entitled "A Reasonable Faith." It may interest your readers to know that at the annual gathering of the Friends, which has just been held in London, the subject of that pamphlet was brought forward. The three writers then publicly avowed themselves as such. They spoke ably and earnestly, and expressed a belief in Christ as their Saviour, but firmly adhered to their previously enunciated opinion against his being a Substitute and Expiation for the sins of mankind.

This is the main point at issue, and it is a very important one. The Friends' "Yearly Meeting," whilst resolving to take no official action, either for or against the pamphlet and its writers, yet showed that, at any rate, a majority of the Society adhere to the principle of redemption by Substitution and Expiation. One of the writers pleaded in excuse that the early Friends attached little importance to this principle, and in general they even opposed it. Unfortunately, there are too many proofs available that he was right in this plea; for whilst it is quite true that a few passages can be quoted from the Early Friends which are thoroughly Scriptural as to Substitutionary Atonement, yet the general drift, the preponderating tenour of many of those Friends, especially Barclay and Penn, is fairly open to a charge of unsoundness, and is markedly different from the plain drift of Holy Scripture. The modern Friends, as a body, hold more Biblical, more Apostolic views on this point than their predecessors.

The elder and later opponents of Substitution have, it is true, much to say about an inward Christ, about his work in the heart, and the influences of his Holy Spirit. So far this is excellent. But they appear to have far too insufficiently dwelt upon the value and necessity of the Incarnation and the Cross, the outward expiatory work of the Redeemer, as the one and only perfect Sacrifice for sins, and as the one Divine High Priest.

It is but fair to conclude that the three Essayists, and others of their school, are earnest Christians, as to certain aspects of Christianity; but the late Yearly Meeting of the Friends has shown them that many or most of their brethren, feel that some of the very best and most practical portions of Christianity are bound up with that principle of Substitution and Expiation, which the Essayists emphatically deny. Whilst they take a low view of Redemption, so, also, they take a low view of the Divine authority of Holy Scripture, and of the Mosaic system especially. They appear to overlook the statements repeated, scores of times, that the "Lord commanded" Moses, as to the very details of that system; that God gave "the pattern of the Tabernacle to him; that He repeated this pattern to David and Solomon, for the Temple; and that even those portions of the Bible which some have objected to for their mysterious nature, such as the Apocalypse, Ezekiel, Zechariah, and Daniel's visions, were communicated to their writers through a special Divine ministry of angels.

MR. GEORGE MULLER AT WELLINGTON.

THIS venerable preacher has finished a thrice blessed series of meetings in Wellington. He held ten in the New Hall, and one drawing-room meeting in my house. This last, and one meeting in the mission hall, were to give accounts of the work of the Lord in his hands since his conversion in the year 1825. Until these addresses our beloved brother had never given any public account of his labours in the founding of the Orphan Houses in England. He has now come to the conclusion that it is for God's glory that he should do so occasionally. The history is thrilling and wonderful. It is most strengthening to faith and hope, and has led very many to give glory to God.

Our meetings were very large, and though we can seat about 1000 at the hall, on two occasions large numbers, I am told hundreds, went away unable to gain admission. It would be impossible to describe any one address; the power of God was so manifest with his honoured servant that many of us could only weep as we were in the presence of the living God.

Mr. Müller seems to have, in his eightieth year, scarcely any of his natural force abated, and he stated in one address that if it be the will of the Lord, and He has work for him to do, and will continue His Holy Spirit's power to enable him to do it, he would like to live and work fifty years longer. Yours faithfully,

J. Edward Cranage.

Wellington, Salop, May 29.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

It is said that the Royal Oak, one of the best known London public-houses, has recently changed hands, when £5000 less was paid than it fetched at the previous transfer.

The North Brierley Board of Guardians have refused, against the wishes of all the officials of the workhouse, to give an equivalent in money instead of the beer supplied to them.

At the meeting of the Friends' Temperance Union, Mr. T. Whittaker said it was inconsistent for Christians to ask the Government to promote Temperance Reform if they used strong drink in their own homes.

No intoxicating liquors are served to the Volunteer troops now engaged in active service in the North-West of Canada as any part of their rations, nor are they allowed to be taken with them as private supplies.

There was not a single case of drunkenness or misconduct brought forward from the Crystal Palace or any other place of public amusement in the Lambeth jurisdiction in connection with the last Bank Holiday.

In a periodical brought out by Oliver Goldsmith in 1759, he writes:—"In the towns and countries I have seen, I never saw a city or village yet whose miseries were not in proportion to the number of its public-houses."

At the meeting of the Women's Union of the Church of England Temperance Society, the Bishop of London said he had no doubt that if the women of the country could be polled, every public-house would be shut at once, by an enormous majority of votes.

Dr. B. W. Richardson, in presiding at the anniversary of the British Women's Temperance Union, said he had given up all hope of progress until they had got the active support of the women of the country. He contended, as a medical fact, that there was nothing but injury to the child in the case of nursing mothers who took strong drink.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on Gospel services in a barn at Poole Kaynes, Gloucestershire, by Mr. Opie Rodway, June 7 and 11.——For blessing on barn meeting at Sandon, by James Neech, to June 12.——Praise for blessing on meetings at Baddon-road Chapel, Chelmsford.

Gleanings.

A Y.M.C.A. has been established at Kingston, Jamaica.

Sixty new members have this year joined the Victoria Institute.

A new public recreation ground has been opened in Battersea-park-road.

Signor Gavazzi is on a visit to this country pleading the cause of Italian evangelisation.

A new steamer has been launched for the use of the Church Missionary Society on the Niger.

It is stated that the Bishop of Salisbury will resign his Bishopric in the course of the summer.

Mr. Andrew H. Cruickshank, who left Glasgow for the Congo in April last year, died from fever on March 27.

Lord William Nevill, fourth son of the Marquis of Abergavenny, has been received into the Roman Catholic Church.

A new sixpenny monthly, The Scottish Church, has been commenced, "to defend the interests of the Northern State Church."

A new chaplaincy for the shipping, barges, and fishing vessels on the River Medway has been founded by the Missions to Seamen.

The Lord Mayor has been presented with a testimonial by London citizens in recognition of services rendered during his past year of office.

A College Mission has been founded at Trinity College, Oxford. St. George's, Camberwell, is the district where the Mission is to be placed.

A correspondent in Nice chronicles the fiftieth suicide at Monte Carlo since December. The victim, an unknown traveller, arrived with £12,000, which he lost.

It has been arranged to hold an Eight Days' Mission for Sydney and the suburbs during the year. That for the city will take place in June and that for the suburbs in September.

"A Working Man" writes to The Times urging that a cheap edition of the Revised Bible should be published in readable type. At present such an edition costs at the least 7s. 6d.

An "Evangelist School" has been established by Professor Christlieb, of Bonn, the object being to train evangelists who may reach the masses by more unconventional methods than those usually employed.

Jerusalem was lately a prey to a severe water famine. Special fasts and prayers were ordered in the Jewish communities, and processions of Christians and Mohammedans, praying for rain, were seen daily in the streets.

One of the Old Testament revisers writing in The Rock says:—"The Revision of the Old Testament is a work to be thankful for, but not to be enraptured with. What has been done has been done well, but a great deal more was possible."

The Rock, criticising the May Meeting Secretarial Reports, says that of the British and Foreign Bible Society stood out head and shoulders above the others for power and effect. Polished, epigrammatic, picturesque, it was probably the most attractive report ever read in Exeter Hall.

Miss Ellice Hopkins' recent visit to Dublin was a very great success, and has stimulated the University Purity Association into fresh vigour. A Vigilance Committee for Dublin was formed who should endeavour to raise the moral tone of the city; an only too patent duty, says a correspondent of The Methodist Times.

Rev. A. Green, of the Jewish Synagogue, Sheffield, in a recent reference to the Revised Old Testament, used strong language with respect to his co-religionists: "The boasted intelligence and the vaunted piety of modern Jews are nothing but a fraud and a sham. I believe there is less true religion among Jews than among any other body dignified by the name of a religious denomination."

It was stated at the recent Friends' Yearly Meeting, that the Modoc Indians had in large numbers joined the Society of Friends. Their warlike Chief is now a minister in the society, and some time since refused to permit any of the tribe to go on the warpath to release some that had been taken prisoners by a hostile tribe, but led his followers to pray for their release. The Senecas, a tribe that for a long period resisted the advent of any white people among them, have also been converted, and their Chief is now an Elder among the Indian "Friends."

The Salvation Army have made a new departure in their work, by the dispatch from Clapton Congress Hall of a detachment of 150 cadets from the National Training Barracks. A handsome and well-appointed van, named the "Victory," will accommodate about a dozen men, and will be supplemented by commissariat and ambulance waggons for the cavalcade, which is styled the "Cavalry Corps." The following places are to be visited during the next fortnight: Camberwell, Woolwich, Bexley Heath, Gravesend, New Brompton, Sittingbourne, Maidstone, Boro' Green and Wrotham, Paddock Green, Tunbridge Wells, Tonbridge, and Sevenoaks.

CANON WILBERFORCE experienced a somewhat sharp relapse on Saturday, accompanied by high fever. Late on Sunday evening it was said that the fever was less, and the general condition more satisfactory.

Notes on Daily Readings.

v. 4.—"Christ is the end of the law for (unto, R.V.) righteousness to every one that believeth."—If the word "end" be taken in its usual sense of bringing to an end or close, this verse will mean that Christ is to everyone that believeth the close, or bringing to an end, of the law as a means of attaining righteousness. And this meaning would well suit the context, confirming, as it does, the assertion of the last verse, that going about to establish one's own righteousness (of course by means of the law) is a non-submission to the righteousness which God has provided, to wit, Christ. Many of our best commentators, however, urge that the word "end" should be taken as in 1 Peter i. 9, "receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls," where it means the object aimed at or attained. If it be taken thus here, it will make the passage assert that "the aim of the law—the object both aimed at and attained—is Christ for righteousness to every one that believeth."

v. 6.—"But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise," &c.—What follows is an adaptation of Deut. xxx. 12—14, which, so far as the principle it contains goes, is as applicable to the Gospel now as it was then to the law. What this principle is, is well stated in Rev. J. A. Beet's commentary:—"Moses asserts the principle that a revelation from God makes needless, and therefore ought to put an end to, all human effort for that which He reveals. Such effort implies either ignorance or rejection of God's revelation."

"Who shall ascend," &c.—This and the next question come of anxiety and perplexity. "In order to be saved, have I to bring the necessary manifestations of God's will from Heaven or Hades? Have I to procure Incarnation and Resurrection? No; all is now done; the Person and the work are complete and ready. As at Sinai, so in the Gospel, God has done His part unasked; and now thy part is to accept and own his Son as thy justification."—Cambridge Bible for Schools.

v. 9.—"Confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus."—Jesus as Lord, R.V.—a decided improvement. The reference in the context to bringing Christ down, shows that his pre-existent Deity is the foundation of the Lordship spoken of. "My Lord and my God," John xx. 28.

JUNE 5.—ROMANS XI.

v. 2.—"God hath not cast away his people which He foreknew."—Two interpretations are possible here. The "foreknowledge" or sovereign antecedent decision of the Eternal Mind, may be (a) that which designated the nation for privilege, or (b) that which designated individuals of it for final glory. The words of vv. 3, 4, 5 favour the latter view; and thus St. Paul would say, "God never thrust Israel out of the covenant; for He always had among them a foreknown Israel of God." The question in view here is, "Was the nation ever so rejected, that members of it as such were rejected?" This St. Paul negatives by pointing to the "nation within the nation;" the elect faithful.—Cambridge Bible for Schools.

v. 11.—"Have they stumbled that they should fall?"—To stumble, expresses the shock against an obstacle; to fall, the fall which follows from it. Consequently the meaning can only be this: "Have they stumbled so as to leave for ever their position as God's people, and to remain, as it were, lying on the ground, plunged in perdition?" No, answers the Apostle, God has very different views.—Godet.

v. 16.—"If the firstfruit be holy, the lump is also holy," &c.—The Jews, when making bread, before they baked the dough took a portion and made a cake for the priests. By requiring this God taught that the whole lump of dough belonged to Him, and was therefore holy. By presenting it the Jews acknowledged God's claim. Just so, by taking the fathers of the Jews to be specially his own God claimed the entire nation. In virtue of his dealings with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and apart from the conduct of individuals, Israel was a holy nation, the nation which God had claimed to be for ever his own (Lev. xx. 26). In this indelible holiness Paul saw a pledge of the nation's salvation.—J. A. Beet.

"And if the root be holy, so are the branches."—But this figure, by which the entire nation was compared to a lump of dough consecrated to God, did not furnish the Apostle with the means of distinguishing between Jews and Jews; between those who had faithfully preserved this national character and those who had obliterated it by their personal unbelief. Thus he is obliged to add a second figure.—Godet.

v. 21.—"If God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest He also spare not thee" (neither will He spare thee, R.V.)—The doom of Christendom is here pronounced, for there can be no doubt now that it has not "continued in God's goodness," so that its being "cut off" is only a question of time. Striking it is that these words should have been addressed to Rome, the capital of professing Christendom, and, as Rev. xvii. shows, Babylon the Great, "the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth."

JUNE 6.—ROMANS XII.

v. 1.—"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God."—"These mercies," it might have been rendered; for the Greek definite article is sometimes translated by a demonstrative pronoun. "These are the mercies of God (says Godet) to which Paul appeals here, and the development of which has filled the first eleven chapters."

"Your reasonable service."—The word for "reasonable" occurs but twice in the N.T.—here, and in 1 Pet. ii. 2, where it is rendered, "of the word." It is logieos, an adjective formed from the word logos, which means "word," and is the well-known expression for the Gospel, whereas "reasonable" is a translation which supposes logos to mean "reason," but this it never does in the N.T. It were better to leave 1 Pet. ii. 2 as it stood, "of the word," and render this so too, "which is your ritual of the word," or "Gospel ritual," the word "service" being here the word used for temple service or ritual. How expressive is the thought thus conveyed as to what "Gospel ritual," or "ritual of the word," really is. The old ritual called for animal dead sacrifices, this the presentation of the body as a living sacrifice.

v. 16.—"Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate" (to things that are lowly, R.V.)—The old translation is much to be preferred to that of the R.V. The Rev. H. Moule remarks on the words, "Men of low estate:"—"So probably better than 'low things,' as some render. To sympathise with the humble was the antithesis to the having 'the heart haughty and the eyes lofty' (Ps. cxxx. 1). The 'low estate' in view was, no doubt, specially that of social inferiority, e.g., that of the slave. Wonderful was the work of the Gospel in bringing home this great sacred duty, and yet without one note of revolutionary bitterness."

v. 1.—"There is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God."—When we remember that Nero was on the throne when these words were written, it shows how little the personal character of rulers affects the Christian duty of obeying them.

v. 4.—"A revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil."—The word "wrath" here and in the next verse means "judicial displeasure," and this is its true meaning when used of "the wrath to come," "the day of wrath," &c. The word does not imply personal anger or dislike so much as "judicial anger." Hence we read of "the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God" (Rom. ii. 5). See also verse 19 of last chapter: "Avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath"—i.e., to God's judicial dealings with those who wronged them.

JUNE 8.—ROMANS XIV.

v. 1.—"Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations" (not for decisions of doubts, R.V., margin).—One sometimes meets with Christians who are ready enough to receive others, but then it is "for decisions of doubts." In other words, if they cannot in time convince them on points at issue between them they will not have them. Here, on the contrary, they are to be received quite independently of any agreement upon points of dispute; nay, even if they hold their own they are entitled to do so, though one may think them wrong, for "it is unmistakable from all the passages in question, on which side Apostolic truth lay. St. Paul clearly decides against the principle of the 'weak brethren,' though he treats it as an error which might lawfully and usefully be met by toleration, and the quiet influence of tolerant example."

v. 4.—"Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth."—For "another man's servant," R.V. rightly reads, "the servant of another." But there still remains the difficulty that the ground of judging fellow-Christians is not that they are servants of another, but of the same Lord as we ourselves serve; and, therefore, being acquainted with his will, we think that we are entitled to sit in judgment upon them when they seem to us to run counter to that will. It is therefore all the more remarkable that we are told not to act upon this ground—which, as a matter of fact, is true—but upon that of independence one of another, as much so as if we did not serve the same Lord, but each a different one. In fact, in judging our fellow-servants, we insensibly, perhaps, assume to be "upper servants," who may, possibly, have some claim to act so with those put under them. Now this, in matters of conscience, is what the Apostle forbids. Each believer is to be as independent of his fellow-servant as if they served different masters.

v. 7.—"For none of us liveth to himself," &c.—We must not, however, abuse this independence of one another, so as to make "self" the centre of our responsibility. Christ, not self, is the centre round which we are to revolve. Even "when we die" we do not pass out of his service, but only into another sphere of it.

JUNE 9.—ROMANS XV.

v. 3.—"For even Christ pleased not himself; but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached Thee fell on Me."—Does not St. Paul here allude specially to the conflict of Gethsemane, and to the outrages which our Lord patiently bore just afterwards? He had scarcely said "Thy will be done," when the awful reproaches of his night of shame and insult began.—Cambridge Bible for Schools.

v. 4.—"That we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope."—The word "hope" has the article, and ought to be rendered "the hope," alluding to that which the Scriptures set forth. This same thought of "the hope" occurs again in verse 13, where, after several Scriptures are quoted in reference to the future "reign over the Gentiles," we read: "Now the God of hope (literally, the hope) fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope (the hope) through the power of the Holy Ghost."

JUNE 10.—ROMANS XVI.

v. 5.—"The church that is in their house."—This is the only allusion to a church at Rome, a place where was to rise in times of apostasy a church which should profess to be "the mother and mistress of all churches." It is not a little significant, too, that till this last chapter the word "church" does not occur in the Epistle to the Romans, where it is used five times, mostly of local churches. Had the idea presented by the word "church" been of such importance as many suppose, the Apostle would hardly have made his longest and most important Epistle conspicuous by its absence.

v. 25.—There is an interesting correspondence between the beginning and close of this Epistle. He begins with the Gospel, and he closes with it. He called it there "the Gospel of God . . . . concerning his Son Jesus Christ." He calls it here "the preaching of Jesus Christ." He spoke of it there as "promised afore," but as in the person of its subject, the Son of God, "declared with power" by the resurrection. He speaks of it here as a mystery "kept secret," but "now made manifest."

At the beginning he speaks of his own commission to make it known "for obedience to the faith (or, of faith) among all nations." At the close he contemplates not so much his own work as how this work is to be carried on throughout the dispensation, and finds that this is to be "by prophetic Scriptures (most probably those of the New Testament) according to the commandment of the everlasting God to be made known to all nations for the obedience of faith."

It is a pity that the R.V. has not altered "by the Scriptures of the prophets" by giving the literal rendering of the Greek "by prophetic Scriptures," thereby showing that the reference is, in all probability, to the New Testament writings. "It is of this very letter, as well as of the other letters which had proceeded from his pen, or from that of his colleagues, that he is speaking in our passage" (Godet).

EX-INSPECTOR MINAHAN.—The Committee for Suppressing the Traffic in English Girls send to us a cheque for £5 towards the proposed testimonial to Ex-Inspector Minahan. They add that, while in their employ, they have found him active, useful, intelligent, and reliable; they feel that in being practically driven out of the police force of the metropolis, and refused a pension to which his long service entitled him, he has been unjustly treated, while the public have lost a valuable servant.

Notices.

The friend who sends The Christian to Rev. Mr. Hiller, Winnenden, is desired to discontinue it. Mr. Hiller died some time ago.

Mission and other Appeals.

The Order of Good Templars have started a special fund for distributing Temperance literature throughout the country, and they make an appeal for aid in this extensive project. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. John Collings, 68 Durning-road, Liverpool.

The Home, Brunswick-road, Southsea.—A mortgage of £500 on this Female Home has unexpectedly been called in, and it must be paid by the coming autumn. Commander Key, Downham, St. Edward's-road, Southsea, makes an earnest appeal for help in meeting this heavy claim.

Eight Hundred Militiamen are now encamped at Brecon, South Wales, and with so many temptations much sin prevails. The men eagerly receive and read Gospel literature; old religious papers, tracts and periodicals for distribution, would be thankfully received by Secretary, Y.M.C.A., Castle-street, Brecon.

Caledonian-road, N.—The sale of work usually held in the autumn, will take place this year on June 16 and 17, at Worthing House, 1, Mountford-terrace, Barnsbury, the proceeds to be devoted to the expenses of mission work in this poor and thickly populated district in connection with the church of St. John the Evangelist. Gifts of needlework, clothes for the poor, &c., flowers, fruit, grocery, eggs, butter, hosiery, illuminations, will be gratefully received by Mrs. Charles Ough, Worthing House, Mountfort-terrace, Barnsbury-square, N.

Invalid Home, Polegate, Sussex. — This excellent Home is intended specially for cases of illness which are not eligible for other homes; those subject to epileptic fits are admitted, also sufferers from diseased bone, &c., and patients are allowed to remain as long as needful. An urgent appeal is made for a sum of £100 to defray current expenses, to pay off past debts unavoidably incurred, and to help towards the maintenance of free cases, viz., of those who from poverty and friendlessness are unable to offer any payment. Miss C. Henniker, 21, Derby-terrace, West Croydon, will be happy to give any further information.

Pamphlets.

Nurei. By A. Small. (J. Menzies & Co. 1d.) A sketch by one of our missionary ladies, giving a graphic picture of the characters and incidents met with in visiting Mohammedan zenanas.

King Mtesa, of Uganda. (Seeley. 3d.) An interesting pamphlet, containing extracts from letters and journals of the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society labouring in Central Africa.

The little book, Joy and Peace in Believing, which is in its 65th thousand, and has been much owned in bringing peace to troubled and anxious souls, is now to be had in the French language. (Partridge. 1d.)

"Hitherto:" The Story of the Orphans' Home at Sibton, near Yoxford, and at Yarmouth. (H. B. Crisp. Saxmundham. 6d.) This narrative of Divine interposition, timely help, and answered prayer, will profit any reader who may send for it.

Four Speeches of the late Earl Cairns on behalf of the Church Missionary Society have been published. (Seeley. 2d.) Admirers of the late lamented Earl will all be grateful for this timely and graceful tribute to his memory, as well as for the intrinsic value of the addresses.

The Purity Pledge: A Sermon by Rev. G. S. Muir, M.A. (Elliot, Edinburgh. 1d.) The evil and its remedy are here pointed out: the chief object being to bring under the notice of ministers and others the White Cross Movement. The Earl of Aberdeen commends the sermon in a few prefatory words.

The Mombasa Mission. This pamphlet narrates the history of the work done at Frere Town, East Africa, among the freed slaves, by the Church Missionary Society. Much valuable information is afforded. The price is 2d., and the pamphlet can be procured at the Society's Offices, Salisbury-square, Fleet-street, E.C.

Think. A Reply to Lord Bramwell's Plea for Drink. By Dawson Burns, D.D. (337, Strand. 1d.) Lord Bramwell fares ill under Dr. Burns' masterly handling. Each argument advanced in favour of the use of alcohol is subjected to severe criticism, and is easily disposed of. Lord Bramwell has after all done good service to the cause of Temperance by showing the weakness and poverty of arguments on behalf of the drink.

An article on "General Gordon's Theology," by Rev. H. Carruthers Wilson, M.A., appears in The Expositor for June, based on three years' intimate personal intercourse with General Gordon.

THE SICK CHILDREN'S DINNER-TABLE at 47, Earl-street, Lisson-grove, has had around it nearly 2500 children during the past year, beside those to whom orders for milk, chocolate, beef-tea, &c. have been sent. The report for 1885 says, "Every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday throughout the year, an interesting sight may be seen at half-past twelve o'clock in a pleasant little room at the above address, by those who care to come. The visits of ladies and gentlemen and their children are much desired."

SEASIDE RESORTS.—A pleasant, yet inexpensive holiday at the seaside may be had by tired women workers on applying to the Lady Superintendent of Victoria House, 51, Old Steine, Brighton, opened by the Young Women's Christian Association. The Home is primarily intended for members of the Association, but others needing rest and change are also welcome. The terms for board and lodging are most moderate, and everything is done to enable visitors to gain pleasure and benefit from the change. Several of my holidays have been spent at Victoria House, so that I can speak of the very great kindness received by all.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

THE Christian Public is aware by this time of the lamented death of my beloved sister, Julia Corke, the originator of the effort to establish the LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, to grant rent-free rooms to the above class.

It is earnestly hoped and believed that this needed work may still be accomplished, that Christian Workers will take it up, and by their prayers, sympathy, and exertions to raise funds, strengthen the hands of the Treasurer (Miss Julia Fox, 54, Kensington Park-road, Ladbroke-square, Bayswater) and of myself, who, having worked in the cause from its commencement, will gladly take up this legacy of my beloved sister.

Funds continue to come in, which in all now amount to £300. Thanks to kind helpers. Cards for Collecting Shillings will be gratefully supplied, and Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, or by—

Society for Promoting Female Education in the East

(IN ZENANAS, HAREMS, AND SCHOOLS).

President:

THE DOWAGER MARCHIONESS OF CHOLMONDELEY.

Treasurer:

Sir W. R. FARQUHAR, Bart., 16, St. James's Street, S.W.

THIS Society was formed in 1834, for the purpose of promoting education based upon the Holy Scriptures among Eastern Females of all ranks and classes, either in their own secluded homes or in Missionary Schools. Its sphere of operations includes China, Ultra Ganges, Burmah, India, Ceylon, Mauritius, Africa, the Levant, and Persia. Zenana work is carried on by the Society's correspondents in various parts of India. More than 2,000 native ladies, many of them of rank and wealth, are thus receiving instruction.

The Committee now find it necessary to bring forward their need of immediate and liberal help; for while the fields are white unto the harvest, and opportunities of sending out labourers present themselves more frequently than at any previous time in the Society's history, and the work is steadily growing under the hands of the Committee, it is deeply to be lamented that the funds do not increase. Applications for Zenana and School Teachers are before the Committee, and they cannot send them forth; and urgent appeals for grants of money and of School materials have also been received, to which they are unable to respond. Let it be borne in mind that the object of this Society is to lead all under its influence to the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world;" THAT IT WILL NOT GIVE EDUCATION WITHOUT THE BIBLE; that it was the first to send forth teachers for Hindu Zenanas, and for Turkish harems, and the earliest organised in England for the benefit of the females of China, India, Africa, and Syria (with one or two exceptions of limited sphere), and it will surely be allowed that it is no untried work on behalf of which the Committee so earnestly plead. The Lord has owned and blessed their humble efforts; are they to stand still because His people do not allow them the means for going forward?

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary, Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to God, their own Father and Mother, and true Bible Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d.,

contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables Parents to teach one child or a family of twelve children, Teachers to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, Educated Ladies to teach all ages, or Ministers without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the SYSTEMATIC BIBLE TEACHING MISSION, 67, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

Committee:
The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, M.P.
The Right Hon. the Earl of Aberdeen.
Sir Henry Gordon, K.C.B.

And the joint Committees of the "Ragged School Union" and the "Reformatory and Refuge Union," &c., &c., &c.

The Object of the Gordon Memorial Fund is to benefit Poor Children by the application of the income in the following, among other ways:

1. Paying for the Maintenance of Poor Children in existing Homes and Institutions.
2. Paying for the temporary Maintenance of Poor Sickly Children in the Country or at the Seaside.

The Committee will strive to promote the future welfare of the Children of the Poor, the "Kings" and the "scuttlers," as the late General Gordon delighted to call them when extending to them a helping hand.

The Anchorage.

Hebrews vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

EXTRACTS.

"Simple and child-like hearts, that have newly entered into the joy of salvation, ignorant of scientific theology, but hungering and thirsting for God, turn to the writings of John with never-failing desire, and find in them green pastures and living waters. To a large extent it is the same with those who have reached the most advanced stages of Christian experience, whose spiritual nature has become deepened and expanded by the manifold teachings of God. Here the simplicity of youth and the ripest and holiest wisdom of age agree. I have taken pains to inquire of many belonging to both classes how they have been guided in their reading, and what they have found most fruitful of spiritual blessing and delight; and almost every answer has included—at least—the Gospel of John, often named in a tone of personal affection, as men name a dear friend."

From "John, whom Jesus loved."

"In our homes we are ourselves responsible for the lighting of our lamps at the proper time, for the supply of oil to them, for the brightness of the reflectors, and for everything else connected with their shining; the lamp has neither will, nor choice, nor faculty of consent or resistance. So, too, it was with the lights of the Tabernacle and Temple. But it is otherwise with Christian churches; the material of which they are composed is not dead, but living; and the grace of the Lord must be met on our part by faith and prayer and hearty consent. He does, indeed, work in us to will, as well as to do of His good pleasure; but it is a working in human hearts. He is not far away from us; He is in our very midst; and He only waits our asking to give us all we need in order that we may shine as lights in the world."

From "Thy First Love."

"Two men may do the same thing so far as the outward appearance goes; for example, may give to the same charity, or kneel in the same place of worship, or say Amen to the same prayer. You may not be able to discern a shade of difference, and yet the 'works' may be as opposite and as wide asunder as heaven and hell. The Lord claims to 'know' the works of the Laodiceans, in the profoundest and most penetrative sense, inwardly and hiddenly as well as outwardly. 'Thy works,' in all that they are and all that they mean and involve, lie open under Mine eye, in the broad, bright sunshine, as they do not lie open even to thyself."

From "Behold, I stand at the Door and Knock."

"Some of God's hired servants are called upon not to work, but to wait. A poor old sister in the workhouse waited for orders from Christ, and could only hear Him saying, 'Lie still and cough.' Many are called upon to glorify God in lives of meek submission spent upon sick beds on the edge of the grave. Let them not murmur. 'They also serve who only stand and wait.' It is not theirs to run with the thousands who speed over sea and land to do the Lord's bidding; but by their saintly patience, their constant trust, their joyful unworldliness, they may be made an abiding blessing. And, doubtless, great reward will come to them in the day when the meek shall inherit the earth, and the merciful shall obtain mercy."

From "Calls to Christ."

"It was never God's plan that the children of Israel should spend those dreadful forty years in the wilderness. He led them up to Kadesh-Barnea within a very few months after they came out of Egypt; and had they been obedient they would have gone into the land at once, and that without passing over Jordan at all. But on the border of that land they murmured and doubted, and sent up spies to see if the Lord's promise was true, to judge for themselves whether they could possess the land. They fell into unbelief there. And when the spies came back, in spite of the earnest remonstrance of faithful Joshua and Caleb, the Israelites rebelled against the Lord, and would not go up to possess the land. Then it was that the Lord turned them back; and for forty years they lived only to provoke and tempt Him."

From "Out of Egypt."

"The simplicity and naturalness of the Bible are most striking. Where else can be found such graphic pictures of parental and domestic life? The straightforward delineation of its most conspicuous characters; its record of the sins of God's people with the same impartial pen as is used for the setting forth of their virtues; its lofty moral tone; its sublimity of thought; as well as its superhuman authority—all bespeak its unique character. For like the Master, of whom it is the constant and consistent witness, its words are with authority. It never speculates or halts in its teaching, but drives straight to the mark in its ever recurring 'Thus saith the Lord,' in the Old Testament, and in the 'Verily, verily, I say unto you,' of the Master."

From "In the Volume of the Book."

"'My son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve Him.' Take his yoke upon you: it is not galling, it is easy; take his burden upon you: it is not heavy, it is light. Yes; his service is a reasonable service, it is perfect freedom. This choice you will never repent. Believe me, the ways of wisdom are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. Believe me, or, rather, believe Him who cannot lie—'Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.' Have you made this choice in your heart? Then, in the next place, make an open avowal, a public profession of it. Yes; come out from the world, take your stand openly upon the Lord's side. Let your conduct speak this language:

'I'm not ashamed to own my Lord,
Nor to defend his cause.'"

From "Addresses to Young Men."

"Just as Annan was going to enter the enquiry-meeting the hall door was closed in his face, and he reeled down the steps, exclaiming 'Great God, am I shut out of salvation for ever?' Away he went to the house of a friend, who assured him he might find an entrance into the hall by another door. In breathless haste he returned to seek the door, but in vain. These are small matters; but to an awakened soul such things seem to speak with the voice of God. At the midnight hour he entered my room and stood before me, his eyes wild and red with excitement, and his countenance black and terrible. His whole body, a frame of iron, shook and quivered. Knowing something of the man I feared he was about to lay hands on me, and take vengeance for some words of reproof. Very different was the case. Robert had now no blows but for himself; and with words of keen and cutting self-condemnation he asked the question of questions, 'What must I do to be saved?'"

From "The Christian Hero."

"You notice that the Book of Ruth contains the history of a Jew who went into a far country; in fact, I might say that the first chapter of this book is the fifteenth of Luke over again. We get a Jew backsliding, and through the means of that Jew's backsliding you will find that a poor Gentile girl is brought out of the Gentile country into the land of blessing. Then this girl marries a rich Jew, Boaz; and there we get a picture of the Lord Jesus Christ marrying the Church. Then after the rich Jew and the poor Gentile are united, you see the blessing turns back to the Jew. And I think that is just what the New Testament teaches of the way in which God is going to deal with the Jew by and by. He has backslidden, and the Gentiles are blessed; the Church of God will be united to Christ, and then the Jews will be blessed again."

From "Ruth, the Moabitess."

"It is resurrection power that saves us; and resurrection power can only be shown where there is real death. So in the case of Lazarus, wherein the Son of God was to be glorified. Jesus tarried four days until Lazarus was dead; not sick merely, but dead. Then He came to Bethany; and resurrection power had the opportunity of manifestation. The dead one was made alive; the Son of God was glorified; and joy and gladness filled the home. Reader, is the blessing delayed in coming to you because the Lord is waiting for you to see yourself dead: not sick merely with sin, but dead—condemned already under the curse of the broken law, and without a spark of the life of God in your soul? There is one of two conditions for all: Dead or Alive. There is no middle ground."

From "Life, Warfare, and Victory."

"One day a discussion on the evidences of the truth of Christianity arose among the stone-cutters. Duncan Matheson was the champion of the Bible. The leading sceptic, beaten in argument, assailed religion through the inconsistencies of its friends, declaring that Matheson was the only consistent Christian he had ever met. This compliment to his external morality, instead of pleasing his vanity, aroused his conscience, and he secretly charged himself with sheer hypocrisy in defending the truth, to whose divine power he felt in his heart he was an utter stranger. Another day, seeing a fellow-workman look sad, he expressed his sympathy, and found the man was distressed about his sins. Matheson took him aside, and although himself ignorant of the righteousness of God, and justification by faith in the Lord Jesus, directed him as best he could to the path of life. But this act recoiled on himself; and his conscience, now constantly awake, began to upbraid him. 'You're a hypocrite,' said he to himself; 'you point others to Christ, and all the while you are treading the way to hell yourself.' Then followed a fierce struggle between light and darkness; his soul was tortured almost to madness—a crisis was at hand."

From "Duncan Matheson."

"I tell you, when the Spirit of God is on us, the world looks very empty; the world has a very small hold upon us; and we begin to let go our hold of it. When the Spirit of God is upon us we shall just let go the things of time, and lay hold of things eternal. This is the Church's need to-day. We want the Spirit to come in mighty power, and consume all the vile dross there is in us. Oh that the Spirit of fire may come down and burn everything in us that is contrary to God's blessed Word and will."

From "Power from on High."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION.—LINGERING CASE OF A YOUNG WOMAN AT VENTNOR.

Mr. A. Rodyk, of Lansdowne-road, Tunbridge Wells, writes me (March 16, 1885), respecting this case, as follows:—

You will be pleased to hear that your medicine and liniment have been the means, by the blessing of God, of restoring to health a young woman residing at Ventnor, who had been a sufferer for twelve years. My sister and I have known her for ten years. She had then been admitted into the hospital for Diseases of the Chest, and after three months had to leave as incurable.

Since we became acquainted with the efficacy of your medicine and liniment she has been supplied with both, and has taken the one and used the other since September last. From that time she began to mend. In December she wrote to my sister that she was free from cough, night sweats, expectoration mixed with blood; in fact, from every symptom of the disease, and that she was quite strong, and wonderfully well.

This being a remarkable case, and of so long standing, I thought you would be glad to hear of its happy results.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

COMMON SENSE.

No doubt many who read from time to time such statements as the following, feel a certain amount of hesitation in accepting them in their entirety; indeed, we know that many eschew their claims altogether, and even if they condescend to peruse them, set them down as "manufactured," or, perhaps, whisper that imagination can go a great way, and do a great deal. We would not seek to argue with anyone disposed to view matters in this light, but recommend them to apply for our Seventh Report, just issued, which, while it ratifies the reports of former years, also treats of some of the work accomplished during the past two years.

Enquirers are invited to communicate with us, and we shall feel it to be a privilege to send them any information on the subject of Magnetic Treatment, so that prejudice against, and apathy concerning, it may be confronted by simple facts which we are able to lay before the searcher after knowledge in the Art of Healing.

The uniformity of our success is attributable to the thorough diagnosis each case receives, and to the unremittent care and attention bestowed during the time it remains under our control. Our candid opinion as to the merits or demerits of each case is clearly laid before the patient, and treatment is never forced upon the inquirer. When our advice is sought, it is freely and willingly given; the required course of treatment suggested, with the cost of same, and then the patient is left to exercise personal judgment as to the advisability of adopting our prescription. Would that everyone were ready to let his fellow-man be guided by his own common sense! It is often our lot to have to defend our patients from the antagonism and bigotry of those who decry our treatment, and who thereby entitle themselves to severe censure, because they do so without having heard or read one word of our defence.

Mrs. WYNDHAM, 42, Charlwood-street, South Belgravia, S.W.

November 10, 1884.—"It is now six months since your treatment was commenced, and it has been regularly followed ever since. Every word of hope you uttered is coming true, and I now scarcely ever have that dreadful tight feeling in the head, neither am I so forgetful, nor does the heavy feeling upon the brain trouble me. Just after I first commenced your treatment, I had extra worry, but it scarcely affected me. I have now an excellent appetite, and things that would formerly have troubled me do not even cause the trembling in my head from which I suffered."

January 28, 1885.—"My head is nearly well, and my health quite altered." [14523.]

Mr. B. Copson Garratt has devoted many years of his life to the practical adaptation of Magnetism to the alleviation and cure of various forms of disease. His published essays clearly demonstrate the natural action of the remedy; they may be had on application at his Consulting Rooms, where a private list of 1,000 names may also be obtained.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

And certainly no holiday could be better spent than with the little colony of God's people, who are always to be found gathered round the old pastor, whose life work all these years has been this beautiful and mysterious ministry of prayer."—Henry Drummond.

The Christian.

"HOLINESS AND HEALING."

A VERY remarkable Conference, holding three sessions daily, through five long and hot summer days, took place last week at the Agricultural Hall. The morning meeting was held on the first day at Bethshan, but there was nothing like room enough, and on the second and succeeding days that also was transferred to the Agricultural Hall.

A marked feature in the more recent religious Conferences has been the definite purpose for which they have been convened. The first Barnet (now the Mildmay) Conference was indeed designed for the definite purpose of bringing together Christians of different views and denominations, and cultivating a spirit of brotherly love amongst them. It still serves this purpose, and is to that extent, besides having many collateral advantages, a most useful institution. But the subjects proposed for consideration have not the particularity of the Keswick and other Conventions, and the addresses have the character of more or less instructive expositions of Scripture, rather than of counsels or appeals directed to some special doctrine or experience.

It may, however, fairly be maintained that a teaching in which "the faith" is regarded as a whole, one part of which is dwelt upon at one time, and another at another time, is more according to apostolic precedent, and better calculated to produce an all-round Christian character than one which makes a specialty of any particular phase of doctrine or of life.

The subjects of the International Conference last week were "Divine Healing and True Holiness." The conveners were Rev. W. E. Boardman (author of "The Higher Christian Life") and his fellow-workers at the Faith-healing Home at Bethshan, Drayton-park, Holloway; and the speakers included delegates from France and Germany, Sweden and Holland, America, Australia, and other countries.

The spirit in which such gatherings as these should be attended by those who have not already received in their entirety the views set forth, should be that inculcated by our Lord in Matt. vii. 1—4, and James ii. 13. "Judge not, that ye be not judged;" "Mercy rejoiceth against judgment." It should be our aim to cast the beam of prejudice, or unbelief, or self-sufficiency, out of our own eye, that we may see clearly to cast the splinter of error out of our brother's eye; it may prove, as a commentator has said, that the splinter in his eye may be but the reflection of the beam in our own. "Thou perceivest in thy own selfish judgment-seat that thy brother has very absurd opinions; he sees things very strangely; it is because of that splinter in his eye; take it out. Alas, there is no splinter there. What thou seest is only the image of a whole timber in thine own eye reflected into his. That timber is made by some moral mistake, some selfish passion of thine own. Perhaps when thou hast pitched the lumber out of thine own optics, thou wilt find the splinter gone from his." But if indeed it be found that the brother has been overtaken in a fault of doctrine, ye that are spiritual are to restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted into any divers and strange doctrines, or blown about by the cunning craftiness of deceiving men.

On the other hand, we are commanded by the same Lord to "beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves;" and by his apostles to "prove all things; hold fast that which is good;" to "try the spirits whether they be of God, because many false prophets are gone out into the world."

It is a narrow path in which we have to walk, proving all things and trying spirits, and yet not judging with prejudice or pride. A safe rule is given, however, as to ourselves —the golden rule—to judge others with the same judgment with which we should wish to be judged; and as to others, "By their fruits ye shall know them . . . Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit, but the corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit."

The conveners of this Conference are entitled to a calm, candid, and respectful hearing from the Church at large, for their works testify of them that they are good men and true. And inasmuch as they bear witness to the wonderful works of God, and call upon sinners to repent and believe the Gospel, and on Christians to cultivate closer intimacy with God, to make prayer a definite reality, to attempt great things for God, and to expect great things from God, it is evident that, so far, their testimony is in harmony with the mind and word of God, and it would be a calamity we all should feel if they should seriously diverge from the middle of the paths of judgment.

When the Spirit of God came upon Jahaziel, an unknown man, of the rank and file of Jehoshaphat's army, and he bade the king and the people fear not nor be dismayed, for Jehovah was with them, Jehoshaphat showed the greatness of his soul by bowing his head with his face to the ground, and by appealing to Judah and Jerusalem, "Believe in the Lord your God, so shall ye be established: believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper."

The Church at Corinth did not discern the Lord's body—did not recognise and acknowledge and obey Jesus as Lord—(note the emphatic use of the term Lord seven times in 1 Cor. xi. 20, 23, 26, 27, 29, 32); for this cause many were weak and sickly among them, and many slept—many prematurely died; not apparently always on account of their own low condition of soul, but of that of the whole Church. Many, like Lazarus, are sick, whom Jesus loves. Many, like Lazarus, die, of whom we cannot help but say, with Martha and Mary, "Lord, if Thou hadst been here, our brother had not died." The name of the City of God in the coming day shall be JEHOVAH-SHAMMAH—The Lord is there. But faith anticipates the future—"faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Why should they now say among the heathen, "Where is their God?" What is more to be desired than that the sons and daughters, the servants and handmaids, of the Lord, should prophesy, and that the unbelieving and the unlearned should be convinced of all and judged of all; that the secrets of their hearts should be made manifest, and so, falling down on their face, they should worship God, and report that GOD IS WITH YOU of a truth? (1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25.)

We have summarised, in other columns, some of the addresses and reports; but in order to convey to our readers a succinct epitome of the views propounded, we have reprinted a paper by one of thier principal teachers, Rev. A. Simpson, of New York, which appears in The Word, the Work, and the World, for June, of which he is the Editor. Meanwhile, we remark that this movement appears to us to need help, guidance, and correction, which may be given by men of God who will humble themselves to see God in it, but which they will be able neither to receive nor to give, while refusing to hear God's voice in it at all.

In our next we purpose to point out what we consider some of its weaker and more questionable features. But the very endeavour of the adversary to overlay the truth with error, to sow weeds among the wheat, and especially his introduction of the delusion of Mental Healing (as recorded in our last) to counterfeit the work of God, may well lead us to believe that God is calling us to enlarged faith in Him, and that Satan is seeking to counteract his gracious work.

RELIGIOUS CONDITION OF FRANCE.

NUMERICALLY, Protestantism in France is very weak. Those competent to estimate give the number as from 700,000 to 800,000. This is few for a country with 36 millions of inhabitants. How much more it might have been but for the expulsion of the Huguenots! There is, however, progress. In 1809, Mr. Recolin says there were only 150 pastors in France; and now, even after the loss of Alsace, there are 870 pastors, of whom 85 belong to the Independent Churches. It is also true that the Protestant minority occupies an important position in public life. In every department of human activity Protestants have acquired a distinguished place.

As to ecclesiastical organisation, French Protestants are divided into three groups; the Reformed Church, the Church of the Confession of Augsburg, and the various Independent Churches. The Reformed Church is the most considerable, comprehending about 600,000 members. Its connection with the State deprives it of the free action that might render its decisions even more effective than they now are. The Church of Augsburg Confession has lost three-fourths of its members by the annexation of Alsace to Germany. It counts about 80,000 adherents, with 90 pastors.

The Independent Churches number from 15,000 to 20,000 members; the most numerous is the Union of the Free Evangelical Churches with about 50 pastors. These churches represent with courage and firmness the principle of the independence of the Church, but their direct influence is restrained by their numerical weakness. The Methodist Church counts 30 regular pastors and about 100 local preachers. The other denominations, Baptists, &c., are of less importance. – Journal Religieux.

COMMANDMENTS OF JOY.

OF these there are three very remarkable ones in the Old Testament which are linked together in a truly logical and natural manner.

I. Be glad in God Himself. "Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous" (Psalm xxxiii. 1). This is the foundation of all true and lasting delights. No man knows what his nature is capable of till that blessed hour when the bright reality of the forgiveness of sins, and of the personal love and friendship of Jesus Christ, are revealed to him, and he, for the first time, quaffs the new wine of godly gladness. He has now discovered the inestimable treasure of joy in God Himself, a joy that liberates, and satisfies, ennobles and endures, as none other can. He finds that even in loss and affliction it still endures, becoming "a joy in sorrow." Then, at last, he understands a little Habakkuk's wonderful saying: "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

II. Be glad in his service. "Thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God in all that thou puttest thine hands unto" (Deut. xii. 18). He is the God of liberty who rejoices in the free service of loving children, while He abominates the begrudged and toilsome dutifulness of those who, ignorant of his free and glorious grace, labour painfully to win his approval. He smiles lovingly upon such as rest in his grace, and who therefore "serve Him with gladness, and come before his presence with thanksgiving." Many very religious people are so ignorant of the Gospel that they regard holiness as a task to be done under penalties of suffering or loss; but enlightened men of God know the delight of serving Him from the strong motive of love.

III. Be glad in his gifts. "And thou shalt rejoice in every good thing which the Lord thy God hath given unto thee, and unto thine house," &c. (Deut. xxvi. 11.)

First came joy in God Himself; then joy in his service; and now joy in his gifts. What a glorious completeness there is in this threefold commandment!

Many rejoice in the gift, forgetting the Giver; they allow the very abundance of the gifts to hide the Hand that gives. Others seek their pleasure in the excitement of Christian work, until in the hurry of work they lose what joy they had in God Himself.

On the other hand, some, of mystical tendencies, are more spiritual than the Bible. They dwell so exclusively on the duty and privilege of joy in God alone, as to leave no room in their creed for delight in secondary objects of pleasure. The thousand pleasant things God has given us to minister to our various appetites, whether those appetites be physical, mental, or moral, have no sure and recognised place in their religion. From this error comes unnaturalness, offence of conscience, weakness, self-deceiving, and, not seldom, hypocrisy.

In contrast with all this, how refreshing the large and natural freedom of the Divine Word, which, putting joy in God first, commands us to serve Him with gladness, and to rejoice in every good thing He sends, for He "giveth us all things richly to enjoy."

(1) This is a command. Therefore, Christian brother, you are not at liberty to be miserable. You are not free to despise any bright thing your generous heavenly Father has sent you, by receiving it unappreciatingly, and without thanksgiving, just as though it were a snare of the enemy. To be glad in such a gift is not your privilege merely, it is your duty. "Thou shalt rejoice in every good thing;" in health and sleep; in things pleasant to the eye, and things good for food; in your home and its comforts; in your intellectual pursuits, and amusements; in your family and friends, and all the comfort of heart which their love, and helpfulness, and beauty bring to you; and in the beauty of the world, the delights of music, and art, and every lovely imagination of the mind. "Thou shalt rejoice in every good thing which the Lord thy God hath given unto thee, and unto thine house."

Yes! such joy—so long as our gladness in the creature never leads us to set it between us and the Creator and Giver—is a genuine religious duty. The people of God are to be happily sensitive to all the good and pleasant things that minister comfort to body, mind, or soul. True spirituality does not mean insensibility to any department of the universe of God. It involves a higher sensitiveness, a greater openness of mind and heart to receive and enjoy every bright and noble thing which God has made.

> "Heaven above is softer blue,
> Earth around is sweeter green!
> Something lives in every hue
> Christless eyes have never seen;
> Birds with gladder songs o'erflow,
> Flowers with deeper beauties shine,
> Since I know, as now I know,
> I am his, and He is mine."

Further, since this is a command, disobedience will be very displeasing to the Lord. What father is there who would not be grieved if his children refused to rejoice in the home which he had laboured long and hard to make beautiful for their pleasure? Little wonder if their gloomy, thankless faces move him to great anger! Nor need we wonder to find, in Deut. xxviii. 47 and 48, a terrible expression of God's deep anger in view of his people's joylessness: "Because thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things; therefore, shalt thou serve thine enemies which the Lord shall send against thee, in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things: and He shall put a yoke of iron upon thy neck, until He have destroyed thee." Equally solemn are the words of Joel, ch. i. 12: "The wine is dried up, and the fig tree languisheth; the pomegranate tree, the palm tree also, and the apple tree, even all the trees of the field are withered, because joy is withered away from the sons of men."

(2) It may be well now to notice some hindrances to obedience of this precept. First of these is

(1) An unrepentant heart. No, unsaved friend! you have no part nor lot here. This joyous commandment is not for you. How could you, with reason and propriety, rejoice in God's gifts as his gifts, when the hideous, shameful sin of a lifetime lies still on your conscience, unrepented of, unconfessed, and unforgiven; and when the very next hour may see you, stripped of them all, standing, naked and ashamed, in his holy, awful presence! You rejoice in his gifts! Impossible! Just try it for a moment, speaking out the truth to your own heart: "I am a sinner in God's sight; am still wilful and rebellious, for I have never truly sought and received his pardon and grace. But this good thing —health, home, friends or pleasure, &c.—is one of his gifts to me. I will rejoice in it as such." No, you will not—you cannot. If you only so much as suspect that it really came as God's gift to you, you will be very uncomfortable about it. The more you see in it a proof of personal thought and kindness the more will it burn in your inmost soul like a coal of fire. This command is only possible to penitent, believing, and forgiven ones.

(2) Ignorance of the Commandment.

Not a few godly people do not know of the existence of this text; while of those who do, many reject it in fear and incredulity, so narrow are their thoughts of God, and of his generous purposes towards them. They have never fully understood that He wishes them to open their hearts freely to every good thing He gives them.

One of his wise-hearted ones once received from Him the gift of a pleasant child. Her joy in that gift was very great. Each succeeding month seemed only to develop both her treasure and her gladness in that treasure. Whereupon, certain Christian neighbours shook their heads, and grew fearful of idolatry. "I fear she loves her child too much," one would say to the other, not knowing that her love for her Father in heaven, and the happy confidence she had in Him, lay at the very root of this new love and gladness of which this child was both object and source. By and by they spoke their fears to her. "I cannot love my child too well," she replied, "or rejoice in him too much, so long as I love him in God, and rejoice over him as God's gift. Christian mothers should love far better than other mothers. Love is of God. So long as I love God first, I cannot love my child too fondly. My daily prayer is that He would ever deepen and purify my love for my child. I love God better, not worse, when I love it so well." The neighbours answered her nothing; they felt she had spoken well.

(3) Fear of loss. The disappointing losses of life have made us, perhaps, keenly sensible of its uncertainty. We feel we haven't so much as a day's lease of any portion of our earthly possession. This brings the temptation to undue restraint of heart. We are apt to grow shy of much gladness, lest the dreaded shadow of loss should suddenly darken it. It is only natural, after some bitter disappointment, to say, "Well, in future I'll take more care; never again will I set my heart very much on anything."

Yet this is poor wisdom; prudence that brings the curse of withering upon the heart. It only hardens, making us narrow of soul, and poor, and robbing life of love and zest. How much truer the wisdom of the Bible: "Thou shalt rejoice in every good thing," &c.

Let us suppose the worst; that, after rejoicing greatly over some delightful possession—rejoicing, of course, in the godly sense, gratefully and trustfully, ever seeing God in your gift, for no other rejoicing is safe. Suppose that suddenly your gourd withers. At first you may wish you had never enjoyed it. But soon you will take your sorrow to that Heavenly Friend to whom you took your joy. In that Presence you will receive your loss as you formerly received your joy, as coming from the hand of Love. There, too, you will learn that your life and character have been enriched both by the joy and by the sorrow. So will you enter into Tennyson's deep saying:—

> "'Tis better to have loved and lost,
> Than never to have loved at all."

You will be glad then that you did not yield to cowardly fear; that you did not shut your heart against those bright messengers of gladness which the great Father used to send you in your prosperous days.

We know well there is danger on either hand; danger, on the one hand, of dependence on these good gifts of God, which leads inevitably to unbelief, sin, and sorrow; danger, on the other, of partial or total rejection of these his ministers, through fear of this ungodly and ensnaring dependence. Yet the cure is simple. Enjoy them as his gifts and in his presence, while you entrust them to his keeping. Believe heartily that the Lord gave them to you to make you glad, that He is glad in your gladness.[*] Believe, further, that should He take them from you, the Hand that takes will be the same piercèd Hand that gave; that it will bless in the taking as fully as it blessed in the bestowal. Thus only will your joy be safe and pure and healthy.

(3) Once more, let us view this command as a revelation of the Father.

Do not many people think of God very much as boys think of certain schoolmasters? These masters are excellent while school-hours last, setting tasks wisely, teaching well, and ruling firmly; but when school is over their interest is gone along with the tasks. With the boys' games and fun they have no concern; so much so that should they show a kindly interest on some rare occasion the boys are quite astonished.

Just so do many think of God, the blessed Father. What a surprise there will be for them some day, when they, who all their life long have been friends, accepting all the hard things of life as the mysterious gifts of God, while they snatched their pleasures, never sure if He meant such bright things for them—when they awake to the truth concerning Him that "Every good gift, and every perfect gift cometh down from the Father of lights," "Who giveth us all things richly to enjoy."

The commandment before us reveals the Father as being much concerned with the children's happiness. To Him it is not enough that He has found them abundant means of enjoyment: He is equally concerned about the use of these means. So desirous is He of having happy children around Him, that He commands them to receive his gifts freely and joyfully. To neglect them is to grieve Him. Thus we learn that, not only may we—always, of course within the limits of godly prudence, instructed by the Word of God—enter into whatever good thing He sends with a child-like abandonment of delight, but also that He the Great Father, the Giver, so glorious in his generosity, is glad in our gladness, rejoicing in our joy.

One is always delighted, in entering a family, to see the children gather freely around their father with their games and toys. It is very pleasant to see them so sure of his interest and sympathy that their amusements seem to have a new zest when entered into in his presence. Happy children! Happy father! you say. Yes; and happy the children of the Heavenly Father who know the liberty of the children, and the perfect sympathy of the Father! Happy the sons and daughters of God who know how to enjoy every good thing He sends as in his presence, and as fully assured of his loving interest and good pleasure!

"Thou shalt rejoice in every good thing which the Lord thy God hath given unto thee, and unto thine house, thou, and the Levite, and the stranger that is among you."

"There's a wideness in God's mercy,
  Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in his justice
  Which is more than liberty.
For the love of God is broader
  Than the measure of man's mind,
And the heart of the Eternal
  Is most wonderfully kind.
But we make his love too narrow,
  By false limits of our own,
And we magnify his strictness
  With a zeal He will not own.
Pining souls, come nearer Jesus!
  And, oh, come not doubting thus,
But with love that trusts more bravely
  His huge tenderness for us.

If our love were but more simple,
  We should take Him at his word;
And our lives would be all sunshine
  In the sweetness of our Lord."

HORSE RACING AND THE DAILY PRESS.

THE "Derby" race has once more been run, and some interest attaches to the comments of the secular Press, on what is termed "the great horse-race of the year." Thus The Standard, in a leading article devoted to the coming race, remarked on the "comparative indifference" displayed towards a subject "once so absorbing." In fact, there was an acknowledgment "that the popularity of our principal race meetings has been slowly on the wane for several years past." "It is certain," said the writer, "that the interest in horses and horse-racing, which was once so general amongst us, has declined of late to an extent that neither the gravity of public affairs nor the pecuniary difficulties of large classes of society is sufficient to account for."

The Times, in reporting the event itself, used these words: "It has been said, with what amount of truth we need not here discuss, that the Derby is losing its hold upon the popular imagination as the great test race of the year." The Daily News struck a corresponding note in its anticipatory leader.

Why there should be a decline in the interest which the public display towards horse-racing is a point on which the daily Press does not greatly enlighten us. The Standard suggests that it is partially due to the disappearance of Lord Palmerston and his contemporary Lord Derby, both of whom helped to make horse-racing "fashionable." On the other hand, the beauty of the weather on this last occasion helped to draw together an immense assemblage of people. Judging from the accounts given, we arrive at the conclusion that the multitude is possibly as large as ever; but it has a greater admixture of a low and disreputable element. Racing is "going down" in this sense; but there are sad tokens that the vice of betting in connection with horse-races affects a very large proportion of what may be termed "the populace." Concerning the crowd on Epsom Downs, The Times distinctly says it is "in great part taken from the very dregs of the population of London."

It is a singular circumstance that The Times withholds its own authority from the description given of the Derby Day in its columns. The account is headed as "from a correspondent." In that description the character of the crowd is darkly drawn, accompanied by the remark that although the real nature of the gathering would not be forcibly evident to those who remained within the grand stand, and viewed "the surging mob" from a distance, "yet even they could hardly fail to have seen and heard much that was uncanny as they drove or walked from the railway-station upon the Downs to the stand."

It is impossible not to regret the presence, on such an occasion, of the Prince and Princess of Wales, with their five children, three of whom are daughters. The motive which induced the royal party to attend was, doubtless, that of recognising what is supposed to be a national pastime. But the "national" character of the Derby is a fiction, unless the nation lies at a far lower moral level than we should like to admit.

TO MY COUNTRYMEN.

IN this the Nineteenth Century
  Since Purity Divine
Dwelt among erring mortals
  Within a human shrine,
In so-called Christian England
  Are done such deeds of shame,
We blush to think upon them,
  And dare not speak their name.

Our country's free-born daughters
  Like slaves are bought and sold,
Victims for Peers and Princes,
  With their accursèd gold;
Our womanhood degraded,
  By foulest evil wrought,
The virtue of our girlhood
  Counted a thing of nought.

When Sextus wronged Lucretia,
  Blighting her life and home,
It cost the haughty Tarquins
  The sovereignty of Rome;
But when our hapless daughters
  By Prince and Peer undone,
Cry to the Law for Justice
  God help them! there is none.

Lift up your voice to heaven,
  Mothers, on bended knee,
Rise up in wrath, ye fathers,
  And say, "This shall not be;"
Men that are men, look upward
  For courage, strength, and might,
Your watchword, "No surrender,"
  No quarter in this fight!

Manhood of Christian England!
  In righteousness arise,
Since womanhood is lovely
  And precious in your eyes;
Your sisters' dauntless champions,
  True to your sacred trust,
Speak, as in tones of thunder,
  To the foul slaves of lust.

Tell them their deeds of darkness
  Are coming to the light,
That God, their Judge, is with you
  In this most holy fight;
That your stern resolution
  No power on earth can shake,
That neither Peers nor Princes
  Unscathed the Law shall break.

Ye have the vote—now use it,
  The battle is at hand;
For pure and noble womanhood
  Make a determined stand;
Choose for our new Law-makers
  Men who themselves are pure,
So will ye do your duty,
  And victory be sure.

SOLDIERS IN THE PUNJAB, INDIA.

RAWAL PINDI is one of the largest garrisons in India, and is likely to become even more important than it is at present. Since 1880 we have had a very flourishing Temperance Society there; when I came home on furlough, nearly a third of the British soldiers in the garrison were total abstainers. Our difficulty, however, always has been to find a place for holding our meetings; the greater part of the time we have had to be content with tents.

It is proposed to build a Temperance hall, at a cost of 12,000 rupees. The Government will give half the amount provided the balance be raised. The officers and soldiers in the garrison have subscribed 2000 rupees, so that 4000 rupees (£400) is still needed. I hope to start for Rawal Pindi in a few weeks, and trust that those who have the welfare of our soldiers at heart, will enable me to take back at least £200.—Yours truly,

W. F. ARMSTRONG,
Chaplain of Rawal Pindi from 1877 to 1884.
The Vicarage, Staines, Middlesex.

[*] "Hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servant" (Psalm lxxxv. 27).

IS THE REVELATION JEWISH ?—2.

THIS book is, by the Revealer himself, divided into three parts — (1) "The things which thou hast seen," (2) "The things which are," (3) "The things which shall be hereafter." We are disposed to regard the first term as relating to the vision of ch. i.; the second, to the whole period of this present age; and the third, to the Advent and reign of Christ.

Historical interpreters understand these divisions to be (1) ch. i. 12—18; (2) ch. ii. iii.; (3) ch. iv.—xxi. Futurist interpreters hold that "the things which are" include the whole of this dispensation, and insist that ch. iv. and all that follows it is entirely future, does not begin to be fulfilled until the close of the present dispensation, and relates not to the Church, but to the Jews.

But if the whole sentence be read, it will be seen that the three series of visions and events are all included in The Mystery of the Seven Churches. The passage is thus rendered in the Revised Version :—

> "Write therefore the things which thou sawest, and the things which are, and the things which shall come to pass hereafter; the mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks are the seven churches."

It is evident that the translators of both the Authorised and the Revised Versions regarded the 19th verse as being in apposition with the first clause of 20, and that all John was commanded to write was included in The Mystery of the Seven Churches.*

The Epistles to the Churches relate to their own internal condition and discipline, and although they may (and we think must) be regarded not only as showing the then condition of the Seven Asiatic Churches, but the consecutive history of the Church on earth unto the coming of her Lord, yet they give no revelation of the external condition of the Church in relation to the world. And if we were to accept the hypothesis that the whole of the book, from chapter iv., is a prophecy of events which do not begin to take place until the Church has been caught up to meet the Lord in the air, then it would follow that while the Apocalypse unveiled the internal condition of the Church, it revealed nothing as to her experiences in relation to the world. We have everything to lose and nothing to gain by adopting such a view. Nevertheless, if it could be shown that this view is the truth, we must acknowledge that it is best, because it would be that which God in his love and wisdom had been pleased to give. We must, however, claim the most positive and unquestionable proof before we sign away the Church's own personal interest in the greater portion of the Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto Him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass, and on the reading of which a special blessing is assured.

But here we are met with a still further demand that we should divest ourselves of any personal interest in this book of blessing, and give up to the Jew "that which not enriches him, but leaves us poor indeed."

It is argued that the use of the term "servants" at once determines the Jewish character of the entire Revelation, for while the Jews are "servants," we of the Church are "friends" and "sons." It surely is enough to reply to this that the Revelation is given through "his servant John," who was one of those to whom Jesus said, "I call you not servants but friends," and who assures us, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God." If, therefore, this apostle of the Lamb is claimed by the risen Jesus as his servant, it must be in the exercise of that service which grows out of sonship, and is impossible to any other than the sons of God. The most menial, as well as the most responsible forms of service, can only be rendered by friends and sons. You cannot hire servants to do acts of service which filial love leads sons and daughters to perform. The angels, God's ministers that do his pleasure, could not stoop to do the work which the Son was made lower than the angels to accomplish. The King of glory would ask none other than the Son of his love to empty himself, to make himself of no reputation, to be a worm, and no man, a reproach of men, and despised of the people, to be made a curse for us: that He might give Him a name that is above every name, and raise Him far above angels and principalities and powers, and every name that is named, not only in this age, but in the age to come.

The Spirit of service in Jacob succeeds the spirit of sonship in Isaac. Martha illustrates the spirit of bondage—"Martha served." Lazarus that of privilege—he "sat at the table with Him." Mary, the nearest and dearest of all, stoops to a service impossible to Martha or even to Lazarus; she "anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair, and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment."

The Apostle Paul, who writes of the spirit of adoption, crying Abba Father, and says, "The Spirit beareth witness with our spirit that we are sons of God," introduces himself in the same Epistle as "a bondservant of Jesus Christ," of whom he says exultingly, elsewhere, "whose I am and whom I serve."

But if the servants of Jesus Christ, to whom the Revelation is given (i. 1, and xxii. 6), are the friends and sons of God, then when He says his servants shall serve Him, and they shall see his face (xxii. 3), He is speaking of the same friends, and sons, and servants still.

And let us not despise the place of service, for this same son and servant tells us in his Gospel that the governor of the feast knew not the secret of the best wine, which he said the bridegroom had kept till last, "but the servants which drew the water knew." To be drawers of water was a very lowly form of service—that to which Joshua condemned the Gibeonites—yet the daughters of the great men of the East, Rebekah and Rachel and Zipporah, drew water for their fathers' flocks. And only to such servants, who are the bondservants of Jesus Christ because they are the sons and daughters of the Lord almighty, is the Revelation given; for "the secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him, and He will show them his covenant." He made known his ways unto Moses, his servant, to whom he spake face to face as with a friend; but only his outward acts unto the children of Israel, who were fenced off from the mount of God, lest they should break through to gaze, and many of them perish (Ps. ciii. 7; Ex. xix. 12, 13, 14.) M.

* And this is equally the case if we take Trench's view, and regard "The Mystery," &c., "placed, as it were, absolutely, stating 'the spiritual riddle of which the solution follows in the latter half of the verse.'" For "the Church which is in God the Father" includes, as we believe, all the saved from first to last, independently of dispensational distinctions, which are but as the scaffolding to a building, and are of no further use when the building is completed.

A BRAND FROM THE BURNING.

ONE Thursday afternoon I found myself sitting by the bedside of a man, forty-five years of age, rapidly going in consumption. No one had been to visit him, for no one knew till the day before of his case. He had been a hard drinker, a man accustomed to the use of bad language, and was altogether an ungodly man. His heart had been unawakened apparently, and no serious thoughts had entered his mind. He had been cursing God for his illness and suffering. But within twenty minutes the tears rolled down the hollow cheeks, and the full confession of his sin and guilt came from those lips parched with the fever of the disease. Then the gracious words of Isaiah xliii. 25, "I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins," fell upon the stricken heart with all their healing, saving force.

The next day I went again, and as I stepped up to him he took my hand, saying, "Thank God that you came to me yesterday. It is all light and peace now. I am full of light. I would not exchange this bed of pain and sickness, with the joy I have, for health and strength, everything I have ever had. It is wonderful. I did not know it was possible for a man to have such joy here." I said, "How did it all come about?" "Between the spells of coughing and faintness last night," said he, "I got thinking over all you had said. I saw the whole thing so plainly, and then I kept praying to the Lord for light. All of a sudden He filled me with the knowledge of my sins forgiven, and now I belong to Him. All the past is blotted out, and I am ready to go." His aged mother came up weeping for joy, and saying, "I am perfectly content now; the Lord has answered my prayers for Ferdinand, and all my burden is gone." We knelt and praised God together for the gracious and great deliverance vouchsafed to the dying man, and I left him with the words, "Thou art my hiding place, Thou wilt preserve me from trouble, Thou wilt compass me about with songs of deliverance."

The following Sunday afternoon, the pastor of the church with whom I am labouring, three of the deacons, and four others assembled in the room adjoining the sick-room. "There is a fountain filled with blood" was sung, followed by thanksgiving for the salvation of the dying drunkard, so like that of the dying thief. The Ordinance of Baptism was administered, and then we all partook with him of the Lord's Supper. The right hand of fellowship was lovingly given to the new-born child of God, and he was thus received into the membership of the Church on earth. We sang softly to him

"In the Christian's house in glory
There remains a land of rest;"

with the sweet old chorus,

"There is rest for the weary,
There is rest for you."

As I stood by him fanning him all through the service, I could not but rejoice at this signal triumph of the Holy Spirit over the dominion of sin and Satan. The heart that had been full of blasphemy was now full of praise and worship; and the emblems of the precious Saviour's death on the cross so soon to be exchanged for the reality of his presence at the right hand of the Majesty on High. GEORGE SOLTAU.

Orange Valley, New Jersey, U.S.A.

MR. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM has returned to his home, Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass., after a tour of five months through the Southern States. He has been received in every place with courtesy and hospitality, and has decided to return in the fall for an eight months' campaign of evangelism. The South is strikingly orthodox. The novelties of New England theology have found little place in Southern churches; nevertheless, they are not free from moral stagnation. But there has been a ready and glad response to the evangelist's appeals.

DUBLIN BELIEVERS' MEETINGS.

THE Annual Conference of Believers, held in Merrion Hall, Dublin, took place last week, extending over Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, with a preliminary gathering for prayer on Monday. Some of the friends who crossed the Irish Channel on that day preached the Gospel to the other passengers on board the steamer, and had reason to believe that some good was done. The usual hearty reception and generous provision were accorded to "foreigners," and an evident spirit of expectation and blessing was cherished by one and all.

The proceedings in the hall began on Tuesday at the early meeting, when the keynote was struck by the singing of the first song,

"Oh the height of Jesu's love."

This note of loving praise continued to resound throughout. The prayers offered were after the same order. An address by Mr. George F. Trench on Paul's prayer for the Ephesian Church (chapter iii.) was felt to be a most fitting word, as serving to bring all hearts into union with each other and with Jesus, whose love "passeth knowledge." What would married life be without love? Classic history told of one who preferred to die by her own hand rather than survive her husband, life to her being nothing without him. Should not those who are married to Christ continually desire his presence, and feel that life without Him is not worth having, even though it be exalted to an earthly throne?

At the breakfast-table Mr. Henry Dyer read and expounded Psa. cxxxiii.; Mr. W. Wills showed that only at the expense of self could the full blessing of that Psalm be enjoyed; and Mr. Bland called attention to a passage in Numbers, showing that he who does the most trivial work for God, is just as much a servant as he who holds a more responsible position.

The midday gathering was remarkable for a most searching address delivered by Mr. Henry Groves, based on the narrative of the woman which was a sinner. The depravity of the human heart was such that even God seemed to find a difficulty (if he might with reverence say so) in describing the evil that is in it. This broken-hearted, contrite, and weeping woman was a picture of what we all ought to be. Even the tears that fell from her eyes upon the Saviour's sacred feet she quickly wiped away, as though fearing they might defile Him. The Holy Ghost wants to make us Marys at the feet of Jesus; let us be yielded to Him, that He may do it. We only need a revelation of the Spirit to give us such a view of ourselves as we never dreamt of. Then, however deep the guilt, God's love goes down deeper still, and the measure of our love to Him will be according to our apprehension of the depths of guilt which He pardons. The speaker vividly contrasted the Christianity of Mary with the professions of Simon. There was a light and easy way of speaking about sin in this day, and a great falling off of love. Let them keep the connecting pipe clear, so that the oil of grace might flow without hindrance into their souls.

Rev. John Wilkinson read from Amos vi. 1—6, urging on Christians more interest in the Jews. Later on a very instructive Bible-reading was conducted, the passage selected being 1 John iv. In the free utterances that were spoken, a great many brethren took part. The word love occurred more than fifty times in John's epistles, and many times is the command given to love one another. Too often love is looked upon as a mere emotion, while in reality it is intensely practical. John xv. 17, showed that all things were summed up in one command, viz., to love.

In the evening a large number of persons were present. Mr. Russell Hurditch preached a discourse from Isaiah lx. 1, 2, dwelling upon the light and glory of salvation, of Christ, and of the Holy Spirit.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe gave a word to saints, reminding them that for every act of service they render, a fresh anointing is requisite. He strongly urged the keeping of the heart with all diligence, since it is possible by sin or neglect, like Samson, to lose the spiritual strength before knowing it. Mr. Bennet, of Yeovil, added a practical exhortation based on Titus ii. 11—13.

WEDNESDAY.

At the early meeting on Wednesday, the spirit of prayer so prevailed that no opportunity was given for addresses. At the breakfast, part of Heb. ix. was read by Mr. A. West, and the three appearings of Christ dilated upon. Rahab could not feel at home in Jericho from the time she knew it was doomed, and the believer cannot feel at home in this Christ-rejecting world. Christ is as much "for us" now that He appears in heaven, as when here on earth. The happiest men living are those whose sole aim it is to please Him.

The mid-day gathering was largely attended. Mr. Henry Dyer spoke on "The unutterable value of having a present and a daily salvation." While not forgetting that he has been purged from his old sins in the past, and that he will enjoy the consummation of salvation when the Saviour comes, there is nevertheless a present and a daily and hourly salvation which all Christians need, and which all who are spiritual desire. The translation out of darkness into light is accomplished once for all at conversion, nevertheless a constant translation out of self, and self-will, and self-righteousness, and self-sufficiency, is needed every moment of our life. Hour by hour there should be more conformity to Jesus, more fruit-bearing, more holiness, and more subjection to Christ. The darker the age in which we live the more conspicuous is God's grace in saving us out of it, by raising us above its blighting influences. This is the salvation spoken of in Matt. xxiv., at a time when the love of the many would be waxing cold. She who "loved much" was saved from the cold and chilly formalism of the Pharisee's house, and those who endure shall be saved amid the abounding iniquity of the last days. Such are also a blessing to others, "saving themselves, and those who hear them." We must work out what God works in us, rising early for prayer when He wakens us, and leaving the fireside for sick visiting when He prompts us. The indwelling Trinity will enable us to do all this.

A second address followed by Mr. Wills, who, from a varied and extensive knowledge of agriculture, was able to suggest some remarkable points of analogy between the natural laws of husbandry and God's gracious dealings in the discipline of his people. The preparation of the soil for the seed, by ploughing and clod-crushing, illustrates what is a very painful but necessary process in the Christian's experience, and it is well that those who are in danger of fainting under such bruising should rather be found praying for the capability to bear it. Before God can have his full delight in us we must be bruised. "It pleased the Father to bruise Him," and the disciple must be as his Master.

Mr. Groves showed, by reference to several Scriptures, how strikingly the declension of the Church to absolute apostacy was observable. Mr. Dudgeon exhorted to a very definite grasp by faith of Jesus Christ Himself. There must be the receiving of Christ, the learning of Christ, the putting on of Christ, and the winning of Christ. These are all taught in Phil. iii., and when Christians are so living, then "as was Christ so are we in this world."

One of the most valuable of all the addresses was delivered at the evening meeting by Mr. Trench, who read 2 Cor. v. and said: Occasionally the believer gets new light on old passages of Scripture which seem almost to mark an epoch in his Christian life. It was so with me some time ago in the reading of this chapter. The two most striking utterances are "The love of Christ constraineth me," and "All things are become new." (1) There is a new standing indicated in the last verse. (2) A change of attitude, being now reconciled. (3) A change of nature, having received a divine nature with capacity for fellowship and service. (4) A new life, being risen with Christ. Our manifestation of this resurrection life may be feeble and poor, but let us firmly believe and confess, notwithstanding, that ours is a resurrection life. (5) We have also a new object, because henceforth we live unto Him who died for us and rose again. This is a prodigious change, for self is now dethroned. (6) There is a change of walk, no longer walking by sight, but by faith. (7) Then there is a change of body, which is yet to come.

Notice what the results ought to be. (1) Sanctification, holy living. Oh, to learn how to live so as never to break communion with our Lord! (2) Service. We are all to be ambassadors for Christ, holding forth the word of life. (3) Separation, which means not only ceasing to do wrong, but even refusing to do what is right in wrong company. (4) Suffering. Not merely that which all men have, but that suffering which we endure for conscience sake and for the truth's sake. (5) Surrender to Christ, as a living sacrifice. The power that will constrain us to realise and thus respond to our obligations is the love of Christ. And it were better for us never to have known these obligations than to fail in our response to them.

Rev. J. Mayers, of Bristol, gave an encouraging word to young and tempted Christians from "the power of God to guard them from stumbling" (Jude 24, R.V.). Mr. John Scroggie spoke on the joy of God's salvation, showing its value, its blessedness, its scripturalness, and the conditions of its enjoyment.

THURSDAY

At the early meeting on Thursday, young Christians were specially remembered in an address by Mr. Wills on "Individual Calling." Samuel's call was a distinct one, and was followed by prompt obedience, letting none of God's words fall to the ground. Let no one be satisfied with anything less than a conscious personal call; to have this is a great support in the Christian life. Remember that you are called to render a service that no other saint in the whole world can render.

The meeting that followed was appropriated to the hearing of brief accounts of work from evangelists and others. Mr. R. Laue told of a convert who regularly visits one of the London hospitals, giving Gospels and books to all the patients, several of whom have been brought to Christ. Opposed at first, the chaplain, matron, nurses and all, now welcome him. Mr. J. J. Scroggie reported on work in Scotland. Mr. West, Mr. Weaver, and others, spoke of conversions in connection with their Bible carriages. The prayers last year for a carriage for Ireland had been answered, and much good had been done by it in the northern part of the country. Another brother said he was converted through Mr. Moody's preaching, and had been much blessed in his work among Roman Catholics.

Many other reports of a similar character were given showing that success is following the labours of evangelists in various departments of mission work. Neither was praise forgotten, since nearly an hour was spent in returning thanksgiving to God for answers to prayers presented at last year's meetings. These included some most striking cases of direct interposition. Many also returned thanks for special blessing received in the present meetings.

In the evening Mr. Reginald Radcliffe spoke on the evangelisation of the world. While thankfully recognising all that God had done during the past year in Scotland and elsewhere, through the Cambridge Students, and through the women missionaries who are being raised up, it was shown that the need of labourers both at home and abroad was so vast as to be absolutely appalling. The churches in Germany mostly deemed it an unwelcome topic; for two centuries following the Reformation England never sent out a single missionary; and our churches at home to-day are failing to meet the crying need. The question of a foreign language need be no hindrance since the Gospel could be preached by the aid of an interpreter. The speaker dealt severely though lovingly with those Christians who are ready to admit the need of greater missionary effort, but do nothing to meet it. A deep impression must have been produced upon the assembly as Mr. Radcliffe entreated that the Lord's command might be obeyed. He declared from the platform where he stood that if he knew the names of all present he would call them out one by one, and say "You go." "I have asked my Father that great things may come out of this meeting, and I believe it will be so."

Rev. John Wilkinson followed with an address on "Work among the Jews" in connection with the Mildmay Mission.

Last, but not least in its importance, was the gathering of Friday morning—an open meeting. One or two of the prayers offered for Ireland were marked by extraordinary fervour. Two brief addresses of unusual power were given. After Mr. Lepar, Belfast, had spoken, Mr. Dyer called attention to the solemn fact that Jonah never satisfactorily fulfilled his ministry. The Prophet Jeremiah very nearly failed also, but was recalled by the Lord, who permitted him to resume the prophetic testimony. This was a solemn and instructive word, calling forth several praise testimonies for such a clear speaking from the Lord, and forming an exceedingly fitting termination to a happy Conference. I. B.

A WORD IN SEASON.—An East-end London clergyman recounts an interesting little incident of his work. Whilst visiting his flock he entered the house of a poor woman, when suddenly his mind became a perfect blank; he felt strangely tongue-tied, and could think of absolutely nothing to say. After lingering awhile in silence, only three words involuntarily came to his lips; they were these: "Do you pray?" He then rose and left the room. These simple words were God's message to that poor woman's soul. That strange visit only interrupted by that solemn question, could not be eradicated from her mind, nor the impression effaced. She kept repeating the question over and over again, till the next Sabbath, when (contrary to her usual practice) she felt drawn to enter a place of worship, where the sermon happened to be on prayer. She was convinced of sin, and led to the Saviour.

THE PRINCIPLES OF FAITH HEALING.

By Rev. A. B. SIMPSON, New York.

THERE are certain principles underlying all the teachings of the Holy Scriptures with respect to healing, which it is important to understand and classify, and which, when rightly understood, are most helpful to intelligent faith.

(1) The Causes of Disease and suffering are distinctly traced to the Fall and sinful state of man. If sickness were part of the natural constitution of things, then we might meet it wholly on natural grounds, by natural means. But if it be part of the curse of sin it must have its true remedy in the great Redemption. That sickness is the result of the fall and one of the fruits of sin, no one can surely question. Death, we are told, hath passed upon all, for that all have sinned, and the greater includes the less. It is named among the curses of Deuteronomy, which God was to send for Israel's sin. Again, it is distinctly connected with Satan's personal agency. He was the direct instrument of Job's suffering, and our Lord definitely attributed the diseases of his time to his direct power. It was Satan who bound the paralysed woman these eighteen years; and it was demoniacal influence which held and crushed the bodies and souls of those He delivered. If sickness be the result of evil spiritual agency, it is most evident that it must be met and counteracted by higher spiritual force and not by mere natural treatment.

And again, on the supposition that sickness is a divine discipline and chastening, it is still more evident that its removal must come, not through mechanical appliances, but through spiritual causes. It would be both ridiculous and vain for the arm of man to presume to wrest the chastening-rod from the Father's hand by physical force or skill. The only way to avert his stroke is to submit the spirit in penitence to his will, and seek in humility and faith his forgiveness and relief; so that, from whatever side we look at disease, it becomes more and more evident that its remedy must be found alone in God and the Gospel of his Redemption.

(2) If disease be the result of the Fall, we may expect it to be embraced in the provisions of Redemption, and would naturally look for some intimation of a remedy in the Preparatory Dispensation which preceded the Gospel. Nor are we disappointed. The great principle that God's care and providence embrace the temporal and physical needs of his people as well as the spiritual, runs all through the Old Testament. Distinct provision for Divine healing is made in all the ordinances of Moses. And the prophetic picture of the Coming Deliverer is that of a Great Physician as well as a glorious King and gracious Saviour. The healing of Abimelech, Miriam, Job, Naaman, and Hezekiah; the case of the Leper and the Brazen Serpent, the statute at Marah and the blessings and curses at Ebal and Gerizim, the terrible rebuke of Asa, the one hundred and third Psalm, and the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, leave the testimony of the Old Testament clear and distinct, that the redemption of the body was the Divine prerogative and plan.

(3) The Personal Ministry of Jesus Christ is the next great stage in the development of these principles. His own life was a complete summary of Christianity; and from his words and works we may surely gather the great intent of redemption. And what was the testimony of his life to physical healing? He went about their cities healing all manner of sickness and disease among the people. He healed all that had need of healing, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the Prophet, "Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses." Now, when we remember that this was not an occasional incident, but a chief part of his ministry; that He began his work with it, that He continued it to the close of his life; that He did it on all possible occasions and in every variety of cases; that He did it heartily, willingly, and without leaving any doubt or question of his will; that He distinctly said to the doubting leper, "I will," and was only grieved when men hesitated to fully trust Him; and when we realise that in all this He was but unfolding the real purpose of his great redemption, and revealing his own unchanging character and love, and that He has distinctly assured us that He is still "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," surely we have a great principle to rest our faith upon, as secure as the Rock of Ages.

(4) But redemption finds its centre in The Cross of Jesus Christ, and there we must look for the fundamental principle of Divine healing. It rests on the atoning sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ. This necessarily follows from the first principle we have stated. If sickness be the result of the Fall, it must be included in the atonement of Christ which reaches > "Far as the curse is found."

But again, it is most distinctly stated in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, as we have seen. He is said to have borne our sickness and carried our pains, the word "bear" being the very same used for the atonement for sin; the same used elsewhere to describe the act of the scapegoat in bearing away the people's guilt; and the same used in the same chapter with respect to his "bearing the sins of many." In the same sense then, as He has borne away our sins, has He also borne our sicknesses. And Peter also states that "He bare our sins in his own body to the tree, by whose stripes we are healed." In his own body He has borne all our bodily liabilities for sin, and our bodies are set free. That one cruel "stripe" of his—for the word is singular—summed up in it all the aches and pains of a suffering world, and there is no longer need that we should suffer what He has sufficiently borne. Thus our healing becomes a great redemption right, which we simply claim as our purchased inheritance through the blood of his Cross.

(5) But there is something higher even than the Cross. It is the Resurrection of our Lord. There the Gospel of Healing finds the fountain of its deepest life. The death of Christ destroys the root of sickness, sin. But it is the life of Jesus which supplies the source of health and life for our redeemed bodies. The body of Christ is the living fountain of all our vital strength. He who came forth from Joseph's tomb, with the new physical life of the Resurrection, is the Head of his people for life and immortality. Not for Himself alone did He receive the power of an endless life, but as our Life God gave Him to be Head over all things for his Church, which is his body. We are members of his body, his flesh, and his bones. The healing which Christ gives us is nothing less than his own new physical life infused into our body from his own very heart, and bringing us into fellowship with his own inmost being. That Risen and Ascended One is the fountain and the measure of our strength and life. We eat his flesh and drink his blood, and He dwelleth in us and we in Him. As He lived by the Father, so he that eateth Him shall live by Him. This is the great, the vital, the most precious principle of physical healing in the name of Jesus. It is the very life of Jesus manifested in our mortal flesh.

(6) It follows from this, that it must be wholly a new life. The Death and Resurrection of Jesus Christ have made an awful gulf between the present and the past of every redeemed life. Henceforth, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creation. Old things have passed away, all things have become new. The death of Jesus has slain all our old self. The life of Jesus is the spring of all our new life. This is true of our physical life. It is not the restoration of the old natural strength to life. It is not the building up of our former constitution. It is the letting go of all the old dependencies. It is often the failure and decay of all our natural strength. It is a strength which "out of weakness is made strong," which has no resources to start with; which, creation-like, is made out of nothing; which, resurrection-like, comes out of the dark tomb, and the extinction of all previous help and hope. This principle is of immense importance in the practical experience of healing. So long as we look for it in the old natural life, we shall be disappointed. But when we cease to put confidence in the flesh, and look only to Christ and his supernatural life in us for our strength of body as well as spirit, we shall find that we can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth us.

(7) It follows from this that the physical redemption which Christ brings is not merely healing, but also life. It is not the re-adjustment of our life on the old basis, leaving it thenceforward to go like a machine upon the natural plane, but it is the infusion of a new kind of life and strength. Therefore it is as fully within the reach of persons in health as those who are diseased. It is simply a higher kind of life, the turning of life's water into his heavenly wine. Therefore, it must also be kept by constant abiding in Him and receiving from Him. It is not a permanent deposit, but a daily dependence, a renewing of the inward man day by day, a strength which comes only as we need it, and continues only while we dwell in Him. Such a life is a very sacred thing. It gives a peculiar sanctity to every look, tone, act, organ, and movement of the body. We are living on the life of God, and we must live like Him and for Him. A body thus divinely quickened adds tenfold power to the soul, and all the service of the Christian life. Words spoken in this divine energy, works done through the very life of God, will be clothed with a positive effectiveness which must make men feel that the body as well as the spirit is indeed the very Temple of the Holy Ghost.

(8) The great agent in bringing this new life into our life is the Holy Ghost. The redemptive work of Jesus cannot be completed without his blessed ministry. Not as a visible physical presence does this Jesus of Nazareth now meet the sick, and halt, and blind, but through a spiritual manifestation. It has all the old physical power, and produces all the ancient results upon the suffering frame, but the approach is spiritual, not physical. The presence must be brought to our consciousness; the contact of our need with his life must come through the Holy Spirit. So Mary had to learn in the very first moment of the resurrection. "Touch me not—I ascend." Thus, henceforth, must she know Him as the Ascended One. So Paul had ceased to know Christ Jesus after the flesh. So Jesus had to guard the disciples at Capernaum, where, speaking of the Living Bread—this very matter of healing—"What and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where He was before; it is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing." This is the reason why many find it hard to meet the Healer. They do not know the Holy Ghost. They do not know God spiritually. The sun in the heavens would be but a cold and glaring ball of ice were it not for the atmosphere which brings his warmth and light to us, and diffuses them through our world. And Christ's life and love cannot reach us without the intermediate Spirit, the Light, the Atmosphere, the Divine Medium, who brings and sheds abroad his life and light, his love and Presence in our being, taking of the things of Jesus and showing them to us, extracting the very essence of his life and frame, and sweetly diffusing it through every vessel, nerve, organ, and function of our being. Yes, He is the great Quickener. It was through the Holy Ghost that Jesus cast out devils on earth,—and now, if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal body through his Spirit that dwelleth in us.

(9) This new life must come like all the blessings of Christ's redemption as the free grace of God without works and without distinction of merit or respect of persons.

Everything that comes through Christ must come as grace. There can be no works mingled with justifying faith, except those which come after justification and as its fruits. Any others are dead works, and fatal to our salvation. Even so, our healing must be wholly of God or not of grace at all. If Christ heals, He must do it alone. This principle ought to settle for ever the question of using means in connection with faith for healing. The natural and the spiritual, the earthly and the heavenly, the works of man and the grace of God, cannot be mixed any more than you could expect to harness a tortoise with a locomotive, or make a great sea cable, part of iron and part of hemp. They cannot work together. The gifts of the Gospel are sovereign gifts. God can do the most difficult things for us Himself, but He cannot help our self-sufficiency to do the easiest. A hopeless case is therefore much more hopeful than one where we think we can do something ourselves. We must > "Venture on Him, venture wholly,

> Let no other trust intrude."

If healing is to be sought by natural means, let us get all the best results of skill and experience. But if it is to be through the name of Jesus, it must be by grace alone.

It follows also, in the same connection, that if it be a part of the Gospel and a gift of Christ, it must be an impartial one, limited only by the great "whosoever" of the Gospel. It is not a special gift of discriminating favouritism, but a great and common heritage of faith and obedience. It is, "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." It is true all who come must conform to the simple conditions of obedient faith, but these are impartial, without respect of persons, and within the reach of all.

(10) The simple condition of this great blessing, like the condition of all the blessings of the Gospel—IS FAITH WITHOUT SIGHT. Grace without works and faith without sight must always go together as twin principles of the Glorious Gospel. The one thing God asks from all who are to receive his grace is that they shall trust his simple word where they have nothing else but his word to trust. But this must be real trust. It must believe and doubt not. If God's word be true at all, it is absolutely and utterly true. A very small grain of mustard seed will do, and it will split open with its living roots the great rocks and mountains, but it must be an entire grain. The grain must be in its integrity. One little laceration will kill its life. And one doubt will destroy the efficiency of faith. And, therefore, it must begin in the soul, taking God simply and nakedly at his word. A faith that is going to wait for signs and evidences will never be strong. Plants that begin by leaning will always be fragile, and need a trellis. Indeed, the faith which rests upon seeing is not faith. Blessed are they who have not seen, and yet have believed. Abraham had to believe God, and take the new name of faith and fatherhood before there was any indication of its probability, and when, indeed, every natural sign contradicted and stultified it. It is beautiful to notice the form of expression in Genesis xvii. First he is told "I will make thee a father of many nations." Then comes the change of Abraham's name, which was the profession of his faith, and the acknowledgment before a scorning world that he believed God. Then follows God's next word. But how wonderful! The tense is completely changed. It is no longer a promise, but an accomplished fact "I HAVE MADE THEE a father of many nations." It is done. Faith has turned the future into the past, and now God calleth the things that are not as though they were. So we must believe and receive the healing life of Jesus and all the blessings of the Gospel.

(11) Is there any principle involving THE OBLIGATION of faith in reference to physical healing? Is it an optional matter with us how we shall be healed, and whether we shall trust God or look to man? Is it "an ordinance and a statute" for us, and a matter of simple obedience? Is it his great prerogative to deal with the bodies He has redeemed, and an impertinence for man and unsanctified man to tamper with them, and an equal impertinence for us to choose some other way than his? Is the Gospel of salvation a commandment as well as a promise, and is the Gospel of healing of equal authority? Has He chosen to legislate about the way in which the plague which has entered his world shall be dealt with, and have we any business to interfere with his great Health Laws? Has he at enormous cost provided a remedy for his children as part of his redemption, and is He jealous for the honour and rights of his dear Son's name in this matter? Does He claim to be the owner of his children's bodies, and does He claim the right to care for them? Has He left us one great prescription for disease, and is any other course, unauthorised, disobedient, and at our own risk? Surely these questions answer themselves, and leave but one course open to every simple and obedient child of God.

(12) The Order of God's dealing with our souls and bodies is regulated by certain fixed principles.

(a) He works from within outwards, beginning with our spiritual nature and then diffusing his life and power through our physical being. Many persons come to God for healing whose spiritual life is wholly defective and wrong. God does not refuse the healing, but He begins in the depths of the soul, and when it is prepared to receive his life He can begin to heal the body.

(b) There is a constant parallel between the state of the soul and body. John prays that Gaius "may be in health and prosper even as his soul prospereth." A little cloud of sin upon the heart will leave a shadow upon the brain and nerves and a pressure upon the whole frame. A malicious breath of spiritual evil will poison the blood and depress the whole system. And a clear, calm, and confident spirit will bring vigour into all the physical life, and open the way for all the full strong pulses of the Lord's own life in us.

(c) Hence, also, healing will often be gradual in its development, as the spiritual life grows, and faith takes a firmer hold of Christ. The principle of the Divine life, like the natural, is "first the blade; then the ear; after that the full corn in the ear." There must even be much preliminary work. The seed must be planted and die. The stalk must rise and grow strong enough to bear its heavy fruit. Many persons want the head of wheat while the blade is yet tender. Now it would only overwhelm us by its weight. We must have deep and quiet strength to sustain the higher blessing. Sometimes this preparation is all completed beforehand. Then God can work very rapidly. But in each case He knows the order and process best adapted to the development of the whole man, which is ever his great end in all his working in us.

(13) The Limitations of Healing are also fixed by certain principles.

(a) It is not the immortal life. Why should people ever die if Christ will always heal? Because faith can only go as far as God's promise, and God has nowhere promised that we shall never die during the present Dispensation. The promise is fulness of life and health and strength up to the measure of our natural life, and until our life-work is done. True it is the life of the resurrection which we have; but it is not the whole of it, but only the firstfruits. In speaking of our immortal life in 2 Cor. v. the Apostle says, "Now He that hath wrought us for this self same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit." That is, as our earnest was a handful of the very soil of the purchased farm, but only a handful, so God has given us now, by his Spirit, all our new physical life, a handful of the very life of the resurrection. But it is only a handful, and the fulness will not come until his Coming. But that handful is worth all the soil of earth and the natural life a hundredfold.

(b) The next limitation has reference to the measure and degree in which we can expect this life in our present state. Shall we have strength for all sorts of supernatural exploits and extraordinary exertions? We have the promise of sufficient strength for all the will of God and all the service of Christ. But we shall have no strength for mere display, and certainly none to waste in recklessness, or spend in selfishness and sin. Within the limits of our God-appointed work—and these limits may be very wide, much wider than any mere natural strength—we can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth us, and very fearlessly undertake all labours, self-denials, and difficulties in the face of exposure, weakness, unbeauty, conditions of climate, and the most engrossing demands upon strength and time, where Christ clearly leads and calls us, and we shall have his protecting power, and find that "God is able to make all grace abound, so that we, always having all-sufficiency in all things, may abound unto every good work." But let us touch the forbidden earth yet out of that sacred circle of his will, or spend our strength on self or sin, and our life will wither like Jonah's gourd and Samson's arm. Yes, it must be true in all our life, all true, not one part wanting: "OF Him and THROUGH Him, and TO HIM are all things, to whom be glory for ever. Amen."

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON HOLINESS AND HEALING.

THIS Conference, the first of its kind, was held last week from Monday to Friday, chiefly in the Agricultural Hall, Islington. The large attendances from day to day were an indication of the widespread and growing interest that is being felt in the subjects under consideration. The following notes of a portion of the proceedings of Tuesday evening may be taken as fairly typical of the whole.

After a number of fervid prayers from persons in all parts of the Hall, Rev. W. E. BOARDMAN, who presided, said that the numerous specific requests that had been sent in would be collated and presented at smaller and more private gatherings. He purposed to answer some questions that had been sent, and the first he read out was with respect to the remarkable absence of allusions to the healing of sickness in Paul's Epistles. As far as we could gather, Mr. Boardman did not offer any answer to this, but passed to a second question: Is it right for anyone holding the truth of the Lord's healing to bring up his son as a doctor? Pointing to either side of him on the platform front row, the Chairman said they had with them two Christian brethren holding this doctrine and who were medical men, Dr. Woods Smyth, of Maidstone, and Dr. McKilliam, of Blackheath; the latter, he added, was in extensive practice. But I do believe, said Mr. Boardman, he loves the Lord's healing a great deal better than medical healing. As to bringing up a son to the medical profession, of course it would be to the Lord, and not to the world. The great difficulty with most fathers is, that they bring up their sons to succeed in the world. The thing is to have them succeed in glorifying God; if that is ever kept in view let them all be doctors if they please. Another question is about entire sanctification, or the eradication of sin. I am not going to discuss that here. In such a conference as this we should drop terms that are not understood. Let us have essential realities. Let us not be inquiring critically as to this or that shibboleth. I am quite sure that in the main there is no essential difference between us, except in the shibboleth and in the understanding of the shibboleth. I do believe in God as an entire Sanctifier, and in Jesus as an entire Sanctification. He is able to fill his temples and shut the devil out. That is the great central truth, and that is quite enough.

Mr. J. W. WOOD, of Australia, who was the next speaker, said that probably many of them had heard of the glorious work done by the Lord in Australia some twelve months ago; that work is going on still. Persons all over the Colony have been saved, sanctified, and healed, by the power of the risen Christ. I do bless God, said the speaker, that I have a threefold Gospel, not a one-sided Gospel for the soul only, leaving entirely out of account the other parts of man's being. God showed me that a man had a spirit as well as a soul, and it requires cleansing before he can have the healing of the body. All these three—justification, sanctification, and healing—are to be obtained by a separate act of faith for each one. The Lord came to redeem us out of the power of the devil, as threefold man. I have proved that there is power in the blood to cleanse and keep clean.

Mr. Wood proceeded to tell how he entered into this glorious liberty of the children of God. He had been a child of God for thirty years, but until two years ago he was in the wilderness; then he crossed the Jordan, and got into the promised land, where he was still. Bless the Lord, the Amalekite was slain! He was sure God had sent him over to this side of the world once again to see many hundreds of souls in England and other places brought into the like glorious liberty.

Having quoted Psalm xxvii. 4, and Rom. xii. 1, 2, Mr. Wood said it was through an exposition of these passages by Mrs. Hampson that he was led to see the way to obtain the blessing. He had preached against it for many years; he thought it was impossible for a man to live without sin—to have a clean heart. But he came to have one sole desire—that Christ should be king in his heart, a thing He had not been for many a year. After thirty years of struggling he came to see that as Christ was given by God to man, so man had to give something which would be acceptable to God; he was to present his body a living sacrifice. He described in detail how after some two weeks' intense continuous mental conflict, day and night almost, the light of God broke into his soul, and it was perfect heaven; whether at business or waiting before the Lord, he was filled with the Holy Ghost. At the close of the fourteen days he was led to see the power of the Lord to heal the body, and since then he had never doubted it, though he had suffered not a little persecution through it. A voice told him that the healing power had been given to him, and he pledged himself to use it for the glory of God. He knew nothing then about "faith healing." He searched the Word, however, and there he found confirmation of the truth that gifts of healing are given to the children of God for the perfecting of the body of Christ, until the time when it should meet the Lord in the air. He had been a perfect invalid for over twenty years. Nearly all the doctors in Victoria had pronounced him in consumption, suffering from heart and lungs and liver, but the Lord had perfectly healed him without any human intervention. The Lord subsequently allowed one of his children to become sick; there was a large lump under her chin, and she was in high fever. He had found it difficult to exercise his healing gift elsewhere because of the prejudice that existed, and he believed the Lord had brought on this sickness that he might have the opportunity of exercising it without hindrance. He went to the child and prayed: "Lord Jesus, Thou art the Great Physician; heal the child." Away went the fever. He put his hand under the child's chin, and away went the lump! A few days afterwards she was taken with a low fever. When he came home he placed his hands on her and prayed the Lord to heal her; up she got, perfectly restored. Mr. Wood also told in detail of the healing of a friend in the hospital whose family had been summoned to see him die. He was raised up by the prayer of faith, and the doctors called it a resurrection case. Later on a medical certificate was granted to him to pass an insurance company. Here Mr. Wood said, in response to a remark, that he did not believe a child of God should insure anywhere but in heaven. He proceeded to tell how, having received invitations to visit many parts of South Australia, something like 3000 persons came under the ministry of healing. Night and day people came, calling upon God for salvation, and all kinds of diseases were healed by his mighty power resting upon them.

Rev. A. B. Simpson, of New York, said he represented thousands of hearts on the other side of the Atlantic which were throbbing with sympathy. He referred to the work of Dr. Cullis, Boston, whose influence had extended far beyond the United States in many directions. The names of Mr. Sanford (who was present at the Conference) and of Carrie Judd, of Buffalo, and Mrs. Dix, were held in affectionate esteem for their works' sake. A quiet farmer, Ephraim Allen, was also doing a wonderful work for God. Miss Gordon, Nashville, had been marvellously used of God during this winter. He scarcely knew a church throughout the land where there is not a little band who are united in the maintenance of this truth. It was becoming a bond of union stronger than any they had known before. With respect to New York, it had been his delight that the work was so impersonal. He felt bound to say that he had been a little oppressed when hearing the blessed personal testimonies given at this Conference, lest there should be too much of the personal element, to the exclusion of God's truth.

Coming to his personal experience, Mr. Simpson said that ten years ago he got out of the waters of despondency by simply believing on Jesus as his Saviour. He got out of another difficulty by simply, through faith, taking Christ to be his Sanctifier. About four years ago he was broken down physically. After a time the Lord Jesus showed him that it was his blessed will to be a complete Saviour for body, soul, and spirit. When he returned home from Europe two years ago he made three solemn pledges, first, that he believed this Divine healing was the truth of God's Word and he would stand upon it; second, that he would take it for himself and believe not only that he was healed, but that he had the full strength of the risen Lord needed for the rest of his work on earth; and third, that he could not refuse to use this truth for the help of others. Very soon he was separated from his former ecclesiastical surroundings, and entered on an entirely new path. (The Chairman interjected the remark that Mr. Simpson resigned his pastorate, gave up his salary, and began a universal work for the Lord.) From that time, continued Mr. Simpson, I have been permitted to work about four times as hard as before. I have had the entire charge of a large magazine, of which I have done half the writing, all the editorial work, and all the oversight. I have been pastor of a church, where there are services every night of the week and three times on Sunday. I have had charge of a Home in New York, opened for receiving those who came for healing, and have spent hours and hours every day in personal conversation—some 3000 called last year. During these four years I can truly say that with the exception of two nights I have never been tired; and these two nights I felt the Lord wanted to get me alone with Him and rest on his bosom. I have not had to be one hour from my work, and have not even taken a summer vacation, choosing rather to work through the summer in New York, and finding it the best harvest time of all. I have done this because I could not help it; it was a delight. I stand here to say that the Lord Jesus can be body and nerve, and vital energy, and brain, and mind, and thought, to those who will simply trust and not be afraid to venture out in his service. He is true; He is faithful; and He is all-sufficient.

In the course of his further remarks, Mr. Simpson said the last twenty-five years had witnessed the revival of some wonderful truths. The first was the doctrine of a personal Holy Ghost power for service, and in the revelation of truth. The next was a revival of faith in God; He has been showing us it is no strange thing that we should take Him at his word—that He will take nothing less than entire faith. Third, there has been a revival of the work of evangelising the world; fourth, of the truth of the nearness of the Lord's coming; and fifth, of this mighty Gospel of bodily healing as an inseparable link in the evangelisation of the world. God wants thousands of men and women to go to Africa, China, and India, to live out and show to these peoples this truth. "It seems to me that I have seen the heavens opened, and one riding forth on a white horse, and the armies of heaven following Him on horses, white and clean, clothed in spotless robes; and we have been permitted to join these ranks. On his vesture and on his thigh I see written, King of Kings and Lord of Lords, and on his head are many crowns. He says to you and me, 'Lo! I am with you; go and teach all nations; be witnesses to me.'"

The last to speak was Dr. McKilliam, of Blackheath, who said there was great need to have clear, Scriptural ideas on this question. If God is to give us all the blessing about which we have heard, what are we to do with it? Surely it is not that we may settle ourselves down comfortably to the accumulation of wealth, the enjoyment of ease and comfort, or the leading of worldly lives. It is that we may become the evangelisers of the nations. God loves the world, and his love would sweep over all the nations. If we are to touch the hem of his garment and be healed, it must be in the spirit of full surrender, that honestly asks, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Dr. McKilliam went on to emphasize the truth that God has given to us Christ not only as the Sanctifier and the bestower of wisdom, but as our Wisdom and our Sanctification. Our own experiences are not to be put in his place; they are as worthless in themselves in the end as they are in the beginning.

On Wednesday and Friday afternoons anointing services were held, at which a large number of persons were "anointed." On the former occasion, when we were present, the afflicted ones were seated on chairs in the body of the hall, set sufficiently far apart to afford passage between them. The women were requested to remove their bonnets. Then five brethren and three sisters left the platform and took their stand opposite eight of the sufferers, and each laid both hands on the head of one, Mr. Boardman, who took the lead, having first put a little oil on their heads. Then Mr. Boardman prayed. Then another eight were anointed, and the second in rotation prayed, and so on until the whole had been anointed and prayed for eight at a time.

In the evening about fifty out of the 250 who had been anointed and prayed for in the afternoon rose to their feet to testify that they had been healed. One of them was a woman, who had come from Birmingham on purpose to be cured of hip disease. She now lifted up her crutch to the platform and walked away. Scenes of a similar kind are of frequent occurrence at Bethshan.

CLOSING MEETING.

There was a good muster for the last meeting on Friday evening though the Hall was not overcrowded. Rev. W. E. Boardman, said it would be a fitting termination to the proceedings of the week, if there was on this occasion a kind of national or international expression of thanksgiving to God, by brief reports of the progress of the work in different countries.

Mrs. Baxter, as representing England, said God had been working in England for many years past in holiness and healing. Ten, twenty, thirty, and even fifty years ago there were cases on record of those who had been trusting God for bodily healing as well as salvation. Besides Bethshan there are now two Faith-healing Homes in Liverpool, one in Grimsby, and one in Manchester. There are some 120 other places where work of this kind is going on. Much is also done by correspondence.

Mr. Dalrymple, Glasgow, on behalf of Scotland, said that many within his personal knowledge had been healed of all sorts of sufferings. Miss Murray, of Bethshan, as a Scotchwoman, conversant with the movement, said that letters had come from peasants in Orkney, Ross-shire, and the Western Highlands.

Miss O'Hara, from Ireland, said she knew of no public meetings on this subject in that country, but there were not a few little private gatherings, and the movement is reaching the peasantry in distant places.

A young lady from Sweden said the work was spreading through that country. Lord Radstock and Mr. Boardman had been greatly used in creating a wide interest in the movement. A lady from the Isle of Man said for the past two and a half years she had herself been used of God in spreading this work throughout the island.

Pastor Schrenck, as representing Germany, said, Pastor Blumhardt's son was following in his father's footsteps, and was receiving as much blessing. Another clergyman in the Duchy of Baden, now deceased, had been greatly blessed in faith-healing work, though he was not himself quite well. Others are being used in different places for salvation, and, by the laying on of hands, for healing. Pastor Schrenck also represented Switzerland, and went on to speak of the work of Dorothea Trüdel, who, he said, was a little crooked woman up to her death. Thousands were blessed in body, soul, and spirit through her. She had no "phrases;" she had life. She did not talk much about cleanness, but she lived "perfect love." The Pastor had himself been healed through her prayers. The work at Mannedorff is still going on under the care of M. Zeller. It has been in the past an international institution, but now that the movement is spreading, that will be less the case. He hoped the time would soon come when travelling to distant places for this object would cease, and people would be healed in their own homes.

East France and Holland were each represented at the Conference by a single worker. Mrs. Baxter said that Messrs. Armstrong and Fenn had begun the work in Spain on a small scale.

Captain Gordon, speaking on behalf of Italy, told of some cases of the healing of bodily sickness there through the prayer of faith.

Dr. Simpson, of New York, said there would be a Conference on this subject in New York in October, and he hoped many would go over from this country. Having referred to the work of Dr. Cullis, he said there were at least a dozen other institutions within his personal knowledge that were worthy of all confidence. Referring to his own work in New York, he said God had dealt with him marvellously in the matter of monetary support. During the four years he had been in this work God had sent for its sustenance over £20,000; more than he had received during the previous fifteen years. One friend had given £6000 for providing the Home at Berachah, New York, as an expression of personal gratitude for his own healing.

Miss Sisson, speaking on behalf of India, referred to work carried on by Mr. Hard, by Miss Anstey (Colar), by Miss Reade (Punrooty), and to the faith-healing which she had herself seen at Bassim, Berar. She specially mentioned the case of Miss Wheeler, who was healed in one day of a long-standing abscess, pronounced to be incurable, just when she was ordered home as a last resource. It is greatly desired by some Christians to have a Home for Divine Healing in Bombay, and prayer was sent from India to the Conference that the Lord would favourably regard this request, and send the right one to conduct it.

After hearty greetings had been formally expressed by the meeting to workers in all the countries represented at the Conference, the proceedings were concluded with the announcement that similar Conferences would be held at Worthing, Blackheath, Brighton, and other places.

THE MAIDEN AND HER ORGAN.

WHILE in the mountains for the summer, not many years ago, I was in the habit of strolling off from the boarding-house and passing much of the day in the woods. There is more enjoyment, and profit too, in the solitude of a great forest, than the world of trade will readily believe. I wandered along the rough roads made barely passable for teams dragging wood, and for the lumbermen to get into and out of the forest. The settlers were few and far between, but there were some, and their rude houses could be seen in the midst of little clearings, from the valleys below. One of these attracted my attention, and—but I will tell you the story, for this is the home of the mountain maiden whose music you are to hear or hear of.

Her parents were of the same class and type with the other dwellers in the mountains, hard-working people, of little learning and less religion. In the summer season there was a district school kept going for a few months, and the children of the hills attended when they could spare the time. At this school our maiden, whose fit name was Ruth, acquired some education. Thoughtful above her years, inclined in childhood to be alone while other children were at play, she would often take her book or sewing and sit for hours at the foot of a tree, unmindful of the world about her, even then, though she knew it not, communing with her own heart. The nearest church was five miles away. None of the mountain people ever thought of going, and it was very true that no one in the valley cared for the souls among the hills. Ruth and one or two of the neighbours' children, having heard at school of the music in the church, and what a fine treat it was to hear it, went off to it one summer Sunday morning. It was a long walk, but they were young and strong, and they enjoyed it.

A new life dawned on Ruth that summer Sunday morning. She had never heard an organ nor a choir of singers. The music woke unknown chords of gladness in her soul. She bowed her head, and the tears rolled down her cheeks. The prayers and the preaching wrought a wonderful influence on the heart and mind of the girl. She knew before that she had a soul, but the thoughts of its capacities for being and doing, the great ends of living, had never been revealed to this daughter of the forest. She went home with a new life to begin.

And, first of all, she wanted to make music. She learned that organs much smaller than the one that thrilled her soul in church could be bought, and she determined to be the owner of one. The purpose was laughed at by her parents and such of her companions as heard of it, but she was not to be laughed out of it. She went to church whenever the weather would permit, and the truth she heard from the pulpit made the way clear for her to go to Him who cleanses the heart and purifies the soul. Now it was all music within, and sunshine and peace.

Her parents giving their consent, Ruth left home, and, in a city some seventy miles away, she obtained a situation as a waiting-maid, at very moderate wages, carefully saving all that she could, after sending monthly to her parents what would pay for the loss of her service. The family into which she was thrown appreciated the character and purpose of the strange child that had come to them, for she soon disclosed the fact that she was there to earn money to buy an organ; that she was to take it to her home in the mountains, and there she would use it to please and bless those whom she could reach. The children in the family were learning music, and not only did she gratefully pick up the crumbs that fell from their lessons, but they loved to impart what they could to the good girl who waited on them so faithfully. And she was faithful. Never did she neglect her duties for the sake of the music which was the joy of her heart. But it came to her as if born in her. The love of it was more than lessons. And there was not a child in the house who made more rapid progress than Ruth. The children taught her all they learned, and her genius and enthusiasm carried her far beyond them.

Ruth served three years for that instrument! Each summer she was allowed to spend a few days at home, from which her heart was not weaned by the livelier life of the city. The trees and the birds and the mountain rivulets were more dear to her when she returned for a while. She brightened the cot among the hills, gladdened her parents by her lovingkindness, and then would go back cheerfully to her accepted service. At the end of three years she had the money in hand to buy the instrument and books of music, and of psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs. These were all transported by rail to the village where was the church in which her pious purpose was born. Then the team that brought wood from the hills drew the organ up to the home of Ruth, where she came with it in triumph and gratitude. And when the instrument was unpacked and set up in that humble home, the noble girl dedicated it to God, and with the first notes that she drew from it she celebrated his praise.

The fame of the new sensation spread and echoed among the mountains. The simple-hearted people came to wonder and to hear. Ruth could sing as well as play, and the sweet hymns which have thrilled millions of souls and helped them to heaven, were now heard for the first time in those wild regions. Every Sunday afternoon the house was filled. Ruth was the leader, the teacher, and the preacher. She encouraged them to join their voices with hers, and gradually to learn to sing. She read the hymns aloud, repeated them, sang them a line at a time when she would have them dwell on the mercy and love of God in Jesus Christ, his Son. She was, she is, a missionary, a home missionary, for she is singing and playing now to those mountaineers, and gently leading them by a way they know not, to the Lamb who taketh away the sin of the world.

This is my story. If this poor child could do all this that she might be a comfort and blessing to others, will you, with a thousand better opportunities, live for God and those around you? Among those who will "join the everlasting song" I expect to see Ruth, the maid of the mountains, and those whom she has taught to sing and pray. "As well the singers as the players on instruments shall be there."—New York Observer.

SATANIC CENTRES.

SOME time ago we published a letter from our brother Henry Varley, commenting somewhat severely upon the spiritual condition of St. Louis, U.S.A. Exception was taken to his remarks by some of the ministers in that city, more particularly to his description of its church life. But everything depends on the point of view from which we look. We are sure there are good and faithful men in all the cities of the Union, as there are at home, and yet we do not dare to hope that the following statement is beyond the truth. It is from The Vanguard, a radically evangelistic paper published in St. Louis:—

The evangelisation of the masses in our large cities is a problem of deep and perplexing interest. Our cities have increased in population at an amazing ratio. The census report of 1880 shows the entire population of our States and Territories to have been fifty millions, and nearly eleven and one-third millions were then living in cities of over eight thousand inhabitants.

The unprecedented foreign immigration of the past five years has brought to our shores nearly a million a year in addition, a large per cent. of whom have sought these commercial and mechanical centres. In some of these, the children of foreign immigrants constitute a large proportion of the population; for instance, in St. Louis, with a population of 386,000, less than 50,000 voted in the last presidential election, which must be accounted for mainly on the ground of unnaturalised citizenship.

These multitudes are mostly Christless and churchless; some 100,000 of this vast number, including Catholic and Protestant alike, attend no church whatever, but obtain their moral bias and perverted sentiments in amusements more or less questionable. Mr. Varley, when in St. Louis, said the "popular preachers and churches have moved up town to catch the rich, and had let the poor go to the devil." Mr. Moody called the line dividing the church from the non-church-going population "the Ridge," the latter being by far the larger portion. Much has been said of New York and other cities as being destitute of reformatory institutions, but we doubt if even San Francisco or New Orleans can show a record of greater neglect than has been shown to the vicious, the drunken, and fallen here in St. Louis, which classes have been virtually left to their sins, their degradation, and their shame!

Another phase of evil, including the elements of insurrection and revolution, encouraged by propagators of socialistic, communistic, and Fenianistic opinions and organisers of secret unions, who are scattering their upas blossoms of blight and ruin even in our midst, is to be met by the only antidote for all sin, the religion of Jesus brought to bear upon the hearts and consciences of these multitudes, destitute and dying.

When brought to face these facts, every Christian and philanthropic heart must be stirred, and the question as to how these masses can be reached becomes one of deeply thrilling interest. How shall this restless, anxious, seeking multitude be brought into tranquillity and peace; these wretched and wantonly wicked be restored and saved? How shall asylums, homes, and places for promulgating a complete salvation be provided? and who will consecrate his time, influence, and wealth for the accomplishment of this object? For this we pray and look and wait, believing that God will send means and helpers into this already whitened harvest field.

PORTSMOUTH SEAMEN'S MISSION.—The Annie, after a refit, sailed on Tuesday, May 19, and has put into several ports in the West of England, where Gospel meetings have been held. The vessel has proceeded to Brest, in France, for two months' work in connection with Mr. McAll's Mission in that port. The Mystery is undergoing repairs, and will sail shortly for Cherbourg, Havre, Boulogne, Calais, &c. Bibles, Testaments, and Gospel books are needed for this work. Henry Cook.

Notes and Comments.

Many of our readers will regret to learn that Mr. E. W. Thomas and his committee, who have worked for so many years to rescue friendless and fallen young women and girls, are now much tried for means to carry on the work of the mission. Surely the fact only requires to be known for many of the Lord's stewards to lend their willing and ready help, so that this blessed work of mercy may be vigorously carried on.

Why is the chairman the only man, as a rule, who is formally thanked at a public meeting? Speaking generally, and in accordance with the merits of the case, he deserves thanks less perhaps than any other speaker on the platform. We should think that this curious and meaningless custom must be very distasteful to all sensible presidents at our May meetings, and it is high time that our committees and secretaries had the courage to abolish it.

At a time when, through the bounties of God's providence, bread is cheap and vegetables plentiful, it is gratifying to find a medical authority like The Lancet endorsing a statement made by Mr. S. Morley, M.P., as to the advantage of a vegetable diet for the young. A child's body, we are told, consists principally of fluid and fatty components, and, in a comparatively moderate degree, of active muscular tissues, so that it requires bread and vegetables far more than meat. It may also be observed that in last month's Nineteenth Century, Sir H. Thompson warns against a too free use of animal food even for adults.

In Dr. George Macdonald's Preface to "Letters from Hell" (Bentley), he speaks of the "righteous use of the element of horror." This language is remarkable as coming from one who is understood to be a leading apostle of Universalism. It may be hoped that it indicates a reaction against a modern style of preaching from which the element of fear is purposely excluded. It is strange how sensible men can give heed to this modern fashion. That preachers, who must have some perception of the tremendous consequences of sin, should designedly exclude all warning must surely be a fatal weakening of their power.

It is said, according to this new theology, that preachers must "allure rather than alarm men if they wish to do spiritual good." They should do both. Undoubtedly the greatest and most successful preachers through all the ages have both alarmed and allured. Paul told the Ephesian elders (Acts xx. 20, R.V.): "I shrank not from declaring unto you any thing that was profitable." The reference could not have been to that which men were pleased to hear, but to what had in it a note of alarm.

The Directors of the London Missionary Society have very just cause to complain of the unfair action of The Times. Some weeks ago a writer charged the agents of this Society with seeking to build up an Established Church in Madagascar. The Foreign Secretary of this Society, in a courteous reply, refuted the allegation, and answered seriatim the charges brought forward. The reply was not inserted. Happily, such an illustration of unfairness and injustice, in a matter of importance, is not characteristic of English newspapers.

A few months ago, an article in this journal drew attention to the remarkable admissions of Mr. Herbert Spencer, in a correspondence between himself and Mr. Frederick Harrison. The letters, with a number of corrections and additions by Mr. Spencer, have been reproduced in the United States, under the editorship of his intimate friend, Professor Youmans of New York. In his introduction the editor says, Mr. Spencer's position is this, that the essentials of religion are indestructible in human nature, and he adds:—

> "Mr. Spencer was at first denounced unsparingly as a materialist, an atheist, and a destroyer of religion. But as his views are better understood, it is more and more recognised that he is working on the side of religion, and is doing it an invaluable service; while those who insist that all religious systems are baseless and false, and who first applauded him as a powerful ally, now repudiate him as a dangerous enemy."

This is very noteworthy language respecting one hitherto regarded as the great teacher of Evolutionism, and strikingly shows the changed sentiment in relation to the supernatural which is gaining hold among philosophers. Christian men can have nothing but gratitude for this.

The Society and other papers reveal very plainly the fact that English people are under a strong French influence. Not only the novels, the vile plays, and the eccentric and costly fashions of Paris, are necessary things to the English worldling, but French social life is impressing itself strongly upon the Londoners. In the cars, omnibuses, and on the railroad, one sees the flimsy French novel in the hands of the City clerk or the high-school girl. French plays form a staple of conversation in some drawing-rooms, and French bodices give rise to innuendo and speech that had never found license in English homes had the "British Matron" been as careful about the books and plays she chose as she has suddenly become about the pictures she is to look at.

> "Sunday amongst the fashionable world of London is now, after morning service, almost exclusively devoted to pleasure and amusement. Rotten-row is crowded by smartly-attired pedestrians between one and two o'clock. . . . It is now a recognised feature of modern Society that there are at present more dinner-parties in London, during the Season, on Sundays, than on any other day in the week.
> "A dozen years ago such an event as an organised dinner in a private house on Sunday was utterly unknown. To convince oneself of the amount of Sunday feasting that goes on in London, it is only necessary to pass through any of the leading squares towards evening, to notice the unmistakably festive appearance of many of the best houses."

The above extract proves that the English Sunday is giving place to the Continental day of pleasure. The pulpit is not yet able to touch those who, by choice, form the most alarming proportion of our "Home Heathen."

"Alarming" because, not content with their own godlessness, they form a Sunday Society bent upon elevating (?) the working man by helping him to break what their own Church teaches—the fourth commandment. If these philanthropists—save the mark!—really desire the elevation of the working classes, let them cease from frivolous pleasure, and set about the serious business of life in earnest. All the social strata are affected by the law of gravitation, and when the nobleman begins to show that "Life is real," his "brother of low degree" will not be slow to be rightly impressed by it. "A grain of example is worth a pound of precept."

When preachers and evangelists stand up to preach the Gospel of God to the sons and daughters of toil, they often forget that their hearers have more than one side—that they are, in fact, composed of spirit, soul, and body. The Great Teacher never forgot this. His words were illustrated by some familiar object and actions; the healing of some, the feeding of others, a definite ministry to the wants of man as a complex structure, generally accompanied his teaching. Perhaps the failure in so much of present preaching, evangelising, and teaching, is due to the fact that an appeal is made to only one side of man's tripartite nature. Man has many needs, and to meet one successfully all must be recognised and provided for.

Truth, in commenting upon the London Missionary Society's Meeting, says, in answer to the complaint that Christian work had not made much progress in places near to scenes of war:—"As all these wars are practically made in England, would not the Society do well to turn its missionary labours first to London?" The suggestion is so good and fresh that it would be a pity to lose sight of it. There might be some blessed results from the labours of those who, having been trained to enlighten "the untutored savage," would naturally begin at the beginning in their treatment of the souls of some in "heathen England."

The same paper also contains the following:—

> "A grand Ball has recently been given in New York, 'by a well-known Society woman,' to celebrate receiving her divorce papers. One of the American papers which notices this fête predicts that 'divorce celebrations will soon rank in magnificence with weddings, christenings, and funerals.'"

This is not to be wondered at when the marriage tie is the chief theme of the "jokes" and jests of the comic papers, the sneer of so much current literature, and the peg of Society's hollowest and coarsest badinage.

Dr. Lansdell, whose travels in Siberia attracted much attention, gives in his new book, "Central Russian Asia" (Sampson Low & Co.), the history of a journey he made throughout that vast country. His purpose mainly in undertaking such a venturesome route was to complete for the Czar's dominions what he began in his Siberian Mission. Now he is able to say that there is no cell in any prison, or bed in any hospital, in all the provinces east of the Urals, but has a portion of Scripture within reach. The journey extended to 12,000 miles by rail, river, wheels, or on the back of a horse or camel. Though there was, among other difficulties, a stretch of 300 miles of desert, which had not been seen by any other living Englishman, he returned safe and sound.

He made it his business to inquire after and visit the Jews, not only in the Russian Central Asian provinces, but in the Khanate of Bokhara, and the information he gathered regarding them is of the most interesting character. The Kirghese—the nomads of the great desert—were visited by him, and so much was he struck by the similarity of their civilisation to that of the times of Abraham, that he has been able to mark in his Bible from 300 to 400 texts, which were illustrated by what came under his own notice. When it is remembered that these peoples live as far from Palestine on the east as we are on the west, it will be seen that this is a testimony to Scripture from a new source.

The work consists of two handsome volumes, extending to nearly 1500 pages, and from the very full history of these provinces, and the details regarding their economic and administrative systems, many of which were obtained from official sources, there is no doubt that Dr. Lansdell has written what will long be the standard work on Central Russian Asia.

At a meeting of the Committee of the Gospel Purity Association, held on Wednesday last week, Mr. Alfred S. Dyer in the chair, the following resolution, to be forwarded to the Government, was unanimously adopted:—

> "Considering that the attitude of authority towards licentiousness should be that of antagonism, and that the true function of the State is to repress and not to regulate vice, this committee respectfully calls upon the Government to bring in a Bill for the total and unconditional repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts of 1866 and 1869. This committee also desires to express its sense of the inadequateness of the proposals for the legal protection of female minors, in the Criminal Law Amendment Bill, and considers that justice to the children of the working classes demands that the age of legal protection should be raised to 18 years."

Next Lord's-day the usual annual collections on behalf of public hospitals fall to be made in all the places of worship throughout London. With a constantly increasing population, the needs of these noble institutions grow rather than diminish; we trust there will be a corresponding response next Sunday on the part of those who gather together to thank God for his goodness, and to beseech Him "for those things that are requisite as well for the body as the soul."

We should not feel justified in publishing the article on Faith-healing, by Rev. A. B. Simpson, without at the same time saying that it appears to us to go considerably beyond a sound and safe exegesis of Scripture. Indeed, his view with regard to seeking medical aid was contradicted on the platform of the Conference; for, while Mr. Simpson asks a series of questions as to the propriety of a Christian using medical means, to which an emphatic negative is implied, Dr. McKilliam distinguished between the good gift and the perfect gift which come down from the Father of Lights, regarding medical agency as a good gift, but Faith-healing as a perfect gift.

Mrs. Baxter spoke on the last evening of the Conference, of Faith-healing having taken place at various times during the last fifty years. A very few years more would take us into the midst of the movement connected with the name of that splendid, but (in this) misguided, man and minister of Jesus Christ, Edward Irving, who died in 1834, believing almost to the last hour that he should not die. Then, as now, there were remarkable cases of faith-healing; then, as now, it was taught that disease is sin; then, as now, there were prophesyings which were distinctly falsified by the event. All who are interested in this subject (and who is not?) should read the records of the last years of Edward Irving's life.

We were implored by a dear friend of long standing not to criticise this Conference. God forbid that we should criticise his promises as to the healing of the body, or those who believe in them; but we must express our conviction that the formulating of faith-healing into a system, as is now being done, is without Scripture warrant. And we are constrained to call it in question, because we know of Christian people who "accepted healing," for themselves or others, who were nevertheless not healed, but in some cases died, and in others lost their reason from disappointment of hope, perplexity of spirit, or confusion of mind.

Another reason for caution and warning lies in the possibility of the abuse of confidence. Pastor Schrenck, at one of the meetings, begged his audience not to yield their bodies to any and every one who anointed, without being sure that they were holy in life. The Mildmay Conference and the Keswick Convention might not unprofitably occupy themselves in an exhaustive inquiry into this subject from Scripture and history.

NATIVE CHRISTIANS in BECHUANALAND.

THE following are extracts of a private letter from a volunteer with Methuen's Horse in Bechuanaland:—

On the march down at Sani's village, near Mafeking, a collection of about twenty poor huts in the midst of a grazing wild, we halted during Sunday, 19th April. I was surprised to see three modest-looking young women—two being of a better class and the third a servant—sit down on the ground near a hut, and gathering round them a small congregation of listeners, begin singing hymns in parts in perfectly correct time and tune, and with sweet voices. These people are some of Montsioa's Barolongs. A group of our convoy were soon attracted, which seemed to please them. They went through many of the familiar Moody and Sankey, and some Church, hymns in their own language. One hymn was sung to the air of "God save the Queen," in which we all joined.

Later in the afternoon a prayer-meeting was held under a thorn hedge, in full view of their now ruined church—burnt by the freebooters a year ago, as I was told. Several of both sexes prayed in succession, in low earnest tones, listened to, and joined in from time to time as the words touched those who heard, with a depth of earnestness which quite startled me.

These blacks of negroid type have in their souls a true sense of religion. If a school were formed for educating young blacks in missionary work, I firmly believe they might march through the Dark Continent from one end to the other, and would be received with open arms. The schoolmaster should go hand in hand with the missionary. But, as far as possible, blacks, not whites, should be employed. The latter should have the schools at the bases of operation, whence the black educators and evangelisers should go forth and return for rest and study.

What a great part England might play in this matter. The coasts are hers, where she might gather men of all tribes of the earth, and, teaching them, send them forth to the darkest corners. But she is blind and avaricious. She puts on a garb of religion and humility and goes forth to barter and rob the blacks of their heritage of land, the labour of their hands, and to stifle the gifts of intelligence with which through thousands of years of barbarism God has still endowed them.

BRIXTON.—On Friday, May 15, a most enjoyable meeting was held at Streatham to give information about the work of the Y.W.C.A. Rev. W. E. Moore (vicar of Holy Trinity, Tulse-hill) took the chair. Hon. Miss E. Kinnaird touched on every branch of the work. Miss Raymond spoke especially on the work at Brixton, and the great need of extending it. Over twenty gave their names as annual subscribers at the close. On Tuesday, June 2, another meeting was held at Brixton, Rev. N. A. Garland (vicar of St. Matthew's) in the chair. The rooms at 5, Mayall-road, being found too small, a house has been taken and furnished at 6, Tunstall-road (close to the main road). A lady resident superintendent will, we feel sure materially help the work. Hon. Arthur Kinnaird has promised to open our new premises on Tuesday, June 23. M. E. Garrett, Hon. Sec.

CLAPHAM CONFERENCE HALL.

DURING the month of May Mr. Herbert Francis and Mr. Oscar Owers have held daily evangelistic services. Those who are thirsting for souls to be caught in the Gospel net have had to sing a song of praise and thanksgiving for the responses to the Gospel call. It would not be wise to give individual cases, but we praise God that many drunkards have been saved, testifying by their altered lives that they have "passed from death to life." Others, whose ignorance of spiritual things could only be likened to the poor heathen, tell us how they delight to sit and listen to the story of the Cross, and see in Christ the only source of life and peace. Even those who for many years have been bound in the fetters of the Romish Church have had their bonds broken.

It is a cause of great joy that many Christians have received a fresh baptism of the Spirit, stimulating them to greater effort in the Master's work. We would ask your readers to come and help us to take "the spoil from the mighty."

PRAISE MEETING.

On Monday evening, June 1, a largely attended meeting was held for praise and testimony; a most happy, refreshing time it was. Many babes in Christ, from a little lad aged ten to an old man, who said, "It is very good of God to save me in my old age," rose in succession, ascribing the praise to Him who had loved and redeemed them.

The work is still to be continued on Thursday and Sunday evenings, and this beautiful and spacious hall seems likely to be a centre of great blessing to the neighbourhood.

GLOUCESTER CONFERENCE.

THIS week has been indeed "a good time." Even more than in former years, God has deigned to bless us. The hand of the Lord was upon us for good, and we felt the power of the Holy Ghost throughout the course of our gatherings moving our hearts, subduing our wills, guiding our thoughts.

There were no set subjects, but from beginning to end there was order, definiteness, point in the addresses. The harmony, sequence of ideas, in the minds of the speakers was very remarkable. Rev. J. H. Shaw, of Harbone, led the way in a clear and powerful exposition of "Spiritual ambition" and its conditions. Then, one after another of our beloved brethren told of the fulness of Christ and the blessing of Christ, and unfolded the truth concerning the way of holiness and entire consecration to God. The Word of God was the basis of everything which was advanced, and more than once we were reminded of the authority and "profitableness" of that Word.

Bible-readings were given each day by Mr. G. H. Pember, author of "Earth's Earliest Ages" and "The Great Prophecies," and were very largely attended. The thoughts which our brother gave us on the book of the Revelation were most striking, solemn, and many of them most original. We shall never forget some of the words in which he described the present ministry of our glorified Lord, and the future ingathering of his "Firstfruits."

We held after-meetings on the last two evenings, when many manifested their desire and determination to live wholly for the Lord. We expect an outcome from this, of course. One result of our two former conferences has been that two offered themselves for China missions, and are there now. We shall not be surprised if many more of such blessed results attend this year's conference.

We have had a season of spiritual refreshment, instruction, strengthening, which many of us will never forget. The whole thing has been very quiet, but very deep, real, powerful. There has been a very blessed manifestation of unity and brotherly love. We have proved the Lord's great faithfulness and his matchess love to his people. "Blessed be God."—Yours very truly, Gloucester, June 6. John J. Luce.

LICENSING REFORM.—Mr. W. C. Amery, of Blandford, Dorset, writes: "As the annual licensing days are now coming on I shall be pleased to forward to anyone sending me within six weeks a stamped addressed wrapper, a list of places where 'grant by way of removal' of licenses were refused last year."

CHRISTIAN WORK IN THE EAST.

DEAR SIR,—An enforced absence from England during the spring months induced me to travel Eastward, and visit Egypt, Palestine, and Syria. While enjoying and deriving much benefit from the beautiful dry atmosphere of that interesting part of the world, I took the opportunity of visiting the various missionary stations en route.

PORT SAID.

This, as many of your readers know, is a town which owes its existence to the steam navigation traffic induced by the Suez Canal. It is a Vanity Fair of the worst description, in which Eastern and Western vices meet and may be said to culminate. Here a man of God, almost single-handed, is endeavouring to stem the tide of iniquity by visiting the ships as they pass through, and inviting seamen to a meeting at his house. As that house, however, is some distance from the landing-place, and most difficult to find, very few sailors avail themselves of the invitation. Mr. Eoll is endeavouring to get a piece of ground in front of the canal; should he succeed in obtaining the money for a building, I can conceive of nothing more important. The English Government always have a gun-boat lying in the mouth of the canal, and in addition there are from ten to twenty collier steamers, besides the multitude of regular steamers going east and west, remaining from six to sixteen hours each, so there would be no difficulty in getting gatherings together. If some English gentleman (Mr. Eoll is a Swede and consequently labours under some disadvantages, which an Englishman would not) could go out and help our brother, he would find no unpromising field.

ALEXANDRIA.

Here a noble work is being done among our soldiers. The magnificent "Soldiers and Sailors' Home," just erected under the personal superintendence of Mr. Tufnell, is now in working order and greatly appreciated by the men of both services. Miss Van Sommer, Miss Ridout, and other ladies, giving up home comforts and the society of their relatives, are devoting themselves with no little success to this work. The sisterly influence in these "Homes" is the most valuable agency that can be used with our young soldiers. Any Christians passing through Alexandria should find out the Home, and by sympathy encourage these ladies in their self-denying work.

CAIRO

was teeming with British soldiers, and it was a great grief to me to find comparatively little being done for their spiritual welfare. A small coffee and reading-room, opened by our American brethren, and a lecture hall for addresses, &c., is wholly inadequate to the needs of the many regiments I found quartered in this city of temptations. So much is this felt on the spot, that a lady has opened her drawing-room every night in the week, where the men meet for prayer and praise. By the kindness of the Religious Tract Society and of Mrs. Anna Shipton, I was furnished with a quantity of books, which were gratefully received at each of these military stations.

The English Mission School, under the direction of Miss M. L. Whately, is doing a good work, but if the official language of Egypt were English instead of French, this school would be more appreciated by the people of the land.

JAFFA.

Here the school of Miss Walker Arnott is so well known that I need only say my expectation was far exceeded by what I saw and heard. The familiar strains of Mr. Sankey's hymns were most pleasant to listen to, while the knowledge of Scripture was evidenced by the girls finishing the words of any text I commenced, adding chapter and verse. Nor are the domestic virtues neglected in this pattern establishment, so that the Moslems are sending their children to be educated by Miss Arnott, and the young husbands tell her that wives who have been trained by her are treasures. One morning when I was there a Jew was pleading with her to take his second daughter, for whom she had no room, the elder one having been such a comfort to him since she had attended the school. For boys, Mr. Hall, the indefatigable Church Missionary Society's agent, has a good school with excellent native teachers, and Mrs. Hayes, an American lady, has a second, each with about eighty boys, under most excellent Scriptural teaching.

The latest but not the least important work for the Master at Jaffa is the Hospital and Medical Mission, carried on under the superintendence of Miss Mangan and several Mildmay Deaconesses. At present there are only fourteen beds, which are applied for over and over again. While I was there a child was brought three days' journey to the good English ladies that they might cure her, as they had another child of her village a week or two before. I had conversation with some of the poor sufferers in the two small wards, which is all our sister can boast of at present, and found them grateful not only for the interest taken in their bodies but for that shown in their souls' welfare. The out-door patients, too, were deeply interesting. Eighty to one hundred assemble daily at nine o'clock to hear a Gospel address. The morning I was present the variety was most striking. There sat two Turkish soldiers who had tied their horses to a tree in the garden, veiled women, little children, aged Moslem men, besides young men in the prime of life, listening with intense earnestness to a Gospel address by Professor Porter of Beyrout, and then bowing the head while he prayed, not only for a blessing upon their bodies but upon their souls also. One by one they pass in to see the doctor, a native Christian trained at the Beyrout College, and exhibit the greatest gratitude for the help afforded.

Miss Mangan was building a hospital on a piece of ground adjoining the makeshift houses she is now occupying, but I am sorry to say has been stopped by the Turkish officials, because she had not a Government firman. She appealed to the Pasha at Jerusalem, who sympathised with her, but could give no order for the procedure of the work; he suggested, however, that she should at once proceed to Constantinople, promising to write to his son-in-law, a private secretary to the Sultan, to give her all the assistance in his power. Miss Mangan at once went there, where she now is, endeavouring to obtain the firman. Will Christian friends pray that she may be successful? The late lamented General Gordon took a deep interest in this historic town, where he spent the four last months of his life before going to Khartoum; it has been suggested that a ward should be named after him, for which Miss Mangan needs funds. I mention this as many Christian people will prefer giving their money to a memorial so directly in accordance with his and their own principles, rather than to the hospital at Port Said, which will be under very different management.

JERUSALEM.

The work of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews is so well known that I need not here enlarge upon it. I must congratulate the Church Missionary Society in securing the services of Rev. C. T. Wilson, for their Preparandi Institution for Training Teachers and Catechists. Although my visit to Jerusalem was during the holidays I had a good opportunity of seeing many of the students, and was much struck with their Scriptural knowledge. In most cases it was coupled with a simple faith in the Lord Jesus. Bishop Gobat's Orphanage, in which about sixty boys are maintained, is doing a good work. But while a few lines will suffice to tell of the efforts made by the Lord's children in this "City of Solemnities," (?) whole pages could be written of the need of testimony to the truth as it is in Jesus. I was there during the so-called "Holy Week," and had an opportunity of observing the great activity of the Greeks, Latins, and Copts, which contrasted most painfully with the apparent absence of Protestant effort. Doubtless there was more than I saw.

BETHLEHEM.

In this little town of the Nativity of our Lord, I found mere worldly tradition and superstition battling with Mohammedism; but, thank God, even here there was a bright testimony for God. The Society for Promoting Female Education in the East has an excellent school for girls under the direction of Miss Jacombs, where bright and intelligent Moslem, Jewish, and so-called Christian girls, side by side, are instructed in the Bible. On examination I found they possessed a marvellous knowledge of the letter of the word, and in conversation with them individually I found in many cases it had reached the heart. The operations of the institution are greatly contracted in its present building, and I was glad to know the committee in London had purchased a site. But, as in the case of the Jaffa Hospital, the inexorable firman is delaying the erection of more suitable premises. For this, too, I would ask the prayers of all who value the spread of the Gospel among our Eastern sisters.

DAMASCUS.

Here, in perhaps the most ancient city of the world, there is a most blessed testimony for God. The British Syrian School, under the direction of Mrs. Mentor Mott, of Beyrout, has two prosperous branches, and, as in all the other schools of this most valuable organisation, the Bible is the foundation of the educational system. In Miss Parry the native teachers have a wise and conscientious superintendent, while the school in Medan (the Whitechapel of Damascus) has as superintendents a whole family trained and truly converted at Beyrout, who devote themselves to the children during school hours, and act as Bible-women and Scripture readers at other times. A portion of the City school building has been set aside for public worship, and here Sunday after Sunday the agent of the Jews' Society, or (as on the Sunday when I was there) Rev. W. F. Connor, of the C.M.S., conducts service for the few English residents, visitors, and workers.

There is also a very flourishing native church having a native pastor, but under the superintendence of Dr. Crawford, of the Irish Presbyterian Society. It was my privilege to address its Sunday-school, and I was astonished to find so much intelligence, not only in the teacher who translated for me, but in the elder scholars, many of whom understood English, and could give a reason of the hope that was in them in Scriptural language. Our Irish brethren are to be congratulated on having such a vineyard in that far-off ancient city. Nor do their labours stop there. In many of the surrounding villages they are placing teachers, and it was my joy to spend one night in the house of one of them in the Anti-Lebanon Mountains. My visit was late in the evening, and unexpected, but I found the teacher with several agricultural labourers learning from him the Word of God.

While speaking about this village work, I must not forget to mention the valuable work of Rev. W. F. Connor, who was trained at Harley House, Bow, but now working under the Church Missionary Society, and lately ordained by Bishop Hannington. Both physically and spiritually Mr. Connor is eminently qualified for the itinerant work in the Hauran, where he has organised several missionary stations under native teachers, so that Bedouin and Arab are having the Gospel preached to them.

BAALBEC,

considered, by most students, to be the northern boundary of the Promised Land, is in every way remarkable. In the apex of the valley between the two Lebanon ranges, it was chosen by the ancients for the erection of some of the most wonderful temples the world has ever seen. With their prodigious blocks of stone, some of which are estimated at 1300 tons, they remain until this day, seeming in their very desertion to say, "We are guarding the land for those whose right it is, until the fulness of the times of the Gentiles be accomplished." Here God has his workers. Madame Hiss, a labourer with no ordinary ability, is conducting one of the British Syrian Schools so successfully that some of the higher-class natives consider it a privilege to get their children taken in. An examination in Scripture history proved how well these children are grounded in the Bible, while their answers on the fundamental truths of Christianity showed something more than theoretical knowledge. Many of the parents are regretting that Madame Hiss is to be removed to the school at Tyre, where a school by the same Society is carried on, but I believe Mrs. Mott has a worthy successor to this most successful worker.

BEYROUT.

If not so geographically in a missionary point of view, this beautiful town must be considered the capital of Syria; for here are the headquarters of the British Syrian Schools, founded by the late Mrs. Bowen Thompson, in 1862, in order to alleviate the sufferings of the widows and orphans of the Lebanon massacres, and which now supports and directs no less than thirteen institutions in this one town. I visited each school, and remembering that there are 3000 children in connection with this one Society, under direct Christian teaching, I could not but feel there must be a great future for Syria. One lad, of thirteen years of age, I found speaking and writing English, French, and Arabic. This boy told me he was resting simply and only on the Lord Jesus for salvation. In the Institute, where young women are being trained for teachers, I found more than half out of eighty could give a Scriptural reason for the hope that is in them. The affairs of these schools are managed by Mrs. Mentor Mott, under the control of a Committee at home, of which Miss Poulton, of 18, Homefield-road, Wimbledon, is the excellent Secretary.

I was equally delighted with Miss Taylor's school for Moslem girls, where I found the same feature in the education, viz., a sound Scriptural basis.

At Beyrout there is also that remarkable institution, the American College for Syrians, a handsome building erected by the munificence of the late W. E. Dodge, of New York. It has emerged from rather a cloudy morning to a noon of the brightest description conceivable. With a staff of godly professors, who make it apparent that their object is primarily the salvation of the souls of the students, the result may naturally be foretold. Not in units, but in tens and twenties, young men have come forward and boldly declared their conversion. From the conversation I had with them after two addresses I gave in the college, I was convinced of the reality of the work in their souls. A preparatory school in the college grounds is also under the same influence, and the lads join with the students of the college in Bible reading and prayer-meetings. Would that the high tone of moral and spiritual life evidenced by these young Syrians were more visible in our own schools and colleges.

SHEMLAN.

Beyrout is beautiful, but this may be called the "Garden of the Lord."

> "Where every prospect pleases,
> And only man is vile."

Here the Society for the Promotion of Female Education in the East has wisely planted a school, at present under the guidance of a very judicious and spiritually-minded person, Miss Adie. She has thirty to forty girls boarded, lodged, and educated under her care. Many of them are children of the fellaheen, who pay a portion of the expenses, and who are truly grateful for the help afforded them. Education for girls is such a novelty to most of them, that one is thankful to find an appreciation of it now springing up among them. I examined these girls and found them able to read, write, and cipher well, and I unhesitatingly say that their Scriptural knowledge was far in advance of the average of girls of the same age in England. The singing (principally Mr. Sankey's Hymns in English and Arabic, as in most of the other schools I visited) was remarkably sweet, and I came away feeling more than ever that the most productive missionary labour is among the young, especially the future wives and mothers of those lands, where, hitherto, woman has been degraded as an unfit companion for the stronger sex.

I regret to hear that this Society, of which Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, is the excellent Secretary, is greatly in need of help, and it will be a great joy to me if any word of mine induces some one to take an interest in its work by sending money to it, or, indeed, to any of the other valuable agencies I have mentioned, to enable them to carry on this work of evangelising Syria and Palestine.

It must not be supposed that I have spoken of all the work or workers in those parts of the Holy Land and Egypt to which I have referred. I could not expect you would give me space were I able to do it, but my object will be gained if this letter should lead some who are sceptical of the result of missionary enterprise to say, "What hath God wrought!"

Yours faithfully,
Joseph Weatherley.

A GOSPEL TENT.

HOW WE GOT IT; HOW WE USE IT.

THE veteran missioner, Rev. W. Haslam, had been with us for more than a week. Several souls had been saved, and others made anxious for salvation, through the words that had fallen from his lips.

"We want a tent," said my Vicar, "to hold these poor people together; but how is it to be obtained?"

The words of the Master rushed into my mind: "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them, of my Father which is in heaven."

A working man and his sister soon afterwards went by my window. I knew them both to be children of God, so I fetched them back to my study, and kneeling there, side by side, we pleaded the promise received, and asked the Lord definitely to give us a tent.

Two or three days rolled by, and, knowing nothing of the request that had gone up to God, Mr. Guest returned from a journey to tell us that a gentleman, during his absence from home, had been led to offer us a tent. But I had already made a personal appeal to friends, and from one of these came a letter in which the writer told me that the Lord had moved his hand to write me a cheque for a hundred pounds. Other friends sent in thirty pounds more, and our coveted tent was purchased, together with thirty-eight folding benches, an harmonium, a cornet, and a platform for the preacher.

It was reared in the Christ Church croft, by five or six converted engine-drivers, and consecrated to the service of God, in prayer, by an old ex-driver, who had become our Scripture reader. In two or three hours from this time a soul had been saved under its canvas roof.

It was formally opened the same night by Mr. Guest, who was followed by Mr. Wakefield McGill. Then service followed service nightly, till the chill atmosphere of November made it dangerous to use it any longer. How many of these were really born from above the day alone will declare, but at least two hundred professed conversion during the four or five months we kept it in use. What testimony meetings we had!

A converted sceptic arose one night. "I was an infidel," said he; "I read the works of Bradlaugh and Holyoake till I ceased to believe in a God or a devil. Life became a burden to me. I rose one night, and burnt my books, lest my children should be made as wretched as myself, remaining an infidel nevertheless. I don't know why I came into this tent, but I know I had not been in it long before I was made to believe in a hell, and to feel that I was falling into it. Then I was led to believe in a God, and, thank God, in a Saviour too. I came to the tent an infidel; I left it a saved soul." I believe that this man has been a consistent believer from that day to this.

After him rose a converted Romanist, who told us how God had opened his eyes through the preaching of our beloved Vicar, Mr. Guest. He is now a devoted worker in the London City Mission. Amongst others, too, I must just make mention of our old friend, "Navvy Bill" as our people were wont to call him. A rough diamond was William. "Are you coming into the tent?" asked one of our outside workers. "Not wi'out you gie me some drink," said Bill. But he came in notwithstanding his determination, and there the Lord met him, and saved his soul. He is now a navvies' missionary. We did not always remain working in the same place, but wherever we went the Lord blessed us.

Once, when we went to Stapenhill, we were refused the ground that had been offered for our use. It was objected that we should make our services the means of spreading the foot-and-mouth disease. "Bring the tent into one of my fields," said Henry Lakin, "though every head of cattle on my farm shall be stricken with the plague." We gladly accepted his invitation, and I believe his was the only farm in the parish that actually escaped the outbreak.

Many another true story could I tell of blessing received in connection with this consecrated canvas church. I know not how many more, but two of our Pavenham people were saved when it was standing in the park here. Then it was used of God again, while lent to friends who erected it in the Bedford Cattle Market, where it narrowly escaped destruction.

We have just now had it down to Preston, in Lancashire, to give the Rev. F. W. Newton, of St. Mark's, and his fellow-workers a little help, and again have we found ourselves working beneath the smile of the Lord. Though the weather was terribly cold, and the many poor mill-folk naturally shrunk from imperilling health and life by sitting out our services, we scarcely knew a night (my young friend Macklin Chapman and I) without having the joy of seeing some soul or souls led to the Lord Jesus for salvation. We were in a God-favoured parish, it is true, nor have many churches the pastors, evangelists, teachers, and lady workers that St. Mark's at Preston has; but, let this be as it may, I know that the tent was asked of God, given by God, and has been honoured of God; and I believe that blessing will again be connected with the services that shall be held in it while at Manchester, where for the next three weeks it will be worked by himself and the fellow-helpers of J. Wakefield McGill.

MR. FEGAN'S BOYS' HOMES.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me a little space again to plead the cause of the great and good work Mr. Fegan is doing in the rescue of boys from the streets of London? You can well imagine the funds have been severely tried by the passage and outfit of the 100 boys who are now with him en voyage. It would gladden his heart if the means were supplied for filling up the vacancies made by those who have just left. May I plead for him and the work in his absence? Who will help?

Surely there can be no nobler work than his, picking up from the five millions of London the waste human life, for whom no one cares, and planting the lads in a new sphere, surrounded by Christian and moral influences which will uphold them and be their strength through life.—

Yours truly, S. Trevor Francis.

MR. D. L. MOODY has held special services at Princeton, U.S. The First Presbyterian Church was filled to overflowing with an audience composed of college and seminary students, and townspeople. On the platform were President McCosh, Dr. A. A. Hodge, and others of the college faculty, and the pastors of the town. Mr. Moody spoke with great earnestness. Many were deeply touched. After the service many persons remained for personal conversation. Mr. Moody on Sunday conducted the college services in the Marquand Chapel, both morning and afternoon, and preached in the First Presbyterian Church in the evening. While in Princeton he was the guest of President McCosh. A great deal of good, it is hoped, will be done by his visit to the college and town.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

EXETER HALL was well filled on Monday week, on the occasion of the annual muster of the Army, under the command of General Booth. The General spoke on "The Rise and Progress of the Salvation Army." He had been reminded that it was just three years since they opened the "Congress Hall" at Clapton, and a remarkable three years they had been. The Army then reached a position which was very remarkable, and beyond which many people believed they could not go. But they had advanced considerably, nevertheless. If their good deeds had been trumpeted, certainly their evil deeds, if they had any, had been also. They had been criticised by all sections, and were in touch, so to speak, with all classes, of society. They had been tried and persecuted on all hands. They had begun work in German Switzerland, and had sent a "captain" out, an American Salvationist who had been instrumental in raising a German corps in London. He had only been out there three weeks, and had already started a second corps. Similar work had been going on all over the world.

The General then gave some comparative figures. In 1878 the Army occupied positions in only two different countries; now their flag was floating in 17. Seven years ago they had only 81 corps, to-day 1050; 127 paid officers, to-day 2650; no "outposts"—small corps in the villages, to-day they had 662, and were just "opening fire" upon the villages. Then they had only one newspaper, a monthly magazine; now they had 22 separate publications, 19 of which were newspapers. He maintained that the Army had justified by its achievements the money that had been given them. As many as 1900 officers had left the Training Home at Clapton, and gone all over the world. Mr. Bramwell Booth had had an interview with the Prime Minister of Victoria, who was so gratified at the results of the work of the Army there that he was going to ask the Government to make a grant of £1000 to fit up their new homes for the rescue of fallen women; and he would try to get a permanent grant for the Army, so that they were going to be established and connected with the State. The Prime Minister went further, and said that if he could not persuade the Government to give £1000 he would be one of ten to give the sum out of their own pockets. That result had been attained by the efforts of the men and women who had gone from the Clapton Training Homes. The Army meant to go forward. There were 25,000 villages in England, some of which were very dark, and they were establishing cavalry corps to establish "forts" in these country places. They were seriously contemplating a campaign in China. They were also about to establish "brigades" for nursing and education, and had the war with Russia taken place they would have offered the Government 200 nurses on condition that they nursed English and Russians alike. They now proposed to start the Salvation Navy, and were in earnest this time, as a gentleman, whose name must not be mentioned, had given them a fine steam yacht, which was the first of the coming "fleet of soul-saving ships."

Among others who took part in the proceedings were Rev. M. D. Jewelson, of Baltimore; Mr. W. Pink Smith, of America; and Mrs. Booth.—Daily News.

FOREIGN MISSIONS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—The report for the past year contains a map of each of the four Chinest stations, with detailed information of the progress of the work. In Bengal the town of Rampore Beauleah, with its population of 23,000, forms the centre of a mission for the district of Rajshaye, and is the only Christian work for a million and a quarter of people. In the Singapore district there is one neighbourhood containing one hundred thousand Chinese as yet untouched by any Protestant Mission. The interruption caused by the Franco-Chinese war has been mainly overcome. God has given much blessing, the converts have remained faithful and stedfast, and the more wealthy among them gave of their goods to the poor during the privation caused by the war. Collecting boxes and cards may be had at the offices of the Mission, 7, East India-avenue, London, E.C.

MISSIONS TO THE BERBER RACES.

A MOST interesting Occasional Paper has been issued by Mr. E. H. Glenny, of Barking, giving many detailed accounts of mission work among the Kabyles and other Berber races in North Africa. These accounts are extracted from the letters of workers on the ground, and give much room for encouragement and hope with respect to the development of the Kabyle Mission. We extract some of the introductory paragraphs with the hope that many of our readers will continue their practical sympathy and fellowship with this effort to evangelise our North African brethren:—

"The open doors in Morocco fill us with praise. We long for further efficient labourers to enter them, and hope, if the Lord will, through the help of Christian friends to send several more to this part of the field. After staying for a time at Tangier they would be ready to go forward inland, and their places could be filled by other workers.

"Beside workers we shall need further furniture at Tangier, which perhaps some could in part supply us with second-hand; portable furniture is especially useful. We shall also need funds, and while we shall not cease to pray to God for them, we wish also to keep our friends informed of our special, as well as our general needs. Already we have added Miss Tulloch and Miss Herdman to our staff here, and we shall be able to take several more. We feel that the hand of God has been plainly shown in giving us our present able band of workers, and we desire his further guidance and help. We are thankful to have had the kind sympathy of Mr. and Mrs. Mackintosh, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, who are doing such an important and efficient work in disseminating the Scriptures in Tangier and other parts of North Morocco.

"Three ladies have been accepted to go out as missionaries to North Africa, and will start when their exact location is decided. The Presbyterian Church of England are proposing to establish a Medical Mission at Rabat, an important town on the west coast of Morocco. Mr. George Pearse is about starting from Algiers on another evangelistic tour through the country."

THE FREE CHURCH ASSEMBLY.

SPEAKING of the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland recently held, The Daily Review says:—

"The most prominent and noteworthy feature of the Assembly was the extraordinary interest manifested in questions bearing on religious life and work. The report on Sabbath observance attracted a large attendance of members; the morning conferences on religion and morals, as well as the evening meetings, at which Temperance, home evangelisation, foreign missions, Sabbath-school teaching, and young men's guilds were the subjects successively presented for consideration, were filled to overflowing. These are so many gratifying signs that the Free Church is alive to its work and responsibility. Evidences are multiplying that it is really bringing itself into closer contact with the people, with the happiest results to itself and with the greatest advantage to the community."

"A Younger Elder," writing to the same journal, says:—

"The manifest feeling of the House in connection with the subject of Temperance was specially encouraging. The expression of the growing conviction that the Church should think twice, or oftener, before admitting makers and sellers of strong drink to her membership was well received. The Foreign Mission night was, as usual, a particularly interesting one, and the addresses given by those from the foreign field were most excellent. There are other things I might notice—the secondary place which is given to most important subjects, such as 'social purity' and 'systematic giving.' I was pleased to hear the note of warning which Mr. Henderson sounded in connection with the proposed guilds for young people. I do not think our city ministers are fully alive to much that goes on in connection with our existing literary and social societies, which, in many cases, although presumably under the supervision and sanction of the Church, are really in the hands of the young men who attend them, and who do very much as they like."

UNTIL HE COME.*

"Looking for that blessed hope."

BY Christ redeemed, in Christ restored,
We keep the memory adored,
And show the death of our dear Lord
Until He come.

His body broken in our stead
Is here, in this memorial bread;
And so our feeble love is fed
Until He come.

The streams of his dread agony,
His life-blood shed for us, we see—
The wine shall tell the mystery
Until He come.

And thus that dark betrayal night
With the last Advent we unite
By one blest chain of loving rite,
Until He come.

Until the trump of God be heard,
Until the ancient graves be stirred,
And with the great commanding word,
The Lord shall come.

O blessed hope! with this elate
Let not our hearts be desolate,
But strong in faith, in patience wait
Until He come.

AMERICAN NOTES.

OUR friend, Dr. G. F. Pentecost, writes from Brooklyn on May 26:—

"Your readers will be glad to know of the good work which has been done on our side by your countryman, Mr. George Soltau, who has been on our side of the water for the past nine months. His work has been largely in and about Brooklyn. Wherever he has held evangelistic meetings or given Bible-readings, he has left behind him the best results and the good-will of the people. I think Mr. Soltau's readings are especially fine, both from the point of view of manner and composition, but chiefly from the fact of their rich Biblical character. They must have been a blessing to all who had an ear to hear. We are sorry to part with him. Indeed, so interested have many friends been in his work, that I know that there is to be an earnest effect to induce him to come over and make a permanent home among us. He sails on one of the White Star boats for his home and family on Saturday next. The Lord go with him and give him a prosperous journey.

"How I should like to be at the Mildmay meetings again this year. It was a most refreshing time to me last June. We are looking for a number of you to come over and see us at the Northfield Conference this summer. You will miss it if you do not come. I think the reports from the churches this side will show a most encouraging harvest of souls for the year. In many places the ingatherings have been larger than ever before known. The work, however, has been very quiet. The still small voice has done the work."

CORSICA.—Miss Eliza Stapfer writes from Corsica:—For three years the McAll Mission of Paris has been at work in this beautiful island. In spite of the prejudice and extreme ignorance of the people, God has blessed the preaching of the pure Gospel, so that at Bastia fifteen young men and women have come out of Roman Catholicism. The priest denounced them from the pulpit, wrote furious lines against some converts, and tried to ruin their business. It was all in vain. The persecution merely helped the young people to lean on the Lord more closely, and to show, by their sanctified lives, the reality of their faith in Christ. The hands of the zealous minister now in charge of the mission might be greatly strengthened if prayerful evangelistic Protestants were to settle in this town in order to give countenance to these true witnesses for Jesus.

A SABBATH IN EAST LONDON,

WITH THE HOME OF INDUSTRY WORKERS.

ABOUT half-past ten, on a recent Sunday morning, I started from the Training Home, Hackney, with Mr. and Mrs. Merry, to meet a band of Workers from the Home of Industry, who were, on this occasion, accompanied by 25 of the Stratford Mizpah Band. Passing through several narrow streets, I thought, "Can this be the Day of Rest?" Shops of almost every variety were open, and the occupants busily engaged in displaying their wares or bargaining with customers. Here is a woman with loud coarse voice auctioneering remnants of cotton, surrounded by an eager crowd of women. Here is a man offering linen buttons for sale, and drapers are busy with customers.

As we pass along, the crowd thickens; fruit and vegetable carts, lemonade and ice-cream stands, whelk and cockle barrows form a close line on each side of the street.

The next street we turn into is evidently the flower-market of the district. Flowering plants of every variety and beauty are displayed on the streets, with barrows and cartloads of vegetables and fruit, rhubarb being the staple commodity. There goes an old man with a little box of plants and bunches of groundsel, hurrying along to find a corner to sell his little stock-in-trade.

We reach Brick-lane, where the crowd of costermongers and purchasers and loafers is so dense that we have to crush our way through with difficulty. What a contrast to our northern cities, where the noise of business is hushed, and where sin at least hides its face on Sunday! It seems to me that the very fact of all this Sunday traffic being allowed by the authorities is very degrading to the people. But before it is stopped another reform will have to be made. On asking women why they did not make their purchases on Saturday, they answer, "I had no money, my husband was in the public, and if I had gone there and asked him for it I know what I would have got—a blow or bad language." This is true in thousands of cases, and what does it indicate? That the first reform must be, closing the public-houses at six or eight o'clock on Saturday night, or, better still—entirely.

All this was passing through my mind as we pushed our way through the crowds as best we could. On reaching Bird Fair we heard, through the din, the sweet sounds of "Christ receiveth sinful men," from the Mizpah Band, who, with Miss Macpherson and some of her workers, slowly marched through the crowds. We joined the band, and turned back, while they sung hymn after hymn, and at intervals stood, while one would proclain the Gospel in a few telling words. Meanwhile, the people respectfully listened, though some of the sellers had angry looks that their trade was interrupted, but no one molested the party by word or action.

After standing for awhile in a central place, singing and testifying one by one, the party moved off to a railway arch, where a harmonium had been placed in front of a large banner, on which were the words, "Behold, what manner of love," &c. Here a service was held, and, standing on a chair, the Mizpah men in turn told out the Gospel message, testifying shortly what they had been saved from, and how Christ Jesus was their keeping power from drink and sin of every kind. These addresses were interspersed with telling hymns, such as, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked," &c., while other workers went round the crowds distributing pictorial Gospel tracts. Heavy rain sent in the passers-by, and thousands must have come under the sound of the Gospel during that hour.

Some curious touches of London life were noticed by the writer. A few street notes of a poor imprisoned lark carried by a man in a covered cage, mingled now and then with the speaking and singing. A woman loaded with rhubarb and groceries, looking on with interest, was told, "These are working men saved from the drink and sin, and are telling of Christ's saving power." She answered, "Ah, that's better than spending their time in the public-house, as half the world is doing."

At one o'clock the services under the two railway arches ceased, and all the workers gathered at the Home of Industry, where dinner was provided for the Mizpah men. At the close Miss Macpherson gave them a few helpful words, the purport of which was, "going from strength to strength," by "grace upon grace," and in the future "changed from glory to glory." Each man was presented with a book on leaving. Their happy faces were sufficient evidence of their changed lives.

Afterwards the resident workers had their meal, and retired to prepare for their afternoon Bible-classes of widows, women, men, policemen, &c. After tea, classes of girls are gathered in, and while some of the workers are engaged with these, others go out to the low lodging-houses in the neighbourhood. I accompanied them to one of the men's lodging-houses; it was a long low room, boxed off on each side, all the seats occupied by one or more men, resting, smoking, or eating. While some talked and jested, most of them listened quietly, and, with one slight exception, no personal rudeness was offered. Several hymns were sung, and the Gospel invitation earnestly given. Some quiet conversation followed, then we proceeded to a women's lodging-house opposite, the young men leaving us to go to other services.

This room was lighter and cleaner than the others, the women, mostly of the low type, degraded by drink and sin, with here and there a face which seemed to tell of better days in the past, compelled, perhaps by want, to mingle with this company. One person was well dressed, and I was turning over in my mind who or what she could be, when, at the close of the meeting, she was introduced to me as Maggie, one of the latter class in this same house. She was rescued as a brand three years ago, and still delights in coming to the meeting where she found her Saviour.

So ended a marked day in my life, with mingled feelings of sorrow and pity for the thousands wilfully living without Christ, and of joy and thanksgiving that the message of Salvation is being so earnestly carried into the midst of them.

MRS. BOOTH AT OXFORD.

THE Salvation Army have held some special services here in the Corn Exchange. On Friday night Mrs. Booth gave a lecture on "Popular Christianity. On Sunday, from morning to night, the people of Oxford were pleaded with, both in the open air and in the hall, by Salvation Army officers, under-graduates, and others.

Only a few members of the University attended these meetings, as it had been announced that Mrs. Booth would hold a special meeting for them late on Sunday evening. This meeting, the most interesting of all, was held in the Clarendon Assembly-rooms, at 9 p.m. The room, holding about four hundred, was crowded, several influential members of the University being present. Mrs. Booth took as her subject "Spiritual Retribution." Earnestly and lovingly she reasoned with the young men of righteousness and judgment to come. After Mrs. Booth had left the room, the meeting, which began punctually at nine, was carried on till nearly twelve o'clock, by the two ex-curates, Messrs. Pigott and Oliphant. The customary and conventional were forgotten as these servants of God boldly and fearlessly declared that God can and does save a young man from sin, and pleaded with them to yield themselves unreservedly to God.

We have good reason to believe that many consciences were awakened, and that many were brought for the first time face to face with the real claims of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The prayers of God's people are asked for Oxford.

UNION HALL MISSION.—I am hoping to erect several tents in some of the poorest localities of this metropolis. I should be thankful for the prayerful sympathy and practical help of your readers. I should welcome the presence and help of those who can preach the Gospel, as the services will be continued nightly in different localities. A tent will be opened on Sunday next, June 14, at High-street, Battersea, near the station; in a week or two I expect to open another at Brentford.

NATIONAL REFUGES FOR HOMELESS AND DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

THE Earl of Shaftesbury presided last week at the thirty-seventh annual meeting of this organisation, which includes the training-ships Arethusa and Chichester, at Exeter Hall. A selection of pieces was sung by a choir of 600 children, Mr. J. Proudman conducting. Last year there were gathered from the streets into the refuges no fewer than 322 boys; sixty girls were received. The children come from all parts of London and the provinces. During the year 306 boys and forty-nine girls had been placed out. The receipts for 1884 from all sources had amounted to £21,745, which was less than that received in 1883 by £4235. The expenditure had been £25,178. The deficiency against the Society now amounts to £5860.

Lord Shaftesbury, who was received with much enthusiasm, retired from the chair early in the proceedings. He said that he was recovering strength, and did not wish to trespass too much upon it at one time. The merits of the institutions, he said, were of great and vital importance in many aspects, and he wished that the number of refuges could be multiplied a hundredfold; they would not be one too many for the necessities of this great metropolis. The institutions furnished honest labourers in many departments of trade and domestic life, and were doing a great deal for all who were householders, in whatever rank of life they might be. By means of their training-ships, they were doing much good to the navy and mercantile marine, by the lads they were sending into them; they were gradually producing a very real change, and tending to alter the character of the British sailor in all parts of the globe.

Lord Jersey, who took the chair after Lord Shaftesbury had retired, expressed his pleasure at seeing his lordship present once more. It had been said that there was as much statesmanship in trying to help the more unfortunate classes of our country as in that which was called political statesmanship. If that was true, Lord Shaftesbury was the brightest example of a true statesman.

Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore spoke of the pleasure he felt at the prominence which was given to religious instruction in the institutions. Rev. David Davies, of Regent's-park Baptist Chapel, characterised the institutions as being pre-eminently of national importance, for one of the needs of the age was men and women who should be distinguished by the morality of their lives and the straightforwardness of their conduct towards their fellows. The nation that neglected its young mortgaged its future to a large and terrible extent. He admired the institution because it began the work of reformation in the right place—with the young.

THE BAPTISTS AND MR. STANLEY.

THE Baptist Missionary Society has done well to mark its sense of the many services which Mr. H. M. Stanley has rendered to Mr. Comber and his brethren on the Congo River. We have seldom attended a more interesting and enthusiastic meeting than that which followed the breakfast in Cannon-street Hotel on Thursday week. Mr. Stanley was worthy of the honour shown to him. He looks at Christian missions from the standpoint of a pioneer of commerce and civilisation. It is satisfactory, though we needed it not, to be assured by him that, seen from such a point of view, the work of our brethren is all that can be desired. We trust the Committee will give due attention to the suggestions of Mr. Stanley, and warn and instruct the young men they send out to temper zeal with discretion, and to work prudently, that they may live to work for many years. Missionaries are commissioned to evangelise the world, and to do this they must live. We think a missionary in his grave is worth more than Mr. Stanley apparently imagined; but he is unquestionably worth much more to the world alive than dead, and, therefore, we trust that all possible care will be taken to preserve the precious lives of the young brethren sent out by our Society to the Congo.

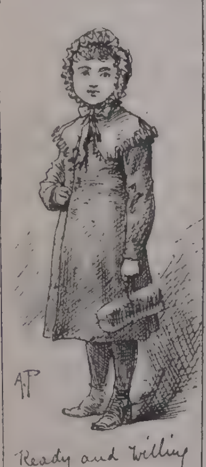
LITTLE EMIGRANTS.

EIGHT separate parties of little folks, aggregating over 800 children, have been sent to the colonies from Dr. Barnardo's Homes since 1882. Last week the ninth party, consisting of 74 girls, started for Canada, leaving behind them, it is confidently hoped for ever, the struggling temptations which would have surrounded them in England.



Ready and willing to go.

In accordance with an excellent custom, the young emigrants mustered on the previous Monday, at the noon prayer-meeting in Aldersgate-street Y. M. C. A., when friends assembled to commend the children to God in prayer, and to bid them God-speed on their journey. All, with the exception of three or four, had been trained at the Ilford Home, in one or other of the thirty cottages in which most of them had, for the first time in their lives, been under motherly care and guidance. As they filed into the room, in their neat costume, and with their chubby faces and rosy cheeks, they formed one of the pleasantest object-lessons for Christian workers that could have been presented.

Dr. Barnardo gave a talk on the subject of his little party, and appealed for the prayerful sympathy of his audience. A thrill of kindly feeling pervaded his hearers as he asked the smallest of the maidens to stand up on the seats, which they bashfully did. A few remarks on the advantages of emigration to Canada led up to one or two figures, highly interesting and suggestive. Of the 74 emigrants, 2 were from Ireland, 29 from various counties in England, 13 from East London, and the remainder from other parts of the Metropolis. The ages varied from five to seventeen years; 14 were under seven, 34 between seven and eleven, 12 were between eleven and fourteen, and the rest under seventeen. Again, 15 were orphans, with both parents dead, 12 had mothers only, 9 had fathers only. The destitution of most of the cases had been absolute, and the histories clinging to the past of the majority of the girls were utterly sad. Situations had already been obtained for all the older girls on the Canadian side. The younger ones would be received into the Distributing Home at Peterborough, Ontario, where it was expected they would be soon taken for adoption into childless families.

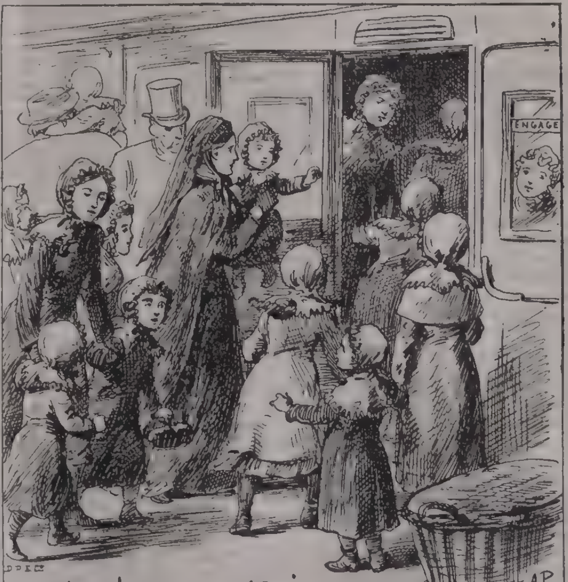
A second gathering of the little maidens took place on Wednesday afternoon at Euston Station, just prior to their departure for Liverpool. Very quaint the tiny travellers looked as they marched into the waiting-room, wearing their red travelling hoods, and their bright faces glowing with the excitement of their departure. Under the care of Mr. W. R. Nicoll, with two of the Ilford "Mothers," the party were to proceed to Liverpool, and embark in the Allan liner Polynesian on Thursday. The other passengers were highly curious about the small voyageurs, and it was only by an adjournment to a larger room that Dr. Barnardo could obtain the needed accommodation. The time was so limited that only a few brief words were possible. Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard acted as chairman, and briefly introduced Dr. Barnardo, who made a statement of the circumstances attending the emigration of these girls.

A fresh point of interest was given to his address by a sentence or two culled from advices received that morning from the Home at Peterborough. Over 300 applications, it was stated, had already been received for the 74 girls now on the eve of departing. The accounts of the progress made by recently emigrated lads and lasses were roseate in their hues, and the prospects of life lying before the emigrants were bright and hopeful. The seeds of Gospel truth had been sown in the hearts of all the young travellers—to bear fruit, he hoped, in after years, in the land of their adoption.

Rev. W. Tyler and Rev. Dr. Rosedale then commended the party to God in prayer; and the inexorable guards hurried off the little passengers to their seats. It was amid a chorus of good-byes that the train steamed off; and the "God bless you's," as the carriages swept past the platform, were manifestly breathed from the hearts of genuine friends of Dr. Barnardo's Homes and the emigration work in connection with them. In our picture the little maidens are just facing the train prior to departure.

The final farewells were spoken on the following day at Liverpool, when, after a safe journey from the Metropolis, the little ones gathered on the deck of the Polynesian. Clustering round Dr. Barnardo, the children presented a beautiful spectacle, with the summer sun brightening their faces as they sang "We are out on the ocean sailing," and "He will hide me." The passengers were on the tiptoe of curiosity, and the brief prayers and short addresses were listened to with interest. Then good-byes were said, the paddles of the steam tender began to turn, there was a prolonged flutter of handkerchiefs, and the young emigrants were fairly off.

Such emigration work, indeed, blesses both the country that gives and that which takes. It is a pure and healthy stream of young blood that thus flows into our Colonial dependencies. Canada and the rest strongly and rightly object to having the social débris of English cities "dumped," as they put it, on their shores.



The children entering the Railway carriages.

Against this danger Dr. Barnardo guards by only emigrating children physically free from taint, morally uncontaminated, industrially trained, and with habits of cleanliness, truth, and virtue firmly ingrained. Efficient and constant supervision in Canada itself minimises the danger of any lapse into vice. When it is added that such emigration can be carried out for a sum of only £8 10s. per child, it must surely be admitted that in few other channels can so Christlike a work be accomplished with such an immediate return in the shape of social and spiritual results.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

Two ex-Priests are now studying for the Protestant pastorate in the Faculty Montauban.

M. Réveillaud has translated Dr. Bonar's life of his son-in-law, Mr. G. T. Dodds, into French. M. Réveillaud adds the testimony of a warm and tried friendship.

The American Bible Society has one hundred and sixty-five colporteurs engaged in its fourth general supply of Bibles to destitute families in the United States.

Vaud —Political elections take place in this and many other Swiss cantons on Sunday. The Vaudois Committee for the Lord's Day Observance offers a prize of a hundred francs for the best short essay against this practice.

Belgium.—The colporteurs say the great obstacles to their work are indifference and incredulity. Opposition comes only from the priests, who do all they can to get hold of the Bibles in order to burn them. Prejudice against Protestants is gradually disappearing.

The Amazon Valley.—Mr. Boyle, who is making an evangelistic tour on the upper watershed of the Amazon, says: "In the whole Amazon Valley there is not a single missionary at work. Not one Gospel sermon has ever been preached in that vast territory."

The Countess Pourtales-Saladin has just died at Cannes. Her name was synonymous with piety and generosity. She deprived herself in order to give, and that not only in money; but time, strength, love, and patience, were lavished on the poor.—Christianisme.

The Prussian Landtag has been discussing the question of lotteries. Pastor Stoëker proposed their entire abolition; this was rejected, but at the third reading of the motion the Government was asked to legislate, so as to obtain their suppression throughout the Empire as soon as possible.

Spain.—M. Empaytaz, evangelical pastor, draws a very dark picture of society in and around Barcelona. Morality is at a shamefully low ebb, thieves abound, and the police is so corrupt, that if journalists or others inform against evil-doers, they are certain to be made to suffer for it, in some way or other.—Journal Réligieux.

The Evangelical Society of Geneva, founded in 1831, has been labouring for fifty-four years on behalf of the evangelisation of France. It contributes to this end by its theological schools, a great number of the students of which are now occupying stations in different churches; by colportage of the Bible, in which department about sixty agents are at work; and, lastly, by direct evangelisation. After having founded a great number of churches and stations, at least fifteen labourers are at present employed in divers departments of France.

Roman Catholics and the Congo.—The Journal Réligieux says:—"It is evident that the Belgian Catholics are trying to take advantage of the position that King Leopold has assumed with regard to the Congo. One clerical journal sends forth an energetic appeal for the "Conquest of the Congo." This conquest is reserved for the Catholic missionaries and the Holy Virgin, not for those money worshippers. The Catholic religion will assure the benefits of civilisation to those immense territories of which King Leopold is now sovereign." Let us hope that Protestant Christians will zealously occupy the position before they are forestalled by Romanists.

Savagery in Spain.—The following appears in a Bilbao paper:—"On the eve of the last corrida urbana which took place in Madrid, that civilised populace, of which the flower and the pearl of the feminine aristocracy form part, insisted in the bull-ring that a bull should be encircled with fire, in order that it might expiate the offence it had committed in not having watered the plaza with the blood of horses and men; and the spectators were, beyond measure, delighted at hearing the animal bellow and rage in frantic despair amid the flames that surrounded and devoured it. This spectacle was witnessed by the Madrid populace without it being observed that any one of these tender mothers of families, or those destined to be, fainted at the savage spectacle at which they assisted."

CLAPTON.—Rev. H. Gamble, pastor of the Upper Clapton Congregational Church, desires, through our columns, to disavow all sympathy with, and responsibility for, the services being held in a tent near his church by Mr. A. Carty. The meetings, though announced as in connection with the church, are being held in opposition to the express wish of himself and all the deacons with one exception.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION JUBILEE.

CONSIDERING the position of the thermometer, the audience that came together in Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening last week, to celebrate the close of the Jubilee year of this Mission, was a very large one. There was a formidable array on the platform of tried friends of the Mission, supporting Mr. Joseph Hoare in the chair. The orchestra was crowded with the missionaries themselves. Mr. Hoare, in commencing his brief statement, regretted that the £50,000 proposed to be raised as a Jubilee Fund had not all been realised; the amount received up to that time was £17,200. However, though the Jubilee year was closed, the fund was still open, and anyone could have the opportunity of swelling the total. Mr. Hoare dwelt at some length on the vast needs of the work, and the many opportunities that present themselves for Christian effort in the poorer districts of the great city of London. They could not now carry out their plan of appointing missionaries to the whole of the 11,000 public-houses in the metropolis; at present 6000 of them are being visited. He hoped that by and by the whole number would receive the benefit of visits from the agents of the Mission. The work of the Society did not nearly keep pace with the growth of the population of London. Let there be more prayer, more praise, more effort, and more faith, and the work would go on and prosper.

Bishop Rowley Hill, as an old friend of the City Mission, said he did not forget that friendship when he became a bishop. As an Irishman, he rejoiced to know that the Mission had really grown out of the prayers of some earnest men in Dublin. He thought, therefore, the many Irishmen in our great city deserved the special attention of the agents of the Mission. He felt specially interested in the Mission, because it was a bond of union among all sections of true believers in furthering the work of the Gospel among the masses of the people. The population of this great city was close on five millions, and, as the Chairman had remarked, it was rapidly increasing. All the resources of the churches and chapels were quite inadequate to meet the necessities of the case. The Bishop vigorously expatiated on the combination of evil forces to be found in London, representing all the special obstacles to the spread of the Gospel that were met with in the great cities in the early days of Christianity. As it was then, so it is now: the preaching of a risen and living Saviour is alone fitted to cope with these evils, and bring men out of the darkness of ignorance and vice to the light of faith and obedience. His lordship was greatly applauded when he urged that the Gospel message was the same, and the power was the same, as that which did such wonderful things in the first days of the Christian Church. Christ wept over the city of Jerusalem because it was blind to the day of its visitation. Now is the day of grace for mighty London; let such agencies as this Society be so well supported that every house shall be visited, and every man shall hear the Gospel message, and thus be without excuse when the day of London's judgment comes.

Rev. W. E. Hurndall said we had heard of the "Bitter Cry of Outcast London;" how much more bitter would that cry have been but for the work of the City Mission! Speaking from his own experience of the missionaries, he said they were wonderful fellows for preaching the Gospel. They had to mix with all sorts and conditions of men, and they deserve our deepest sympathy in their arduous work. Mr. Hurndall essayed to be very humorous, but he overdid it somewhat; while expressing, in no measured terms, his high appreciation of the work of those devoted men who spend their lives in carrying the light of the Gospel into the dark places of the Great City.

The speech that followed from Mr. Baker, one of the missionaries, was a rare treat indeed. There must have been few dry eyes and few unmoved hearts in the great audience as this good man graphically told, out of a full heart, some of his experiences in a low district, and how the Lord had given him to see not a few trophies of saving grace as the fruit of his plodding, patient work. The story of the conversion of Whitby, the coster, in Princes-place, was a really thrilling one, and ought to be published broadcast as an encouragement to all workers among the ignorant and vicious poor.

After a few hearty and judicious words from Rev. R. C. Billing, there was another excellent little report of work from Mr. Grimmett, who has been missionary to London cabmen for the last thirty-six years. What wise and sagacious men these City missionaries are, if the two who spoke are fair specimens of them. Their recitals of practical experience in the work are far more powerful arguments for the Mission than the most eloquent platform speeches by outsiders, and we could have wished that more time had been allotted to the missionaries themselves. The City Mission is doing a magnificent work in the greatest mission field in the world, and it ought to receive the most profuse and steady support.

A YOUNG MEN'S SEASIDE HOME.

AMONG the seaside holiday resorts that lie convenient to the metropolis, Margate has for long held a high place, for the bracing and restorative properties of its position on the coast. It is a fast favourite with those who cannot indulge in a lengthened holiday, and wish to make the most of their time. Among this class may be reckoned the many young men engaged in commercial pursuits in London. In order to provide for these a suitable and finely situated building, formerly used as a hotel, was secured by Mr. George Williams, of St. Paul's-churchyard, and opened under the name of Shaftesbury House some three years ago, the furniture being given by Mr. Samuel Morley.

Since then, under the excellent superintendence of Mr. and Mrs. Armatage, Shaftesbury House has been largely patronised by young men making holiday. It has been, we believe, not only a pleasant place of sojourn by the sea, but a Christian home in the truest sense of the word, where congenial fellowship and an all-pervasive spiritual influence have been experienced and enjoyed by those under its friendly roof. Mr. and Mrs. Owens Mell have recently assumed the superintendence of the House, in place of Mr. and Mrs. Armatage, and in their hands the well-established traditions of the place will be fully preserved.

One of our representatives paid a too brief visit to it the other week, and was greatly charmed with the Home, its splendid situation, its internal appointments and general surroundings. Nothing seemed lacking to complete the comfort and well-being of any young man who loves the bracing breezes from the sea, and who wishes to be surrounded with the best and most elevating influences. Business young men and their friends who are contemplating a near holiday season will find it advantageous both to body and to spirit to secure accommodation in Shaftesbury House; this they can do by communicating with any Y.M.C.A. Secretary, or Mr. Owens Mell, the esteemed manager; he and his partner in life are devoting themselves heart and soul to the happiness of those who sojourn under their roof.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE.—The Lord Mayor last week opened a bazaar at the Cannon-street Hotel, in aid of the building fund of the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel, the foundation stone of the new premises of which was recently laid by the late Lord Mayor. His Lordship expressed his gratification at the satisfactory character of the work being done at the Institute, and hoped that the result of the Bazaar would be to relieve the Committee from debt. Mr. Sheriff Whitehead, Mr. Sheriff Phillips, and Sir Robert Carden afterwards addressed the assembly. During the course of the ceremony, several purses containing donations, amounting together to £50, were handed to the Lady Mayoress. The topstone of the new building was formally placed on Saturday afternoon, and a meeting for prayer and praise was subsequently held; particulars in our next.

Letters to the Editor.

"BAPTISMS AND LAYING ON OF HANDS."

Sir,—The writers of the New Testament have in various instances, when speaking of a doctrine that had been prefigured by symbol under the former dispensation, named both the doctrine, and also, by way of allusion, or to show that it had been prefigured, have named the symbol by which the doctrine was prefigured. Thus, the doctrine of "baptisms" or "washings" (R.V.) at the consecration of priests (Exodus xxix. 4; xl. 12, 30), prefigured the great spiritual change of repentance from dead works; the laying-on of hands on the heads of the different offerings (Leviticus i. and iii.) prefigured faith towards God in the one great Sacrifice of which these offerings were figures.

If the words "of the doctrines of baptisms (or washings) and laying on of hands" be read as a parenthesis, showing that the great doctrines of repentance and faith were clearly prefigured under the law, the beauty of the passage in the Hebrews as enumerating the four great principles of the doctrine of Christ, namely, repentance, faith, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment, will be made more evident.

An instance of a similar usage of stating both the doctrine and its symbol under the law will be seen in Hebrews x. 22. W. B. H.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

Sir,—Notwithstanding the fact that this Bill is drawn on the lines suggested by the Committee of the House of Lords after a most exhaustive inquiry, as evidenced by the report of July, 1881, also that the Bill has passed the House of Lords three times (though dropped twice in the Commons), this measure unhappily still remains in the greatest jeopardy of being again lost on the second reading.

Surely there is great urgency for such a measure being speedily passed into law. Its provisions are:—

(1) To protect the most friendless of girls up to the age of fifteen.*

(2) To increase the power of removal from the streets of obtrusively immoral characters.

(3) To enforce the closing of houses of known bad repute.

Is it too much to state that it is the duty of every Christian to seek to avert the loss of this important Bill? The ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth are still open to the cries of his people, in relation to this as well as all other matters pertaining to the moral welfare of the people. Heads of families will do well to write to Members of Parliament at once, and implore them to give the measure their active support. Petitions to Parliament are easily drawn, may be expressed in a very few words, and they do carry some weight.

Observers of the course of public events of recent years will have noticed this fact, that there has been a diminution of all legislative Acts for the promotion of the social and moral welfare of the people, and I fear that if this important measure is not secured now there will be little prospect of its becoming law under the new Parliament probably for some time.—Your obedient servant,

London. Edward William Thomas.

* Personally, I am of opinion that the age ought to be raised to sixteen or even seventeen.

OUTRAGE ON AN ENGLISH MISSIONARY.—Papers received last week from China contain details of an outrage committed recently at Luchow Fee on Mr. Burnett, a missionary representing the National Bible Society of Scotland. Mr. Burnett put up at an inn in the centre of the city, and on the people learning of his presence, a public notification by persons beating gongs was made that the inn was to be attacked for the purpose of killing the "Foreign Devil" and all his staff. At a late hour that night the house was broken into. Mr. Burnett and his party were dragged into the street, and Mr. Burnett was savagely beaten with bamboos over the head and body. Watching his opportunity, and with blood streaming from his wounds, he succeeded in escaping from the crowd in the dark, and on returning to the house he discovered that all his clothing had been stolen, and that two of his assistants had had their clothes torn from their backs. Complaint having been made to the district magistrate, that functionary informed Mr. Burnett that he was himself to blame for putting up at an inn of his own choosing. He afterwards offered Mr. Burnett pecuniary compensation for his losses on condition that he did not say anything about the outrage which had been committed on him, and on Mr. Burnett leaving the city for Wuhu to represent the matter to the consul, he had to be furnished with an escort to protect him from further injury.

DR. THEODORE CUYLER.

THE announcement in your paper, that I proposed to make a brief visit to England, has brought me already several kind invitations to address public meetings. Please allow me to say that I do not expect to come until July, and (except an occasional Sabbath sermon) I shall not be able to take part in any public services. My Brooklyn church kindly voted to me a four months' vacation for entire rest, and, as they have never padlocked my lips before, I must respect their wishes and my own promises, and endeavour to recruit thoroughly for another campaign of labour for the blessed Master.

You may remember that our celebrated Dr. Edward Payson once playfully remarked that if the devil could not get rid of a zealous Christian in any other way, he tempted him to kill himself by overwork, and thus made a short end of him.

If I cannot address any of your religious gatherings I hope to get a hand-shake with some of the beloved workers, whom we always think of when we think of dear old Mother Britain. Let me also add that we, in America, are fervently praying that God will guide, by his infinite wisdom, your Premier, and vouchsafe to him and to your great Christian nation the sublime and solid victories of international peace.

Ever yours in Christ Jesus,
Brooklyn, U.S.A. Theodore L. Cuyler.

EX-INSPECTOR MINAHAN.

A BRIEF paragraph in our last issue referred to a public testimonial proposed to be presented to this gentleman, recently in the police service. The following extract from The Sentinel for June will explain the circumstances that have led to this proposal:—

"Several correspondents have suggested that some public recognition should be made of the courage and fidelity to duty of ex-Inspector Minahan. We heartily concur in that suggestion. After twenty years' service he was degraded in rank, and practically driven out of the Metropolitan Police Force without a pension because his honesty reflected on the criminality of his brother officers. If he had not been true to the public interest and the cause of righteousness, Mrs. Jeffries might at this moment be carrying on her diabolical trade unchecked, under the patronage of some whose influence can make and unmake higher officials than Inspectors of Police. Since his fruitless appeals to the Home Secretary for an independent and impartial investigation into his case, he has had to suffer a great deal, including personal violence for the part he has taken in the Jeffries prosecution. Surely the conduct of a man like this deserves public gratitude.

"It has been decided, therefore, to open a subscription to present him in a public manner with a pecuniary testimonial. We ask the readers of these lines each to help to make it a substantial one. Contributions may be sent to either of the following:—The Editor of The Sentinel, care of Dyer Brothers, Paternoster-square; Messrs. Morgan & Scott, publishers of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C."

MR. JAMES C. PARKER has commenced work as lay-missionary, under the auspices of the local ministers, in the hotels and public-houses at Hastings and St. Leonards.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE commenced a Gospel Temperance Mission at Highgate on Saturday last, in a large tent, situated in "The Grove." An extensive procession of sympathisers, led by four bands, marched to the hall for the opening service, which was very successful. On Sunday the service was of an evangelistic character.

EMIGRATION OF DEAF AND DUMB.—Miss J. E. Groom, replying to Dr. Armitage's recent criticism in our columns on her project for emigrating indigent deaf and dumb persons, says she is making arrangements for associating these afflicted ones with persons in possession of hearing and speech, so that the evils of congregating them together may be avoided. She considers that her scheme for transplanting these deaf mutes to Canada will obviate many of the difficulties they have to contend with in this overcrowded land. Miss Groom will be glad to answer any inquiries addressed to her at the Mission-room, Morley Hall, Hackney, E.

Notices of Books, &c.

SOME JUNE MAGAZINES.

Old Jonathan has a very pretty frontispiece representing "A Stray Lamb," and the usual supply of profitable articles.

The English Illustrated Magazine has an article by Miss Dorothy Tennant, exquisitely written and illustrated, on "The London Ragamuffin."

The Christian Treasury has articles. poems, or narratives by Rev. R. Glover, Mrs. F. West, Revs. J. G. Small, C. H. Spurgeon, Wm. Luff, Mrs. Poole, Dr. H. Bonar, &c.

The Illustrated Missionary News takes a bird's-eye view of mission work at home and abroad. A portrait with sketch of the life of Dr. Moffat has the place of honour.

The Monthly Review has a special article on "The Y.M.C.A. in Japan;" Dr. Clifford's address on "Intellectual Temptations" lately delivered at Exeter Hall, besides reports, intelligence, &c.

The Sunday Magazine. Among the notable papers in the current issue are a sketch of the late Mr. Baldwin Brown, by Rev. William Dorling, and an admirable, impressive paper on "The Secret of True Greatness," by Dr. S. Cox.

The Sentinel (1*d. Dyer Bros.*) is causing no small sensation by its outspoken words on the recent so-called trial and punishment of Mrs. Jeffries, the procuress, and by giving a list of the names of some of her titled and high-placed accomplices.

Part of Mrs. Bayly's important paper on "Danger Signals," read at a recent Y.W.C.A. Conference, is reproduced in Woman's Work in the Great Harvest Field, and may be commended to the serious attention of those to whom is entrusted the training of the young.

Church Missionary Society. The Intelligencer and Record (6d.), besides a full report of the recent annual meeting, has articles on Corea, India, and Lagos; with varied "Notes of the Month." The Gleaner (1d.) and The Juvenile Instructor (½d.), are full of stimulating and interesting matter.

Mr. Bullock's three magazines show no signs of decadence. The Fireside (6d.) has a wonderful variety of bright and readable papers, including sketches of the late Earl Cairns and George Smith, of Coalville. Home Words and The Day of Days are excellent pennyworths of home reading.

To this month's Sword and Trowel (3d. Passmore & Alabaster) Mr. Spurgeon does not contribute any set article, but provides a number of sparkling paragraphs. The bulk of the ordinary number is made up of book reviews and notices, while a supplement gives the annual report of the Pastors' College.

Good Words has a very full supply of papers of special interest. A vigorous essay on "Emerson," by that young but gifted writer, A. Birrell, vies perhaps in interest with Mary Howitt's "Reminiscences." "The Making of a Newspaper" will enlighten and please many readers of the daily broad sheets; while philanthropists will turn instinctively to Mr. Mitchell's paper on "Neglected Children."

The Sunday at Home (Religious Tract Society) has an interesting article on George Tinworth, the Biblical "painter in terra-cotta," with specimens of his famous bas-reliefs. Mr. J. F. Crump furnishes some rather far-fetched philosophisings on "The Lesson of a Tricycle Wheel." Miss M. Whately recounts the sorrows and the hardships of the daughters of Egypt. The Leisure Hour has an article on "Work and Rest," giving "practical hints on the savings of women," and another on "Rational Feeding."

Cassell & Co. We have already noted the Dean of Canterbury's paper in The Quiver on the Revised Old Testament. Among the other interesting articles in the same number are Dr. Stoughton's "Sunday Thoughts in Rome," Dr. Roberts on "The Beloved Disciple," and a sketch of the free breakfasts at Colliers' Rents. Portraits, neither of them very successful, of Mr. George Williams and Mrs. Hilton, find a place among the "Short Arrows." Old and New London is concluded. The Peoples of the World gives many details as to the history and peculiarities of the Celtic races. The Countries of the World take the reader to the prairies of the Western States. We have also received the issues of Dr. Geike's Life and Words of Christ. Dr. Ellicot's Old Testament Commentary (of special interest at this juncture), The Encyclopædia Dictionary (a perfect marvel of philological lore), Magazine of Art, Household Guide, &c.

S. W. Partridge & Co. The Welcome gives an illustrated description of the gigantic railway bridge now being built over the Firth of Forth, a coloured view of Langdale Pikes, in the Lake district, sketches of Boston, U.S., and Barnstaple, &c. The British Workman has for its large engraving a touching representation of the death of Lieutenant Rawson at Tel-el-Keber, after having successfully guided the British forces to the scene of action. The evils of the drink trade among the fishermen of the North Seas are told from personal observation, by Mr. W. C. Miles. In The Family Friend we have an engraving (with article by Rev. J. Wilkinson) of M. Rabinowitch, the Bessarabian Christian Jew, looking from Mount Olivet on Jerusalem. The "Hints to Mothers" about children's dress ought to be useful. Miss S. M. Nugent tells in The Friendly Visitor of one who enjoyed "perfect peace in pain"; a poem, by Miss Charlotte Murray, is illustrated by W. J. Webb. The Children's Friend and The Band of Hope Review are most attractive, and the first picture in The Infant's Magazine, "Dolly's Doctor," is an exquisite bit of humour.

CANON WILBERFORCE.—It was stated on Sunday evening that Canon Wilberforce's condition remained much the same. By order of his medical advisers he will be removed to the country as early as possible.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For Gospel services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Coleford, June 13, 14, and 15. For a rich blessing on Mr. Aitken's Mission in St. Silas' parish, Birmingham. For blessing on a mission by Henry Lakin at Drury-lane.

REV. DR. MACLAREN, the popular pastor of Union Chapel, Oxford-road, having been invited to occupy the chair of Hebrew at Regent's-park College, London, and also to become co-pastor with Rev. J. P. Chown, at Bloomsbury Chapel, a letter has been received intimating that he had decided to remain in Manchester.

THE SOL-FA SYSTEM.—At the recent annual meeting of the Tonic Sol-Fa College, in Exeter Hall Mr. Proudman, dropping the baton for once, delivered a telling speech, describing how by means of the Tonic Sol-Fa System he was able to bring music to bear upon the boys and girls rescued by the different agencies from vice and poverty.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—The Circus services, commenced by Captain Robertson, have now closed for the season, the final service being conducted by Captain Chapman, of Windermere. The effort will be continued by Sunday Gospel services at the Central Hall and the hall of the Y.M.C.A. Many have received definite blessing at these Circus meetings.

CLERGY REST HOUSE, BOURNEMOUTH WEST.—There are many touching applications for a share in the benefits of this retreat, but in most cases the applicants are unable to defray the cost of their stay. Christian friends who are in a position to sympathise with these toiling ministerial brethren and their families, are earnestly invited to help; the lady superintendent is Mrs. Litchfield Layton.

UTOPIA FOUND.—The long-sought-for Utopia, says The Graphic, evidently exists in New England, the little town of Denysville, in Maine. For sixteen years not one inhabitant between the age of one and twenty has died there, not a drop of liquor has been sold for the same period, and no fire has occurred for sixty years. There is no railroad near, so that Denysville remains in a state of perfect simplicity.

SUFFOLK EVANGELISTIC TENT.—The summer campaign in connection with this tent commenced with a conference of Christian workers and others, at Wrentham, on Thursday last. Mr. J. Vincent, on whose land the tent stood, presided, and suitable addresses were given, afternoon and evening, by Revs. E. Savory, S. Kingdom, L. Price, and J. H. Clowes. Prayer is asked that the tent work during the summer may be richly blessed.

SUNDAY LABOUR IN VIENNA.—The late Reichsrath passed a law regulating the hours of labour in shops, factories, and mines, and ordering that Sundays and certain religious festivals should be observed as days of rest. The Act comes into force on the 11th inst., and the official journal publishes a list of exemptions which the law authorised the Government to establish. Twenty-eight trades and professions are totally or partially exempted from the obligation of rest on the legal holidays. Twelve of these, butchers, bakers, innkeepers, &c., are exempted under conditions. Seven, including the owners and drivers of public conveyances and undertakers, have a total exemption for the public convenience. Printers and compositors have no exemption, so that the publication of Monday morning newspapers must cease unless the Government alter their decree.

Notes on Daily Readings.

JUNE 11.—I CORINTHIANS I.

v. 2.—"Called to be saints." This does not mean called with a view of afterwards becoming saints, but saints in virtue of the call they have received, just as the similar expression, "Called to be an apostle," does not mean that the apostleship was attained subsequently to the call, but that he became an apostle by virtue of the call.

v. 8.—"Who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ."—"Shall keep you steadfast unto the end, so as to be unimpeached in the day of our Lord; for when the saints stand before the tribunal of Christ, they will not, indeed, be found to have been free from sin in their earthly life, but having persevered in the faith, and in good works, will find themselves under the wing and shelter of God's righteousness, safe from all impeachment."—Canon Evans in "The Speaker's Commentary."

v. 11.—"There are contentions among you."—The Greek word here used, "schisms," shows that the Scriptural idea of "schism" is not so much separation from the Church, as dissension within it.

v. 12.—"I am of Paul; and I of Apollos," &c.—There can be no doubt that the names of teachers, however eminent, should not be made a rallying-point for churches. The names of Luther, Calvin, and Wesley have been sadly misused in this respect, and that in a way that probably none would have lamented more than these eminent Christians themselves.

v. 30.—The R.V. gives the order of the words correctly, "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who was made unto us wisdom from God," &c.—"He became wisdom to us from God," i.e., wisdom from God for us to receive. But this abstract counsel or wisdom of the Father, which was planned by Him before the ages were made, and which in the sphere of time became concrete in the Incarnate Son, what was it? What it more precisely was, both in its embodiment in Christ and in its relation to us men, is further defined in three heads. The eternal purpose is drawn out of its secret depths (so to speak) like a telescope of three lenses, in three evolutions each in its own place: (1) Righteousness, (2) Sanctification, (3) Redemption (i.e. of the body together with the soul and spirit in the resurrection of the saints at the Parousia)."—Canon Evans.

JUNE 12.—I CORINTHIANS II.

vv. 2, 3.—"For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling."—The reason of this determination may be traced in what is recorded in Acts xvii. of his comparative failure at Athens. There adopting (it may have been) a policy of undue concession to the wisdom of this world, he makes no mention of the cross, but of the judgment and resurrection only, and the result is comparatively one of failure, for we only read, "Howbeit certain men clave unto him, and believed: among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them" (Acts xvii. 34).

v. 7.—"But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory."—"This latter clause contains much in little. This manifold wisdom, in all its reaches of height, and depth, and length, and breadth, 'the only wise God' did before the institution of the ages foreordain with a view to the glory of us. The glory of the elect was the final aim (1) of creation, (2) of redemption. To the Divine mind, the sequence of ideas was (1) the glory, (2) redemption for that glory, (3) creation for the redemption for that glory."—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 9.—"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."—These words are often quoted of the joys of heaven, but here it manifestly refers to the things of salvation now made known by the Spirit: "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit."

v. 13.—"Comparing spiritual things with spiritual."—The simplest meaning, and that most in accord with the context, is that given in the margin (R. V.), "interpreting spiritual things to spiritual men."

JUNE 13.—I CORINTHIANS III.

v. 7.—"So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase." "Is everything," is the idea to be supplied.

v. 8.—"Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one."—"Viewed in the light of subordination to the High God, they are just one element. Like one bough of two branches, or one fork of two prongs, Paul and Apollos are both together in the hand of the Almighty one ministerial implement, disparting into two distinct lines of office, that of planting or founding a church and that of nurturing and edifying the same."—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 9.—"We are labourers together with God."—R. V., by giving the emphatic position which it has in the Greek to the word "God," makes the sense clearer. "We are God's fellow-workers; ye are God's husbandry, God's building."

v. 12.—"If any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones (costly stones, R.V.), wood, hay, stubble."—It is a much controverted point whether these represent doctrines or persons. The words of v. 9, "Ye are God's building," goes far to settle the question, for there can be no doubt that here persons are regarded as the materials of which the temple is composed. Nevertheless doctrines are so far involved that where truth is taught, true genuine discipleship, which will stand the test of "that day" will follow. One who like the Apostle faithfully taught the necessity of "repentance towards God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts xx. 21), would not be likely to have much "wood, hay, and stubble" amongst his converts. Whilst those teachers who slur over the necessity of being born again, or rest satisfied with a mere profession, must expect much of their work (i.e., their professed converts) to be burnt up in that day: not only so, but the teachers themselves must be tested, as well as their converts, and this seems to be the meaning of "if any man's (i.e., teacher's) work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss (i.e., of his supposed converts); but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire" (i.e., if he himself stand the same test). This is a solemn word for teachers, for it is of them that the whole passage speaks. To those who are faithful there is a reward, which from 1 Thess. ii. 19 would seem to be their converts standing so as to be in that day their "joy and crown of rejoicing."

JUNE 14.—I CORINTHIANS IV.

v. 4.—"For I know nothing by myself."—"This phrase," says "The Speaker's Commentary," "means in old English 'I am not conscious of any (evil).' The reason of this elliptical mode of speech is purely ethical: the conscience in mankind oftener accuses than excuses or approves. It is not necessary to say no evil, but it is enough to say nothing." As this text is often quoted in the controversy as to the possibility of attaining sinlessness in this life, it is well to remember that the context fairly limits the application of the words to ministerial faithfulness.

v. 7.—"Who maketh thee to differ," &c.—"After this the Apostle now breaks out into fiery vehemence; he thunders in sarcasms, hurling flash after flash in sharp peals of wholesome invective. The aim and end of this moral thunder is to clear the ethical atmosphere from sectarian pride. 'But if thou didst receive (as thou didst), why boastest thou as though thou didst not receive?' Receive, i.e., knowledge of salvation and spiritual gifts by means of our ministrations: in the foreground stand the Apostles, in the high background Christ; beyond and above Him, God."—Speaker's Commentary.

v. 8.—"Now ye are full," &c. Canon Evans puts it pointedly: "'Already sated are ye! Already grown rich! Apart from us ye attained to kingship.' We Apostles did think that the Messianic fulness of joy and endowment of the inheritance and enthronement of the saints all belonged to another æon (age)."

v. 15.—"For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel."—This text was used the other day by Canon Liddon for a consecration sermon, as if it justified the application of the word "father" to bishops, because here so applied by the Apostle to himself. But it is plain that it is not of his apostleship he is here speaking, but of his spiritual fatherhood of his converts in the Gospel, and as such the word "father" may be applied to every Christian man, woman, or child who may be blessed to the conversion of another. If bishops preach the Gospel, and are used to the conversion of souls, they are so far "fathers in Christ" to those "born again" by their preaching, but no further; and any minister, evangelist, or Sunday-school teacher may be the same.

JUNE 15.—I CORINTHIANS V.

v. 5.—"To deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh," &c.—Why Satan should be here brought in as the instrument of the "destruction of the flesh" would seem to be somewhat explained by the Book of Job, as well as by 1 Tim. i. 20, not to say Acts v. 1—11. Though now not the accuser of the brethren before God (Rev. xii. 10), as he was in Old Testament times, yet still as a roaring lion he goeth about seeking whom he may devour; and though he cannot finally hinder the salvation of a child of God ("that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus"), he may inflict grievous bodily affliction, as in Job's case. In that of the man referred to here, his final salvation is expressly provided for in the sentence pronounced, and his subsequent repentance, as we know, even saved him from this sentence being carried out.

v. 7.—"Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened."—"This leaven of vice must be at once purged out of the 'lump' of the Church. Why? Because the feast of the true Passover has already commenced. The real Paschal Lamb was slain in Christ. What? Leaven in dough was there ever when the lamb of the law was slain? Impossible! Immorality in the Church of Christ now that the Lamb of God has been sacrificed? Impossible!"—Speaker's Commentary.

JUNE 16.—I CORINTHIANS IV.

v. 1.—"Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints?" The Greek word for "dare" is rendered in Liddell and Scott's Lexicon "to have the heart for," and this would be a far better rendering here than "dare." "Have any of you, having a matter against another, the heart to go to law," &c. How far this appeal to what Christians "have the heart to do" is applicable in the present state of the professing Christian Church, is not so easy to determine. Our judges and courts of law have been till lately at least professedly Christian; now, even this is being altered, and Jews eminent as lawyers, and even avowed infidels, are to be found on the judgment-seat.

v. 11.—"But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God."—These verbs are all in the past tense, and refer to the change of state both before God and before men which took place at their conversion, and its outward profession baptism; though the washing is not, of course, the mere washing of water, but that thereby represented, baptism into Christ's death—the only "fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness."

v. 14.—"For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife," &c.—That is, outwardly, so that their living together is not now forbidden, as under the Jewish law it would have been for a Jewess to live with a heathen. Canon Evans says, "is externally sanctified. His status is a hallowed status. His surroundings only are hallowed; brought out of darkness, he is in the light, but the light is not in him." This outward hallowing is all that is meant in the case of the "children" of whom it is said, "but now are they holy," i.e., need not be put away, as in Ezra x. 5.

v. 21.—"Art thou called being a servant? (bond-servant, R.V.) care not for it: but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather."—Does this mean "use the slavery in preference to the possible freedom," or "use the freedom which it is in your power to attain"? Canon Evans (no mean authority) decides in favour of the latter, and explains it to mean, "Avail thyself of the power or opportunity of becoming free."

v. 35.—"That ye may attend upon the Lord without distraction."—The two Greek words for "attend upon" and "without distraction" are those which occur in Luke x. 39, 40, of Mary, who sat at the Lord's feet and heard his word, and of Martha, who was "cumbered" (distracted, R.V.) with much serving. The thought evidently is that Mary's part is the one which the Christian should seek to attain, "that good part which shall not be taken away."

⁂ A correspondent asks for the passages referred to in the notes on Romans ix., where Pharaoh's hardening his own heart is spoken of before God is said to harden his heart as a judicial consequence. The passages are Exod. vii. 13, 14, 22, viii. 15, 32, ix. 7: in none of which God is the agent, though the first might seem to be so; but on the words, "he hardened Pharaoh's heart," "The Speaker's Commentary" says, "Or, 'Pharaoh's heart was hardened.' The word is here used intransitively, as in many passages; thus all the Ancient Versions." The first passage where God is said to harden Pharaoh's heart (for iv. 21 and vii. 3 are prophetic announcements only) is ix. 12, and this is followed by five other similar statements in x. 1, 20, 27; xi. 10; xiv. 8.

SCANDINAVIAN SAILORS.—The Pall Mall Gazette of Monday contains a long and admirable sketch of Miss Hedenstrom and her work in Leman-street, among Scandinavian seamen in London.

LITTLEHAMPTON.—Sir,—Captain Drury is now here on behalf of the Children's Special Service Mission, and is holding morning meetings on the beach. He opened his commission on Sunday afternoon, at St. Saviour's Church, and the service was well attended.—Yours truly, St. Saviour's Parsonage. W. H. Simms.

Y.M.C.A., GLASGOW.—On Tuesday, Mr. C. King addressed 700 young men in the large hall of the Christian Institute, on "The Stage and its Influence." He dwelt on the evil tendencies of the theatre, and drew a dark picture of the lives of many actors and actresses. On Friday, June 5, a large company of young men listened to Mr. King, on "Immorality and True Manhood." The address was practical and searching, and calculated to do much good in guarding young men from dangers to which they are constantly exposed.

HOUSE OF REST, KILBURN.—Prayer was made at the all-day meeting, on the 5th inst., on behalf of the Lord's work, that all needed supplies may be given. The continual inflow of Christian workers to the House of Rest, both at Kilburn and Eastbourne, make a continuous stream of supply necessary. Some very helpful words were spoken by Mr. Collis, Rev. G. D. Bartlet, and others. To those whose "minds are stayed upon God" a prolonged season of waiting upon Him in earnest, believing prayer, always proves time gained, not lost, to service.

MR. HAMMOND IN SHEFFIELD.

A HEARTY welcome was given to the evangelist on his arrival in Sheffield by a large number of friends assembled in Queen-street Chapel, on Saturday week. A letter was read from Dr. A. Bonar, Glasgow, on behalf of the Evangelistic Association there, telling of the blessing that had followed the meetings in that city.

The following day Mr. Hammond began his services in Zion Chapel, Attercliffe, where they were continued for some days, with many tokens of decided blessing. One of the local pastors, in writing to us with respect to the meetings, says they afford a favourable opportunity for children who have already decided to make a public profession; he had himself met with several cases of this description.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to God, their own Father and Mother, and true Bible Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d.,

contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables Parents to teach one child or a family of twelve children, Teachers to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, Educated Ladies to teach all ages, or Ministers without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the

"ALL ISRAEL SHALL BE SAVED."
BY
ADOLPH SAPHIR, B.A., D.D.,
Author of "Christ and the Scriptures," &c., &c.

With Preface by Professor Delitzsch.
Demy 8vo. Price SIXPENCE.

"'All Israel Shall Be Saved.' This, then, is the end—the consummation of the history of Israel. After a long period of unbelief and of guilt, there will at last be conversion and renewal. After a long period, during which they are scattered and under the chastisement of God, there will at last be national restoration and glory. Ichabod, the glory has departed. But at last the glory will return, never to depart again; and the name of Jerusalem shall be 'Jehovah Shammah,' 'The Lord is there.' The God of glory appeared unto Abraham; and the God of glory will appear again to the seed of Abraham. All Israel shall be saved!"—Extract.

CASE in the SHETLAND ISLES, N.B.*

William Smith, Jun., of Greive's House, Sand Lodge, Sandwich, Shetland, writing me for books for several new patients on March 23, 1885, reports concerning himself: "I am very thankful to say I am quite well. Your treatment entirely cured me."

On referring to the record of this case, I find that he commenced with my medicine, &c., in the May twelvemonth before. He had then been five months ill. Symptoms: Cough (very bad at night, with expectoration, soreness of the chest, breathing very short, pains in both lungs, appetite gone, general weakness, loss of flesh, &c. "I saw," he says, "a recommendation of your treatment in the Christian Age."

* There is no part of the British Empire, however remote, but where I have correspondents.

TESTIMONY of Rev. W. J. TOMKINS, The Manse, RIDGMOUNT (BEDS.)

"My wife has recovered from the attack of Bronchitis and found relief from a most distressing cough by taking the medicine sent. In several other cases where it has been tried in this neighbourhood it has proved invaluable."

THE

FOR INSTANTANEOUS PHOTOGRAPHY.

THE widespread interest created by the excellent exhibits of Photographic Apparatus at the INTERNATIONAL INVENTIONS EXHIBITION, and the ever-increasing demand for something really practical, and yet cheap, has induced us to at last bring out the

which is the outcome of nearly two years of study and experiments. It has been easy enough to manufacture Photographic Apparatus, but a far different thing to bring out a really good article, at a price that would meet the wants and pockets of amateurs. We have now succeeded, however, but wish it to be thoroughly understood that nothing short of a sale of some thousands will enable us to make them and sell them at the price. We cannot afford to lose money, which we shall certainly do if only a few dozens are sold. Consequently, we will only undertake to execute orders that reach us within 28 days. This will give us sufficient time to see if the demand will pay, and if it does not, we shall then stop the sale. We, however, believe that the demand will be enormous, otherwise this advertisement would never have appeared. With this Camera persons can photograph their friends, pet animals, houses, scenery, &c. It is often inconvenient for one to have to dress and go to a photographer, at a certain time. All this is now done away with. Whenever you feel inclined to take a person's photograph, or have your own taken, bring out the Camera, and it is done at once. To avoid all misunderstanding, let it be understood this Camera will really take photographs, not simply copy them; and all chemicals, &c., are given with it. Do not confound this with other Cameras, which, although advertised at much higher prices, yet have no accessories, but after you get the Camera you have to spend a large sum of money for chemicals and other apparatus. This one we sell is complete.

The Amateur's Photographic Camera measures 6 in. square, and consists of a strong, well-made Camera, powerful Lens, Brass Fittings, Brass Cap, Focussing Tube, Dark Shutter and Slide, Focussing Glass, Packet of Dry Plates, Packet of Sensitised Paper, two Bottles of Developing Solution, Bottle Gold Solution, Box of Fixing Crystals, Cards for Mounting, Printing Frame, Elastic Bands, Glass Roller, and full instructions complete. Carriage free, 15s. This apparatus will really take perfect Photographs indoors or outdoors. For Travellers, Bicyclists, who wish to carry away with them views of lovely spots they visit, for Ladies and Gentlemen, for Mechanics for taking Photographs of Models, and for a thousand and one other things, these Cameras are unrivalled. Specimen of Portrait taken, post free, six stamps.

All Orders must be sent within 28 days (except from abroad), and customers will oblige by sending the Coupon below with their order.

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,
10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but hee time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The under-mentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED ON HIGH GROUND, WITH VIEWS OF THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this school that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS, together with the papers of Examinations passed and Honours gained, should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Principal, Essex House, Cecil-street, Margate.

I can most strongly recommend it as a Christian home, conducted on evangelical principles, where every care is taken of the boys, both as to health and education, they being treated as members of the family. Quite young children are also received for parents going abroad. I will gladly give any further information.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to God, their own Father and Mother, and true Bible Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d.,

contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables Parents to teach one child or a family of twelve children, Teachers to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, Educated Ladies to teach all ages, or Ministers without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the

Professor HENRY DRUMMOND, Author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," says:—

"I have come to think of Boll, since visiting it, as in many ways one of the most interesting places in Europe—interesting not only for its natural loveliness, its past history, its warm fellowships and cherished memories, but for its noble testimony to Christian faith, and for the problems in the deepest things of life and truth which it leaves for after years to solve. And certainly no holiday could be better spent than with the little colony of God's people, who are always to be found gathered round the old pastor, whose life work all these years has been this beautiful and mysterious ministry of prayer.

"The good pastor himself, alas! since these words were first transcribed from my note-book, has been gathered to his rest. He was a remarkable man, and leaves a work behind him too remarkable to cease. And though the visitor now will miss the characteristic figure, he will find there still the same spirit and faith."

"FAITH-HEALING."

NOTES ON THE RECENT CONFERENCE.

OUR good friend, Dr. Woods-Smyth, spoke a little sarcastically of those who insisted on keeping their roots of sin. It should, however, be remembered that this now somewhat hackneyed phrase is theirs, not ours. It originated in the illustration of conversion as sin cut down, and sanctification as sin pulled up by the roots. We have proof that Dr. Woods-Smyth's dogma is not accepted by some of the chief speakers on the same platform.

Another speaker quoted Mark xi. 24.—"What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them;" and added, "Do not ask if it be his will, but ask for it because He has said it is his will." But where has He absolutely said that this or that person shall be healed? or that it is his will that every believer shall be healed? Was it some defect in the prayer of Paul that prevented the thorn in the flesh being taken away? Ought he absolutely to have claimed its removal? Would it have been better for him, or for us, if he had thus obtained relief?

One lady said she never did believe her Father intended her to be in pain. How different is this love of long and painless life to that of John, our brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience in Jesus. How apparently inconsistent with the readiness of Paul to be offered up; of Peter to put off his tabernacle by crucifixion, as his Lord Jesus Christ had shown him; and of his exhortations to the saints not to think it strange concerning the fiery trial that was to try them; but while they suffered, according to the will of God, to commit the keeping of their souls in well-doing unto Him, their faithful Creator.

"Is the day of miracles past?" was a question asked, and answered in the negative by one of the most intelligent of the speakers at this Conference. But this question cannot be answered by a simple Yes or No. This world is under the providential government of God, and frequently does He interpose in grace and power to deliver his people and to defeat the ungodly. Sometimes these interpositions may appear to us miraculous. But the age of miracles, properly so called, has only occurred twice: viz., in the days of Moses, and of Christ and his apostles, when the miracles were given as credentials necessary to prove, then and through all time, that they were sent from God. When, in Old Testament times, miracles were given subsequently to Moses, they were, for the most part, either typical, as in the case of Joshua (x. 12—14), and Jonah (i., ii.); or were wrought in times of declension, as by Elijah and Elisha, to recall Israel to the worship of the true God.

The multiplication of miracles would not be an evidence of advance, but of decline. God is educating us in faith. The Fall was from faith to sight; the restitution is from sight to faith. Jesus needed no signs or miracles. When there came a voice from heaven, and some said it thundered, and others that an angel spake, Jesus, the Author and Perfecter of Faith, replied, "This voice came not because of Me, but for your sakes." The more spiritual his disciples are, the less their need of miracles. And for the unbelievers the sine quâ non of miracles is that they must be beyond question or suspicion. Tried by such a test, this certainly cannot be regarded as an age of miracles; though there are now, and have been since the Apostles' days, numerous cases in which the prayer of faith has saved the sick.

MR. SIMPSON'S ARTICLE.

A careful examination of the paper on "The Principles of Faith-Healing," by Rev. A. B. Simpson, soon brings to light the point on which he seems to be at issue with the teaching of Scripture. He treats the redemption of the body as something of which we are already in possession. Scripture speaks of it as something yet future: "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body" (Rom. viii. 23).

It is true we are redeemed, "body, soul, and spirit," so far as the payment of the price goes, but there are distinct stages in redemption, so far as relates to our coming into possession. "Christ Jesus was made unto us wisdom from God (so R.V.), both righteousness and sanctification and redemption" (1 Cor. i. 30). This word "redemption" here evidently points to the final stage, that spoken of in Eph. i. 14, where the Holy Spirit is called "the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession;" and again iv. 30, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." It is of this day that the Apostle speaks too in Phil. iii. 21, rendered by the R.V., "Who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory."

There is no allusion whatever to this blessed hope in Mr. Simpson's paper. So far as he speaks of the redemption of the body, he evidently thinks it to be a blessing already possessed. Such words as these seem at least to point to this: "In his own body He has borne all our bodily liabilities for sin [this one would fully grant], and our bodies are set free" ["shall be" is what Scripture teaches]. Again: "A body thus divinely quickened adds tenfold power to the soul, &c." but the quickening of the body is according to Scripture still future: "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by (or because of) his Spirit that dwelleth in you" (Rom. viii. 11).

This is not urged in order to deny that wonderful answers to the prayer of faith are often being granted to God's children, but only to distinguish between the true ground of our now expecting such blessing, and what we think to be false ground; namely, the assumption that the redemption of the body is to the child of God a present possession. Let 2 Cor. v. 4 be looked at, and its testimony is most clear: "We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." See, too, 1 Cor. xv. 42 to end, where the contrast between the natural body with its "corruption," "weakness," and "dishonour," and the spiritual body with its "incorruption," "glory," and "power" is most marked. No less marked is the time when the exchange of one for the other takes place. It is at the Lord's coming, and not before.

IS THE REVELATION JEWISH?—3.

IF the attempt to Judaise the first three chapters of the Revelation fails, it is not more successful at the fourth. It is argued that, assuming the living creatures and elders to symbolise the Church, this vision must relate to events still future, for the Church is still on earth and not in heaven. But the Epistle to the Ephesians teaches that God being rich in mercy, quickened us together with Christ, and raised us up with Him, and made us to sit with Him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus. And the Seer of the Revelation is the Evangelist who records that Jesus, while on earth, claimed to be "the Son of Man who is in heaven." And the same Apostle declares that "as He is, so are we in this world."

In these transcendent visions which constitute the Revelation of Jesus Christ, we might well expect to see the Church represented in her governmental and priestly character in heaven, as well as in her conflicts and sufferings here on earth. And this sufficiently explains why the Living Creatures, the representatives of redeemed creation, specially of the redeemed as the executive ministers of the Great King, and the elders the representatives of the redeemed in their priestly capacity, are seen as in heaven and not on earth.

The Revelation is characterised by three great divisions—the Seven Seals, the Seven Trumpets, and the Seven Vials or Bowls, in which is filled up the wrath of God. Says Archdeacon Lee in the Speaker's Commentary: "The Seal is the symbol of an event still hidden in mystery, but Divinely decreed; and this image is borrowed from Isaiah xxix. 11, 12."

Godet notes that, "As the Seal is the emblem of an event decreed by God—mysterious and still unrevealed; so the Trumpet, when sounded, is more than the simple revelation of an event to come—it is a "manifestation of will, which calls for its speedy accomplishment."

"The Vials," says Archdeacon Lee, "point to the metaphor in chap. xiv. 10, 'The cup of God's anger.' The Vial (cf. Amos vi. 6) was the shallow 'bowl' in which they drew from the larger goblet (Alf. in loc.). For the figure of the pouring out of God's wrath in judgment, see Ps. lxxix. 6; Jer. x. 25; Zeph. iii. 8. The Trumpets (viii. 2, 6) announce judgment on God's enemies; the Vials execute his judgment on the empire of the Beast."

The Trumpet appears to us to represent more than an expression of will. The Seals, having been loosed, a revelation of the course of events has been given down to the appearance of the sign of the Son of Man in heaven, when those who had rejected or neglected Him, and persecuted or neglected his people, cry to the rocks to fall upon them and the hills to cover them, from the wrath of God and of the Lamb. Thus, under the Seals, we have a succinct outline of the chief characteristics of the dispensation, as far as the world is concerned in relation to the Church on earth.

Then the Trumpets intervene between the Seals and the Last Vials of the wrath of God. The declared character of these Vials at once suggests the probability that the Trumpets are intended to warn men of their sinful condition, and to call them to repentance; and reverting to the Old Testament for an explanation of the symbol contained in the Trumpet, we find the Lord commanding Isaiah: "Lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins." And Joel, "Blow the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain."

If, then, the Trumpets are regarded as indicating those judgments which are intended to call men to repentance, it is of deep interest to observe how they represent God as dealing with sin. They are divided into two sections of four and three, the latter being defined as three distinct and several Woes. The main and obvious distinction between the first four and the latter three is that the former represent the judgments as falling on the elements, rather than on man himself. The earth, the sea, the rivers and fountains of water, the sun and moon and stars, are successively the subjects of judgment; but there is no direct judgment on men themselves.

The reverse of this happens under the Woe Trumpets. Under the first, the locusts out of the abyss torment the men who have not the seal of God in their foreheads. Under the second, the four angels are loosed, that they should kill the third part of men. Under the third, the wrath of God is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that He should destroy them which destroy the earth.

These seven Trumpets reveal the way in which God usually deals with men. In the case of Job, for example, Satan is first permitted to smite his possessions and servants, then his children, and finally, with increasing severity, Job himself. In the case of Pharaoh, all the former plagues led up to the night which brought death into every house, and to the ruin at the Red Sea.

Thus, under the first four Trumpets, as we have said, men are affected in those things which surround them, rather than in their own persons. What is the way in which God deals next? First, He delivers them over to their own hearts' lusts (Ps. lxxxi. 12; Rom. i. 24—26). This is the First Woe. Then He inflicts penalties upon them, as when, "while the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled against the people, and the Lord smote the people with a very great plague. And He called the name of that place Kibroth-hattaavah—the graves of lust." This is the Second Woe. Then, lastly, comes the judgment and eternal punishment of the impenitent dead. This is the Third Woe.

In harmony with this, Godet says: "The Trumpets are the supreme call to submission and repentance; the Vials are the chastisements which strike the hardened human race." It must be observed, however, that as under the sixth Trumpet they "repented not," the seventh Trumpet no longer calls to repentance, but announces the final judgment. M.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.—Last week a sale of work was held at the Limehouse Town Hall, in aid of the funds of Mrs. Hilton's well-known Crèche in Stepney-causeway; and also to provide part of the cost of the building of new rooms at the Convalescent and Training Home, in connection with the Crèche, at Feltham. About £400 is the amount immediately required. The Crèche, which was started about fifteen years ago, had done immense good in providing for orphans and neglected children the care and attention which they would not otherwise receive while those who have to earn the bread are away at work. After caring for the temporary wants of these children, it was found necessary to go further still, and consequently the orphanage and convalescent home were started. There are now forty children in the orphanage and twenty in the convalescent home. The bazaar was opened by the Lord Mayor, who testified to the great value of such an institution.

MR. SPURGEON'S NOTE OF WARNING.

In his sermon delivered on the morning of Sunday week (Tabernacle Pulpit, No. 1844), Mr. Spurgeon dwelt on national apostasy and national retribution, as exemplified in the case of Israel; the text was John xii. 37—41. Having described the defection of the Jewish people he proceeded to sound a note of warning as to the present condition of morals in our own land:—

"I AM growingly fearful lest our own country should furnish a parallel to all this. Read the story of England, beginning where you will, and see how gracious God has been to us. Note well our great deliverances, from the destruction of the Spanish Armada to the overthrow of Napoleon. Do not forget how often this little country has been made victorious in wars against great peoples, who thought to swallow her up. Then reflect how God sent the light to us; how the Gospel spread all over England, and how it has in many ways been rejected. How often since the days of Cromwell Rome has been allowed to dim the light of our Protestantism, and how it labours to do so still! See how this people have received the truth of heaven, but again and again have proved false to it, turning at one time to superstition and at another time to infidelity. At this moment we are rich, and despite depression in business, we are less tried by it than any other nation. And what comes of all this mercy but increased sin? Why, at this moment we have sin rampant among us almost beyond precedent. Think how the poor are oppressed and ground down with awful poverty in many parts of this great city. Shall not God avenge the cry of starving women? Worse still, if worse can be: those who dare walk our streets after sundown tell us that Sodom, in its most putrid days, could scarce exceed this metropolis for open vice. To our infinite disgust and horror, the names of certain of the greatest in the land are at this hour openly mentioned in connection with the filthiest debauchery. This is not the place for details, nor can I mention the matter, or even think of it without feeling my very soul on fire. Faithfulness requires plain speech; but it is a hideous evil that the dregs of vice should be the chosen luxury of certain of our hereditary legislators and rulers. Woe unto thee, O land, when thy great ones love the harlot's house! Deep is our shame when we know that our judges are not clear in this matter, but social purity has been put to the blush by magistrates of no mean degree; yea, it is said that the courts of justice have lent themselves to the covering and hushing up of the iniquities of the great. Shall not God be grieved by such a nation as this? He who has read a certain story, which is but too-well known, must have felt his ears tingle and his heart tremble. What is coming over us? What horrible clouds are darkening our skies? There were judges once who would not have suffered the laws to be trampled on by the great, but would have dealt out equal justice to rich and poor; I cannot persuade myself that it will be otherwise now, and yet I fear the worst. O God, have mercy upon the land whose judgment-seats and palaces are defiled with vice.

"This is not all: a general indifference to all religion is creeping over the country; at least over this vast metropolis. Ask those who visit from door to door among our crowded populations, and they will tell you that never before in their life-time were there so few persons attendant upon the means of grace. Street after street of this city scarcely possesses more than one regular attendant upon the preaching of the word. The Sabbath is no longer a day of worship with millions. What continual efforts are made to rob us of the Sabbath-day; to degrade it into a common work-day, and to make a slave of the working-man. To-day the Revelation of God is treated with indifference, or talked of as if it deserved no reverence or credit. Unbelief has sapped the foundations of the social fabric. Worst of all—I must not hold back the charge—many of the avowed ministers of Christ are no ministers of faith at all, but promoters of unbelief. The modern pulpit has taught men to be infidels. What truth is there which has not been doubted by divines, questioned by doctors of divinity, and at length been denounced by the priests of 'modern thought?' Nothing remains upon which a certain school of preachers have not spit their scepticism. The experience of the unbelief of Germany is being repeated here. Among those who are ordained to be the preachers of the Gospel of Christ, there are many who preach not faith but doubt, and hence they are servants of the devil rather than of the Lord.

"Think not that I am aiming at the Church of England. With all my objection to a state-church, I am not so unjust as to conceal my belief that I see in the Episcopal Church at this time less of unbelief than among certain Dissenters; in fact, Nonconformity in certain quarters is eaten through and through with a covert Unitarianism, less tolerable than Unitarianism itself. So frequently are the fundamental doctrines of the Gospel assailed, that it becomes needful, before you cross the threshold of many a chapel, to ask the question, 'Shall I hear the Gospel here to-day, or shall I come out hardly knowing whether the Bible is inspired or not? Shall I not be made to doubt the atonement, the work of the Holy Ghost, the immortality of the soul, the punishment of the wicked, or the deity of Christ?'

"I know I shall stir a hornet's nest by these honest rebukes, but I cannot help it. I am burdened and distressed with the state of religion; a pest is in the air; no truth is safe from its withering infection. No signs can be more alarming than the growing infidelity and worldliness which I see among those who call themselves Christians. Does this nation really intend to cast off the fear of God and the doctrines of Holy Scripture, to follow the vain imaginings of the sophists and the fashionable follies of the great? Are we to see again unbelief and luxurious sin walking hand in hand? If so, there be some of us who mean to take up our sorrowful parable, and speak as plainly as we can for truth and holiness, whether we offend or please. Be it ours still to thunder out the law of God, and proclaim with trumpet clearness the Gospel of Jesus, not bating one jot of firm belief in the Revelation of God, nor winking at sin, nor toning down truth, even though we fear that the only result will be to make this people's hearts gross, and their ears heavy, and their eyes blind. If it must be so, my soul shall weep in secret; but still, O Lord, here am I, send me. Be of good courage, oh my heart, for the faithful have not ceased from among men; other voices will cry aloud and spare not, if haply our land may be purged of its present defilement."

THE CHURCH ARMY.

THE Bishop of Durham presided at the second annual meeting in Princes' Hall, Piccadilly. The Army has now 45 lay evangelists fully employed (in addition to the staff), being three times the number last year, and there was an increasing demand. Invitations had come from India, Australia, Canada, and the West Indies, but for want of funds they could not be responded to. The new departure for supplying working men to hold short missions had been greatly blessed, and promised to be a most important branch of the work. The Army has now a band of home missionaries numbering over 5000. As a memorial to Mr. Reginald Braithwaite, a training institution for the preparation of evangelists for the work had been suggested. It was estimated that £5000 would be required for that purpose.

The Chairman, after congrulating the Army on its success during the last year, confessed that from the first he had received it with a bias in its favour. He believed the problem of how to reach the working classes was being solved by the Church Army, as they despaired of no man. His conception of the difficulty of the Church in the present day was the multiplicity of interests. He thought they needed to be more demonstrative, and to adopt new methods and new forms of service where necessary.

Rev. C. Lea Wilson described the work of the Army in Nottingham, which he greatly appreciated as the vicar of a parish there. Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, of Richmond, said that many people were unable to recognise the value of such an agency as that, because they knew nothing of the real need for it, even in spite of the condition of the masses around them. Rev. W. Carlile (honorary secretary), Mr. E. Clifford, and others, addressed the meeting.

HOLIDAY HOUSE.

COMING to Endell-street the other day, through Seven Dials, four rosy-cheeked children waylaid me. "We've had a time of it," they said, "down there at Holiday House." Of course, I wanted to hear about it, and Willie R—— began, "Well, we had tea in the orchard, because it was one of the girls' birthdays, and we saw such a funny worm—ever so long; and we were swinging and playing from morning till night; and we only had one shower of rain. Oh, it was fine, and . . . ."

"Yes," interrupted one of the girls, "and there was a boy there, and when Miss Potter [the matron] asked us all round to say our morning's text, he said, 'Wash vegetables in three waters,' and he were so cross, he were, because Miss Potter said as 'ow that wasn't in the Bible, and he said it were, he knew it were, for he learnt it out of a scrap book."

I daresay that you will like to hear something more about our Holiday House. It is a very old farmhouse, but beautifully situated right under the shelter of a wood, and in front of the house are acres of meadow-land in which cattle feed. The house itself is well hidden by trees, and is only reached by a path in the wood. We send children down to it in weekly parties, and already this season over a hundred have spent one week with us.

The children come here on Tuesday about 1.30, and walk down to Charing-cross station in school fashion. They look so happy as they march along, almost too glad to speak! "Be a good boy, Charlie," said an anxious mother to her little son, "and don't go putting your 'ead out of the winder."

"He's my only son," she said, turning round to me, "and he's never been away from me, nor never see'd the country in his life."

The train is off, and in about an hour and a half it has left all the smoke and din behind it, and has reached Chilworth station. Here the Matron meets her little band of visitors, and guides them to the house. On their way from the station one day lately, they reached a hill covered with white sand; a small boy, in all earnestness, asked her "Is this the Arctic Region?" Some days have been very wet, and then the Matron says it is a little difficult to keep them amused. On one of these occasions a cooking-class was proposed. The girls were very happy in the kitchen, washing potatoes, chopping up suet, mincing meat, rolling out pastry. They were making Cornish pasties, and intended to stock the larder. On the first fine day they all went off for a picnic, and had a happy time.

We have a sewing-class for the children once a week, and the boys sew too, and are getting on well!

On Wednesday evenings our room is all arranged for a meeting, chairs placed across it, and the pile of hymn books are brought out. At 6 o'clock in come a little troop of village children to sing hymns and learn Bible lessons with us for an hour.

On Monday mornings the Matron takes the children for a Scripture walk. You will wonder what that is. Well! they take up a subject, such as trees, birds, flowers, &c., and then they try and find out what the Bible teaches us about them. Did you ever do this?

I could tell you a great deal more about Holiday House, but then the Editor might not like it.*

Will you come and see us some day? and will you help us to send down some more little children into the country? And will you do one thing more? will you ask God to bless our Holiday House, in bringing many boys and girls to know and love our Saviour? S. E. S.

THE YOUNG ABSTAINERS' UNION.

THE annual meeting of this Union took place recently in the Lower Room of Exeter Hall, under the chairmanship of Mr. S. A. Blackwood.

The annual report was read by Mrs. HIND SMITH, who, if not the founder of the Union, was in its early history its mainspring. The report showed that during the year the Union had made considerable progress. The total membership reported was 8470. During the year Miss Andrews, the secretary, has resigned, to enter upon similar duty elsewhere.

Mr. HUGH M. MATHESON remarked that this exceedingly large work had been carried on at a very small expense. The basis of the finance was far too small, and aid was required in the way of annual subscriptions. He was glad to know that very few of the members fell away, but many of those who commenced with this Union are now in other departments helping. The Christian Church was looking at this question far more seriously than it had hitherto done. In the late assemblies of the Scottish Church there was a very marked evidence of Temperance progress among the ministers and office-bearers of the Church, and consequently amongst the people, old and young. The same thing had been noticed in the annual assemblies of some churches in England. Let not the young suppose for a single moment that there was any great hardship in being early led to adopt abstinence. Many was the headache, many the trouble, and many the distress, much was the personal annoyance and sickness, and all the rest of it that one was saved by being a total abstainer.

The CHAIRMAN said the Union had to contend with social and class difficulties of no small description. Yet in the course of six years it had received the adhesion of about 8000 members. He congratulated the young people upon the helping hand stretched out to them in this matter, for it had never been stretched out to those now in adult life. They never had such efforts as these put forth to warn them of the evils to which they were exposed through drink. Any reformation in drinking he felt persuaded must proceed from the upper and middle classes. This Union must try to influence those engaged in educational work. He did not think the pressure of strong Temperance opinion had been brought to bear in that quarter. It was from the parents that the pressure must come, backed by the young people themselves. He was an old Etonian, and saw on June 4 the procession of boats. At the supper tables prepared for each of the ten boats' crews in the open air there were on each table for nine of the oldest boys, averaging from twelve to eighteen, four bottles of champagne. It pained him exceedingly to see it. He believed that quantity was less than it used to be, but that it should still be provided was attributable to the drinking customs of the country.

The Bishop of LONDON said the growth of this cause to a very large extent depends upon dealing with the young. It is very hard indeed for people who have grown up in a certain custom from early childhood to turn completely round and set the custom at defiance, and not only to disregard it in themselves, but in others who are partakers in the same custom and have been brought up in it in the same way. It is of very great importance that if possible we should correct that by getting rid of the custom at the beginning, and we are doing a great deal in that direction. Almost without its being noticed we are gradually getting parents everywhere and in almost every rank of society to agree that it is far better that little children should have nothing to do with intoxicating beverages at all. But then comes the time when you begin to call upon the boy or girl to exercise a voluntary choice, when you think it a duty no longer to put it as a command, but rather to be content with influence at the utmost, when you desire to foster the growth of individual character and the power of saying "Yes" or "No," according to the choice or pleasure. It is at this point that this Young Abstainers' Union steps in. We wish, with the consent of the parents, to influence all whom we can reach in making the choice at this time of their lives, and in as far as they are allowed to make a choice at all, we desire to induce them to make a right choice, to make the choice which our experience tells us is the right choice, not only for themselves, but still more for the great body of the community to which they belong. We desire that, at any rate, they shall keep their minds quite open to deal with this matter until they are compelled to take their lives into their own hands as grown up men and women. And in order to keep the matter open there is no course but to continue through youth the abstinence which was begun in childhood. There is no other cour because when once you have begun to partake these things you do not find that you are any long in a position to make an absolutely unbiassed choi It is quite true that the middle and upper class have a good deal to do in this matter; we are i pressed with the necessity that all classes shou hold out the hand of help to one another. I kn of no better way of doing this than for the upp classes to be prepared to make personal sacrifice f the poorer classes. It is for this reason that I ve earnestly desire that all those whose hearts are st fresh, and who can be touched with a feeling what their neighbours are suffering from—that th should all understand that one of the things th they can do which really helps their neighbour is show their sympathy for them in this way b abstaining personally, or getting rid, by their ow personal influence, of this dreadful thing, whi is to the poorer classes such a terrible temptatio and so often the cause of such dreadful degrad tion.

GOVERNOR BRIGGS AND HIS COLLAR.—It w a great mystery to many people why Govern Briggs, of Massachusetts, wore a cravat, but n collar. Some people thought it was an absu eccentricity. Ah, no! This was the secret: Ma years before he was talking with an inebriate, an telling him that his habit was unnecessary, and th inebriate retorted upon him and said: "We do great many things that are not necessary. It is n necessary for you to wear that collar. "Well, said Governor Briggs, "I will never wear a coll again, if you won't drink." "Agreed," said th inebriate. Governor Briggs never wore a colla They both kept their bargain for twenty year They kept it to the death. That is the reas Governor Briggs did not wear a collar. "The Christian" Pulpit.

FAITH HEALING.

By Rev. H. J. GAMBLE, Upper Clapton.

Sermon preached last Sunday Evening.

"Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world."—(1 John iv. 1.)

THE subject I have to consider has come into such prominence, it is taking so serious a form, and is an occasion of trouble and perplexity to so many thoughtful minds, that I feel it to be a solemn duty to bring it, as far as I am able, to the test of reason and of the Word of God, both of which are given for our guidance.

Of the sincerity and deep piety of many who believe in what is called "faith healing," I entertain no doubt. I respect their conscientiousness, and I hope that nothing that I shall say will wound their feelings; but sincerity, honesty, conscientiousness, even piety, is not a test of religious truth, which must stand on the Word of God, as interpreted by strictly grammatical rules, and as far as possible by the knowledge of the original language, or languages, in which the Book was written, and also by the concurrent testimony of the Christian Church.

Now, as regards the matter of faith healing, which is mixed up with the teaching that no sickness comes from God, Who is nothing else but Love, but that it is the work of the devil and is, according to some, a sign of unbelief, according to others, a mark of imperfect sanctification—I submit the following propositions. First, sickness is governed by natural laws, and results either from a contravention of them or from some functional disturbance of, or organic change in, the human body. The human body is a most beautiful and complicated structure of flesh and blood, bones and muscles, nerves and skin, so that the Psalmist might well say, "we are fearfully and wonderfully made." Each member of the body stands in relation to other members, and all to the outward world. Nothing can be more delicate than the machinery of the human frame. It is so delicate that the slightest cause will throw it into disorder. Some are born with physical defects. The poison of disease is already in their blood, or there is a radical defect in some important organ—in sight, in hearing, in the lungs, in the heart. They were born with seeds of disease, whose subsequent development is not due to any sin or error on their part. Others contract disease from external causes—from infection, from contagion; but disease, from whatever source it comes, is absolutely under law, and is not the result of accident or of chance. It is formed and maintained by the same vital powers which regulate the conditions of health. It is the decay of some organ—for every organ is built up from cells—or it is the introduction of some foreign element into the system.

A distinguished physician says that disease is a mere modification of the conditions and processes of health. Now, if this be the case,—and the evidence for it is simply irresistible,—you see what an unreasonable thing it is to speak of it as indicating a want of faith or of defective sanctification. Whether a man be a saint or a sinner, he may be born blind or lame, or deaf or dumb. If he contract infection he will have a sickness that will run its course. If the cells of the lungs, the heart, or any other organ begin to decay, he will have the disease which inevitably results from that condition of decay. What has holiness to do with warding it off? How can it influence it in any way. It is a simple matter not of spiritual agency but of natural law. Neither man nor the devil has ordained that law, but God Himself.

The writers of the Bible, with that deep reverence for God which characterised them, traced disease to God; but let us clearly understand what they meant by doing so. They trace all physical evil, indeed, to God; "Shall there be evil in a city and the Lord hath not done it? I wound, and I heal: I kill, and I make alive." That sickness is one of those physical evils, and, excepting death, the very greatest, is obvious enough. It is specially mentioned in Deut. vii. in connection with God: "Because ye hearken to these things, and keep them, the Lord will take away from thee all sickness, and will put none of the evil diseases of Egypt, which thou knowest upon thee; but will lay them upon all them that hate thee." When Hezekiah was recovered, not by faith healing, but by the blessing of God on the use of means, he said: "What shall I say? He Himself hath done it, that has laid the sickness on me." There is also a passage in Job which places the matter, one would think, beyond controversy: "That He may withdraw man from his purpose, and hide pride from man. He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword. He is chastened also with pain upon his bed"—the Chastener evidently being the same Being who "keeps back his soul from the pit." Who sent the boils on the Egyptians? Was it not Moses as the servant of God? Who inflicted upon Gehazi his awful leprosy? Was it not Elisha as the servant of God? And was not the leprosy specially known amongst the Jews as "God's disease"? Who put forth his hand upon Job and smote him with boils? Was it not Satan, for the time being, and for that special purpose, the servant of God? He was unable to do anything without God's permission, or you may depend upon it he would never have asked it.

The relation, then, that sickness sustains to God is this: occasionally, and perhaps very occasionally, He specially and directly sends it, and at all times He permits it. It befalls us not because of some malicious freak of the devil, or because we are defective in holiness and in faith; but is one of those plagues that come alike to all, because all are subject to the same great natural laws. When God says that He created evil and darkness (Isa. xlv. 6), He becomes, if I may reverently use such an expression, fully responsible for their existence. He proclaims that they are subordinate to his purpose, and that they are employed as his instruments. You are not one step nearer in proving that God is Love; you contribute nothing to the removal of the mystery of suffering and sorrow, when you have persuaded yourself that they come from Satan. For how can Satan exist at all or do anything without God's permission?

It is no part of my argument to attempt to reconcile pain and suffering with God's goodness. Notwithstanding that great mysteries are connected with the subject, I think I could say to you very much that would tend to elucidate them. I could adduce some strong arguments to show that not only is chastisement compatible with love, but that God would not be love if He did not chasten us. But that is not the point now. The proposition is and has been sustained from Scripture that sickness, being the result of natural law divinely instituted, is of God; that it is sometimes a punishment, but not necessarily so; and is always a discipline, meant to rebuke, to warn, to arouse, to refine, to prove. So far from being a curse it is often the greatest blessing—most precious in its fruits, rich in its consolations, a cleansing fire, a warning voice, a threshing-floor where men are sifted, a furnace where they are tried. It would not be needed if we were perfectly sanctified; but none except those who have a great deal yet to learn about themselves ever suppose that they are so. Yet, though not needed, even in their case, if they were as they affirm, it might be sent to them for other reasons than those of a personal kind, as with Him who suffered for the sake of others, and left to his Church this wonderful legacy to fill up in the flesh that which was behind in his sufferings.

My next proposition is that sickness, if healed at all, is ordinarily healed by natural means. The physician's art is one of the oldest and one of the noblest of all arts referred to in the most ancient document in the world—the Book of Genesis. How highly it was esteemed by the Jews we learn from a very striking passage in Ecclesiasticus: "Honour a physician with the honour due to him; for the Lord hath created him. The Lord hath created medicines out of the earth, and he that is wise will not abhor them. With such doth He heal men and take away their pains. My son in thy sickness be not negligent to pray to the Lord to make thee whole." Then mark, "Give place to the physician; let him not go from thee, for thou hast need of him. They also shall pray unto the Lord that He would prosper that which they give for ease and remedy." These words seem to me the very perfection of common-sense and of piety. It was for neglect of dependence on God when he used the means that Asa was condemned. In 2 Chron. xvi. 12, you read:—"And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great: yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians."

But it is said, "Here is a man expressly condemned for seeking physicians." Not so fast, if you please. Had it been wrong for Asa to have employed medical aid and natural means for the cure of his disease, Isaiah had never directed that such means should be used for the cure of Hezekiah: "Take a cake of figs and lay it upon the boil and he shall recover." Hezekiah had prayed to God for his recovery, and this was God's answer to his prayer. Why then was Asa condemned? Because he put no trust in God, who is the Great Healer of disease. It has been suggested that the physicians whom Asa sought were the heathen physicians who professed to cure by incantations and charms, but I have no need to employ this argument, because I cannot prove it to be true. I say, however, that, since to employ medical skill was not wrong in the case of Hezekiah; since one of the Evangelists—Luke—was a physician; and since our Lord expressly approved of such a profession when he says, "they that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick," it is evident that it was for depending upon them rather than seeking God's blessing on the means that were used, that Asa was blamed.

But sickness has also been healed without means, by the direct exercise of miraculous gifts. About this there can be no dispute among those who receive the Word of God. The Saviour performed miraculous cures. So did some, at all events, of the Apostles, if not all. So did those upon whom the Apostles conferred the gift of healing. But there was even in the Primitive Church a limitation of power. Writing to the Corinthians, Paul asks, "Are all workers of miracles? Have all gifts of healing? Do all speak with tongues?" (i, xii. 29). Nor was it because they had not faith in them that this gift was withheld. It was because, as Paul says, "The Spirit divideth to every man severally, as He will." He set in the Church, first, apostles; secondarily, prophets; thirdly, teachers; after that miracles; then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.

There is no proof whatever that the gift of healing was bestowed in a single instance because a man had faith. It came from the sovereign appointment of God. There is but one passage and but one only, in which faith is spoken of as a condition of success; in that passage healing is associated with prayer, which, however, is by no means always the case. The passage I refer to—the great crucial passage—is in James. Let me read it, and will you follow it attentively:—"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him" (v. 14, 15).

Now, observe, first of all, that this is the solitary passage in the Bible that refers to "faith healing." On no solitary text can any vital doctrine ever be placed. Observe, in the next place, that it was only the elders of the Church who had the power to heal; so that this, to begin with, limits the healing power to a certain class. It was not any Christian brother or sister who was to be sent for, but the elders. Is it only the elders who are said to possess the gift of healing now? Why, I know of people who have anointed themselves! Observe again, that it was not the faith of the person healed about which anything whatever is said, but the faith of the healer which, in connection with anointing and believing prayer, effected the cure. Further, this cure was associated with the forgiveness of sins and stumblings. Such offences, whatever their nature, were probably of a similar kind to those on account of which it is said of the members of the Corinthian Church that "many were sick." It may be presumed, therefore, that the disease which was healed in this way was a special one inflicted for some special cause, because sin is spoken of in connection with it; the healed man was forgiven at the same time.

That it was a miraculous cure is proved from the connection of the passage with the prayer of Elijah that it might not rain, and it rained not for three years and six months. If, then, the prayer of faith now will heal the sick, I submit that the prayer of faith now would prevent it raining upon the earth for the space of three years and six months.

But the question here arises: have we sufficient ground for believing that such miraculous power exists at the present day? The whole controversy really turns upon that. I need scarcely tell you that such power is and always has been claimed by the Church of Rome. If there has been a handing down of miraculous gifts I confess it must be looked for there and there alone, for it is the only Church that can show anything approaching to evidence of what is called the "Apostolical succession." But I venture to think that the claims of this Church for possessing miraculous power have been disposed of. Many treatises have been written on this subject. One of the most notable writers was Dr. Conyers Middleton who examined the evidence adduced from the Fathers who showed how false miracles were employed to establish the new rites and doctrines; and he gives illustrations of their absurdity surpassing anything that the human mind could conceive.

With Roman Catholic miracles, however, I have now nothing to do. I proceed to observe that if miraculous power has not ceased, neither, as Edward Irving contended, have prophetic gifts, or those of tongues. He was under no delusion. He was a sober, right-minded man, most foully wronged, and wickedly persecuted. It is for those who contend that the gift of faith healing has survived, to tell us why the gift of tongues has died out. If ever the Church needed that the gift of healing should continue, it was after the death of the Apostles, but if it began then to die away, why should it now revive? We know very well why the first miracles were wrought. We know definitely to whom the power of working them was given. They were "the testimony which God gave to the Word of his grace." They authenticated the new revelation which God had given. They confirmed the authority of the Apostles. None wrought them but Apostles, and those on whom the Apostles laid their hands.

Are they needed for any such purpose now? Is not the Book complete, and sealed, with no more words to be added thereto? Who is authorised to add any more words to the Bible? If the new doctrine accords in spirit with the old, it is not needed. If it differs from the old, both cannot be true, and what becomes then of the professed faith-healers of the present day?

The gift of tongues was suitable for the time in which it was given; so was the gift of healing; but we find both gradually disappearing, until Chrysostom says (you may read it for yourselves, in his eighty-eighth sermon on Matthew's Gospel): "Of miraculous powers not so much as a vestige remains." Moreover, does not the language of Paul in 1 Cor. xiii. bear upon this point:—"Whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." The continuation of these miraculous gifts would cause them to lose their impressiveness, and, if not impressive, they are no miracles; they produce no effect. A miracle in its very nature must be something very rare, and wrought for a special purpose, and that purpose always exceptional. Would not the continuance of miraculous healing give ample scope for all manner of imposture?

No doubt the gift of working miracles has been claimed again and again. Passing over the Roman Catholic Church, let me remind you of the extraordinary claims of John Wesley to almost every Apostolic gift and grace, affirming, as he did, that signs and wonders were still wrought by the name of the holy child Jesus. It is worth anybody's while to read John Wesley's journals, in order to see the length to which religious extravagance can go. There is a deeply-interesting account of these extravagances also in a book published in the year 1754, entitled, "The enthusiasm of Methodists and Papists," in connection with cases of exorcism of the devil, heavenly visions, remarkable cures which are there cited, and which, by the side of those that have been quoted at the recent Faith-healing Conference, are thrown utterly into the shade. The author of this book, no less a man than the sainted Samuel Lavington, the author of the unrivalled "Sacramental Discourses," says, with regard to these alleged miracles of John Wesley, that "they brought reproach and scandal on the prophecies and miracles which establish the inspiration of the everlasting Gospel."

As regards the alleged cases which are said recently to have taken place as the result of faith, I remark that a large proportion of them—and I do not think that this will be called in question—relate to purely nervous and hysterical disorders, such as are more easily cured through the mind than through any other agency. There are other diseases, not of a nervous type, which often disappear in a most wonderful way, having been pronounced by the highest medical authority to be incurable. I know a recent case of the removal of a tumour insisted upon so much at this Faith-healing Conference, and you might suppose that there could be no delusion about that. But stop a moment. Phantom tumours are well known in hospital practice, and the cure for them, I am told, is to distract the mind from dwelling upon them by inducing sleep, when they disappear miraculously, as we should say, and the patient goes out declaring that he or she is perfectly cured.

A most distinguished surgeon recently performed an operation for tumour, upon one personally known to myself, and discovered none! So that the evidence which was adduced at the Conference is not quite so reliable as some of you may have thought. I purchased a book, which I still possess, little thinking that I should make use of it in the pulpit, and written by one of the most celebrated physicians of his day—Sir John Forbes—the title of which is "Nature and Art in the Cure of Disease." It is twenty-eight years since I came into possession of that book, the sixth and seventh chapters of which deal with the natural termination of disease, and the evidence of the curability of disease by nature alone. It might be reprinted just now with the greatest advantage. The writer shows how Nature relieves itself of certain diseases, which he names, by secretion, absorption, or by expelling the poison. In some cases, he says, the return to health is almost instantaneous. The same diseases have been professedly cured under the most opposite kind of treatment, leading to the inevitable conclusion that treatment had nothing to do with the cure at all, and unequivocally establishing the remedial power of nature. It is within my personal experience, (it is utterly distasteful to me to bring myself into the pulpit, but bear with me to-night), that, after resorting to the highest physicians and surgeons in London and obtaining no relief from a complaint which was external and which many have seen, suddenly it disappeared. There was no faith healing in that case, I can assure you.

It is within my knowledge that some who thought themselves to have been cured by faith have gone back to their original state, and that others have died. But, suppose faith-healers should produce a few solitary cases of a startling and unaccountable kind, am I, because I cannot explain the mode of cure, to set it down to faith healing? Certainly not. Anyone accustomed to reasoning would say this would be the most illogical thing that a man could do. Do no remarkable coincidences ever take place in human life? Are there no mysteries elsewhere which baffle solution? Do we know all that is to be known about physiology and psychology? Can Spiritualism, when stripped of many of its tricks, be pronounced altogether a trickery? Cannot the mesmerist relate incredible tales? Are there no marvels in thought-reading? In the presence of such mysteries, should we hesitate to admit that in the disappearance of disease similar mysteries may occur? But why, especially when the other evidence for faith healing is untrustworthy, should we be compelled to accept this as a direct proof?

What is going on at Boston at the present moment in reference to "mind healing" comes to our faith-healing friends as a lesson. All Boston is in a furore, and the churches are in distraction at the present moment because of the healing of disease by the action of the mind. Our faith-healing friends, I think, will find that their reply, "It is the devil's work," will not dispose of it as readily as they suppose. There are some people who seem to know a great deal more about the devil than I think they ought.

The other day I heard a preacher tell the people that God never sends sickness; that it is the devil's work, and if any are sick it is through their unbelief. I have shown in what way sickness arises—how strictly it is a natural result from a natural cause permitted by God, used and overruled by Him. The instrumentality of Satan in connection with disease is only referred to three or four times in Scripture, and unless Satan can produce growths in the human body and cause poisonous sewer gas to escape into our houses he can have little enough to do with the principal causes of disease now.

It is further a well-established fact that, so far from sickness being associated with unbelief, or proving imperfect sanctification, some of the holiest men, Paul, to wit, some of the most active Christian workers, such as Trophimus, Epaphroditus and Timothy, had bodily infirmities, and were through sickness nigh unto death. Why, some of the greatest sufferers have been the holiest saints, who lived in the land of Beulah, and have almost sat at the very gate of heaven. They brought forth fruit, and the Great Husbandman pruned them, and they brought forth richer fruit. Their chastening was that of sons, to cause them to bring forth the peaceable fruit of righteousness. Oh! the sacredness of their sick-chambers, the patience which their tribulation wrought, the glory that redounded to God from their sufferings, the words of wisdom and faith which fell from their lips—these things, so long as time shall last, some of us will never forget. Judge of my feelings, then, if you can, when I heard a person, utterly unknown in this country, tell me that those who suffered sickness did so on account of their unbelief. I say that it is a libel upon the saintly men and women whom God has brought under his chastening rod, and that such teaching will drive some people by and by to madness and scepticism, or to despair.

We ask—it was asked in the best article on faith healing that I have seen, and which appeared in The Christian of last week—why, if sickness be, as we say, God's discipline, we should seek to cure it? I reply that everything in life is disciplinary—poverty, anxiety, and so forth—but we do not the less on that account seek their removal, or in the case of death its delay. We do so because the natural instincts which God has given, and which cannot deceive, prompt us, and because we do not know how soon the discipline may do its work.

Further, the failure to be healed is set down to a lack of faith. The answer is: no faith except by our Lord was, as far as I can recollect—I speak subject to reproval—ever required by those who were healed in the Primitive Church. Though in one passage faith is associated with healing, it was not, as I have shown you, in the man who was healed but in the healers. Not only were there men in the Primitive Church who had faith who could not heal, but there were men who had no faith at all who could heal. "Lord, Lord, open unto us. Have we not in Thy name done many wonderful works?" "I never knew you. Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity." Ah! my faith-healing friends, who think yourselves to be so exalted by God's enriching gift, take heed. You aim the possession of the miraculous gift of ealing. Be it so, but remember that gifts puff), and that, if they were not always associated ith grace in the Primitive Church, grace may be cking now. But what right have you to assert at the cessation of miracles is simply owing to e lack of faith in the present day? True ough, the Holy Spirit is always the same, but e does not always bestow the same gifts. At e time there was the Urim and the Thummim; ave you the Urim and the Thummim now? here was the flashing breastplate, with its ystic stones; have you the flashing breastplate w? There were visions and dreams; do sions and dreams come to you now? Then ere came the gift of tongues; does the gift of ngues come to you now? Why, then, should u have the gift of healing? These miraculous ifts answered their purpose, and, as they did not iginate in faith, but in God's sovereign appoint-ent, no manner of faith can bring them back.

I have only to add that though Christ is the edeemer both of the body, and the soul, and ore its sickness as well as its sorrow and sin, it by no means the case that perfection of body, ny more than perfection of soul, is attained in e present life. There is "grace to be brought us at the revelation of Jesus Christ." If we ave it all here, what will there be for Jesus hrist to bring? If we are all perfect in body nd soul, perfect in sanctification, perfect in odily health, perfect in health of soul, what ill be the grace in reserve for Jesus to bring? e are not released from sorrow, though Christ ore our griefs; we are not released from grave oral infirmities, though Christ bore our sins; nd we are not released from physical pains, ough Christ bore our sickness. But there is a lness of life which flows from the Head into e members which will one day triumph over er bodily infirmity and every sin, and He will resent us faultless before the presence of his lory with exceeding joy.

Meanwhile, let us depend on God, whatever strumentality we use—depend on God for ealing alike of the spirit and the flesh. More ith and more prayer would be a great benefit us all. Perhaps that is the lesson which this ith-healing business is intended to teach. "I m the Lord that healeth thee," "He sent forth is word and healed them," "He healeth all eir diseases," are golden words which ought throw us back upon God; but to refrain from e use of means is presumptuous and full of eril. What was that warning which has come recently, in the death of a passenger [Rev. r. Stanton] coming over to the Faith-healing onference who died on board, because, it is said, e would not employ any medicines? These arnings will multiply, and I, for one, would ot bear the responsibility of leading anyone to elieve that it is wrong to use means as some each, or, as others teach, that we should go irect to God and think nothing whatever of the strumentality to be used.

"Try the spirits, whether they be of God." ry them by their works. No rancour and cen-oriousness followed the gifts of healing in the rimitive Church. Can we say that now? No hism took place then. Can we say that one is ot threatened now? No attempt was made incorporate them in the preaching of the ospel, as its most precious and vital part. an that be affirmed now? Schism and heart-urnings among Christian brethren are not e fruits of the Spirit. If faith healing pro-uces these, I will have nothing to do with it. et us seek, through faith, the healing of our uls, and not distract our minds by these curious nd unprofitable discussions.

To the dear young friends in this congrega-ion, I, as their pastor and their friend, old nough to advise them, would beseech them hat they will not let their minds be distracted rom the great and important doctrines contained the Word of God. There is quite enough in his Book which they can understand; there is uite enough in the Christian life which they now to be true and right, without allowing their houghts to be diverted by other matters. I ould, therefore, say to them: "Hold fast that hich you have;" and may God grant his Holy pirit to lead us all into the truth and to forgive s all our errors and imperfections.

OUR HIDDEN HAMLETS.—3.

HARRY ELLIOTT and I have known something of each other since we attended, together, the same village school, in the now somewhat distant days of the past. Few of his schoolfellows could ever have dreamt that the white tie or collar of the clergyman would have been found on the neck of Harry, as the only branch of science in which he seemed ambitious to excel was the so-called "noble art of self-defence." Nor were his steps directed pulpitward for many an after year, save as fancy might place a pulpit in some synagogue of Satan. But at length a change came over the spirit of his dream. Old habits, tastes, and friends were all of them more or less changed for new ones; and, soon after his life had been thus revolutionised, he left our parish to begin "reading" for the Church in some distant part of the land. His first curacy was in "The Black Country," where, in addition to his other work, he conducted a weekly service away down in one of the deepest coal pits of South Staffordshire. From there he removed to another part of the Midlands, and finally turned up at his present charge, in the pretty little hamlet of Dalesby.

He entered upon his work here under far more favourable conditions than those with which Trentham or Heatherfield (of my previous papers) began their village ministry. For nearly thirty years the members of a well-known county family had devoted their money and time to God's service, while labouring among the poor of the parish. Then, Harry's two predecessors in the incumbency had both been able and godly men; so that, as I have heard him say, he felt, when success began to crown his labours, that he was just being used of God to reap what had been sown of God through others.

The first week he began work at Dalesby, he set apart, for the Master's service, one of the best rooms in the vicarage. This, I believe, was really the idea of Mrs. Elliott. Here addresses have been given by Rev. C. Graham, of Shepherd's-bush; Rev. Dr. Wilson, of the Barclay Church, Edinburgh; Rev. Charles Guest, of Burton-on-Trent; by Messrs. Henry Lakin, William Holt, and a host of other God-used and God-honoured men. Here are held "fellowship" and Bible meetings; here, on the Sabbath evenings in winter, between the afternoon and evening services, Mrs. Elliott often gathers the villagers to sing Mr. Sankey's solos and choruses; and here is held weekly the meeting which Harry considers the most important of all others—the Saturday evening prayer-meeting, which has an average attendance of thirty adults, and at which some ten or twelve boná fide working men always engage in prayer.

In a few weeks after he had gone to Dalesby, my old acquintance was also led to begin an open-air meeting on the Sabbath afternoon. This was at first held on the vicarage lawn; but as it soon grew into a comparatively large affair, the place of meeting was changed as circumstances allowed, and this was often found on one of the velvetty lawns in front of Dalesby House, which was readily offered by its Christian owner for such a blessed use.

Harry has since been very much blamed for adopting the course he took, but having been an old cornet player, he taught some of his people to play brass instruments. These taught others, and, as a consequence, he soon found himself supported at these open-air services by a good band of nine or ten instrumentalists. Of course he knew that this kind of thing would have its attendant evils; but he believed it would have advantages which would more than out-balance the evils. And most certain it is that he has had people to the services (and has them at the present time) who but for the music would have been drinking all the blessed Sabbath afternoon, and whom nothing but the music would have drawn from their cups and glasses.

This kind of work led to the formation of a little band of evangelists, whose natural gifts were soon strengthened by exercise, and who now delight, in their simple fashion, to stand by their Vicar in the open air, and tell "the old, old story, of Jesus and his love." One Sabbath, when he was laid aside by illness, eight of them addressed the meeting—a farmer, a post-master, a head gardener, a mat-maker, a bricklayer, and three labourers, the village bandmaster taking charge of the musical portion of the service.

Let God have all the glory; but I need not say that these efforts, ever made in dependence on the Holy Spirit for guidance and support, have neither been barren nor unfruitful. God has saved several souls in Dalesby since Harry Elliott has been its pastor. The population numbers but little over four hundred souls; when the adults were counted, a few Sabbath mornings since, there were nearly a hundred in the little church; in the evening there were more, forty of these remaining to the Lord's Supper; while in the afternoon there would be, at least, more than two hundred at the open-air service.

Having given these three sketches of hamlets blessed with the preaching of the Gospel, I shall next offer some sketches of other villages that I have found to be Gospelless.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

ROUMANIA.—There are six Protestant churches in Roumania, mostly of recent formation.

IN a recent sermon on tobacco and opium, Dr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, says there are over 20,000 opium-eaters in Chicago and over 20,000 in St. Louis. In the same proportion, that would make over 70,000 in New York and Brooklyn.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION.—Since March, from 150 to 200 women entirely destitute have been gathered regularly into the workshop at Miss de Broen's Mission, where work is assigned to each according to her strength and capacity. A short, simple Gospel service is held. After the service each woman receives an order for bread or meat, in exchange for her work.

FONTENAY-LE-COMTE.—A new hall for popular conferences was opened by the Evangelical Mission for French workmen with the co-operation of the Young People's Christian Association of Fontenay-le-Comte. The inaugural meeting was well attended, and seems to have roused considerable interest. The hall is very suitable for the purpose. —Le Christianisme.

FREEDOM IN RUSSIA.—The Témoin de la Vérité says:—"We had announced, according to other papers, that the Russian Government had revoked the decree of banishment passed against Colonel Paschkoff and Count Korff. This is a mistake. A communication addressed to Le Christianisme informs us that these two Evangelical Christians have not yet received permission to return to their fatherland.

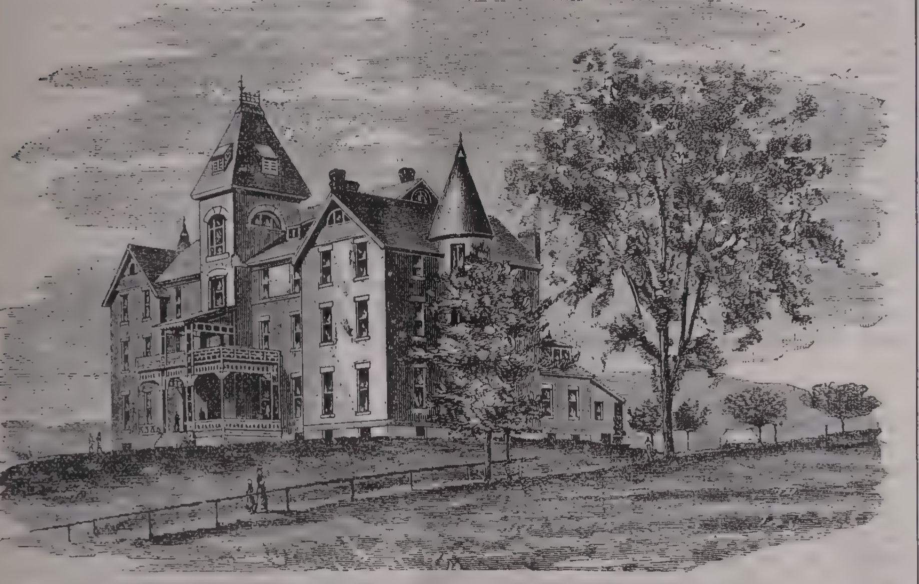
ARMENIA.—A writer in Le Christianisme referring to Dr. Somerville's recent visit to Constantinople, says that the young people there have a great admiration for the French, whose language they have studied more than any other. Should a pastor from Paris think of spending a month's holiday in Constantinople with the same object in view, he would do much good in the Turkish capital, and particularly to the Armenians. The ignorance of the Armenian clergy is great, and such pastors as Dr. Somerville are sadly needed.

CALCUTTA.—Writing to a friend in this country who sent him some copies of THE CHRISTIAN, Rev. G. H. Parsons, Calcutta, says that though special difficulties have to be overcome in the mission work through the inconsistency of resident Europeans, there are many bright instances of English Christians, both civilians and officers in the army. Mr. Rivers Thompson, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, is well known as a true-hearted Christian. Mr. Parsons labours among the natives, and he is enabled to see fruit from the seed-sowing in which he is engaged.

SAD NEWS FROM MADAGASCAR.—We are grieved to hear of the fate of the Prime Minister of Madagascar, a man who has developed high and noble qualities, and whose attachment to Christianity is familiar to all who take an interest in the missionary cause. He has been strangled, it is said, by the party which desires to make peace with the French by conceding many of their demands. Against a policy of this nature the premier was firmly set, as might be inferred from the strength of his patriotic feeling; and his death—if it should turn out to be true that he has been assassinated—is another dark stain on the escutcheon of France.—Christian Leader.

MR. MOODY AT HOME.

YESTERDAY, May 20, was a happy day for D. L. Moody and the host of Christian workers who are engaged with him in building in the valley at Northfield and Gill, Schools for the specially Christian education of young men and women who have not the means or preparation to go to the older schools and colleges. The story of the inception of these schools seems like an inspiration. It is only a few years ago that Mr. Moody, when home from one of his evangelising trips, chanced to drive back on some of the many hills which surround Northfield, and saw two girls spending their lives making baskets. Noticing that these girls had no chance for an education, he said, "I will open a school for the many girls of these New England hills." No sooner came the thought than with characteristic energy the work was begun. Yesterday's gathering was for the purpose of dedicating the new Recitation Hall at Mount Hermon, and to give the friends of the institution an opportunity for inspection.



NORTHFIELD SEMINARY—EAST HALL.

The day was a most delightful one for the purpose. The girls' school at Northfield was given a holiday, and for the first time the 240 scholars were treated to a visit to the boys' school, which they have seen from their windows, never nearer. Outside the door, the boys had sprung a green arch with "Welcome" deftly wrought in wild flowers, but faintly bespeaking the joyous welcome to all who came to grace the gala day.

The exercises were held in the large hall on the upper floor of the building. This building, so well adapted for recitation, library and other purposes, cost over 30,000 dols., and was built from the royalty on the sale of the Gospel Hymns, so that, as Mr. Moody remarked, "Mr. Sankey sang the building up." Many well-known educators and philanthropists were gathered upon the platform, including John Wanamaker, of Philadelphia, President Seelye and Professor Hitchcock of Amherst College, I. D. Sankey, Dr. Pentecost, &c.

The exercises took that enthusiastic informality peculiar to any gathering in the hands of Mr. Moody, and was made the more charming by the singing of "Mount Hermon is my home," by the boys, with several songs from the girls; while Mr. Sankey was at his best in the service of song.

Mr. Moody, in opening the service, said: This is one of the happiest days of my life. I long have desired to see a place where boys bereft of parents in early life, or, overcome by some calamity, have been deprived of an education, could be prepared for life. I well remember, when a young man, I wanted to be educated, but was ashamed to enter with lads so far advanced above me. The purpose of this school is to fill a gap. To any boy of promise our doors are wide open, and they may come from any part of the world. Here with Indians, Armenians, Greeks, and half a dozen other nationalities, there is no strife, all standing equal before Christ. This work was begun four years ago in a small farm-house, and it has grown so rapidly, that we now plan to accommodate within a year 300 young men. It is our purpose to enlarge as fast as the Lord will send us friends and money.

Professor Sawyer, the Principal, said that although connected with the school but eight months, he could see rapid improvements in all directions. There is some misapprehension abroad concerning the plan of the school. It is not a reformatory; the fact that a boy is a bad boy is no reason he should be sent to Mount Hermon. It is not an orphan asylum. It is a school for earnest Christian young men, who want to round out their education so that they can become of use in the world. The Bible is the basis of our instruction. The dignity of labour is in favour with us. We work, and are not ashamed of it either. If we are going out into the world, the head, heart, and hands need training.

President Seelye, of Amherst College, said the trouble with our education to-day is that we are trying to get along without the light of Christianity. Such work is about as promising as it would be to try and grow a tree without sunlight. In closing, he warmly commended Mr. Moody and his work, and earnestly hoped that the school might never lose the spirit of faith in which it was founded.

Mr. Wanamaker spoke in a happy vein, and thought these schools were an excellent sermon on what one man, inspired with true Christian zeal, could do. In this day of triumph and joy it should be remembered that a shadow will come. How much better, therefore, while Mr. Moody is here, to continue in the good work. It is a great thing to have some one into whose heart God has put the rays of heaven, so guided in carrying on such a noble cause. There is plenty of money. Here is an opportunity for a great investment, while boys are knocking at the door for admittance.

Prof. Hitchcock said a bright word or two, and closed by inviting the school down to Amherst College; Mr. Moody, in his own brisk business way, closed the bargain, and Mr. Harris, of the New-London Railroad, promptly promised to take the whole party down free.

Dr. Pentecost mentioned the lasting monuments erected in these schools which will outlast all memorials of wars.

Mr. Talcott spoke of the inspiration of the gathering, for it is seldom that one can see such boys as are gathered at Mount Hermon. He wanted to help raise 50,000 dollars on the spot to complete the new buildings already under way. Mr. Moody preferred to have the matter dropped, as he had invited his friends to look over the place and see what was being done. Banker Palmer, of New York, spoke from a practical standpoint. Judge Conant had a few encouraging and well-chosen words in praise of the schools, and S. E. Bridgman made a stirring appeal to the men of means to let nothing stand in the way of Christianising the world through the agency of the glowing Christian young men and women. After two hours of speaking, singing, and praise, came a season of hearty congratulation and repast, the remainder of the day being profitably spent in a ramble over the farm, the boys most cheerfully acting as escorts. In spite of Mr. Moody's remonstrances, the visitors who could not rid themselves of the suggestion offered by Mr. Talcott, got together and pledged themselves to furnish 25,000 dols. towards finishing the buildings.—Springfield Republican.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE AT HIGHGATE.

A VERY successful Gospel Temperance mission is being conducted by Mr. Wm. Noble in a marquee at Highgate. Extensive preparations were made, and the meetings widely advertised. The singing was conducted by members of Mr. Sankey's London choirs, under the direction of Mr. T. G. Howe, solos and quartettes being frequently introduced. On week-days a prayer-meeting was held at noon. The afternoon was occupied by special meetings for women, children, workers, Sunday scholars, &c. At 8 p.m. the chair was taken by Mr. Noble, and two other speakers were appointed for each evening. On Sunday the workers met for prayer at 10 a.m.; at 4 p.m. Mr. Noble addressed Sunday-school teachers and scholars; and at 8 p.m. a meeting of a purely evangelistic character was held. Mr. Noble expressed himself as increasingly convinced that the Gospel alone can produce a real and lasting change in men's lives.

An excellent choice of speakers was made for the evening gatherings, including the well-known names of Revs. Dawson Burns, J. W. Horsley, F. C. Lillingstone, Canon Hurst Leigh, C. B. Symes, E. A. Stuart, and J. P. Gledstone, Major Poole, Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., Dr. Kirton, &c. It was unfortunate that while the addresses of these speakers were of a pointed and practical character—some especially good—they were so prolonged as to leave very little time, sometimes none, for Mr. Noble to speak, which, besides being a disappointment to many, protracted the meetings till nearly half-past ten on many nights. Consequently, the number of pledges taken was nothing like what might have been expected from such stirring appeals, as the tent was half empty before the meetings concluded. The general results of the mission, however, bid fair to gratify the ardent anticipations of all concerned in the movement, and will, we trust, strengthen the hands of Mr. W. Greene and his helpers, who have so earnestly laboured in this good cause in Highgate for some time past.

LE MANS, FRANCE.—In 1853, thanks to a few Protestants from other places, a Reformed Church was again formed in Le Mans, which was a Protestant stronghold in the sixteenth century. At first, they met in a house to which the Pasteur from Angers came to hold a service once a month. The number of adherents increasing from year to year, it was judged necessary to invite a Pasteur. The one who received the call of the church came from Jersey. One or two English families came to his aid, and he at last succeeded in erecting a very modest church building in the Rue du Bourg-Bele. It is this temporary place of worship which serves us still to-day. The inconveniences and discomfort of this church are great, and it would be trouble thrown away to attempt to restore it to a good condition. A new one must be constructed, but for that, a sum of at least £1200 would be necessary. It is impossible to provide it ourselves. We hope our Christian friends in England and Scotland will feel constrained to sympathise with us. Our church is the only Protestant one in the department of Sarthe. L. Stapfer, Pasteur.

Notes and Comments.

IN a letter just received from Mr. Moody, he asks us to suggest to any friends on this side the sea who purpose attending the ten days' Convention at Northfield, Mass., commencing August 5, that an intimation of the fact should reach him by July 5, so that he may prepare for their due accommodation. Those of our readers who are contemplating such a visit will no doubt communicate with Mr. Moody as early as possible.

Mrs. Guinness asks us to state to any friends requiring the assistance of young evangelists during the summer months, either for village missions, tent-work, or as supplies during the absence of regular ministers, that many of the Harley House students, fit to occupy such positions, would be glad to undertake posts of the kind during the approaching vacation months. Letters addressed to the care of Mr. John Barfield, Harley House, Bow, London, E., will receive prompt attention.

The duty of a city to care for the condition of its people has been well shown in Bristol. A large representative Committee of its citizens sat last year to make inquiries concerning the physical and moral state of the poor and of the artizan classes. The report of their deliberations has now been published. It deals with health, labour, education, immorality, intemperance, recreations, poor-law, and charities. Copies may be obtained from P. S. King & Son, London.

This method of dealing with the condition of the people is in every way commendable. It does not entirely trust to Governmental Commissions; it includes all classes, and makes the sufferings of some to be felt by all alike; it does not leave the few earnest persons to struggle alone with gigantic social vices; it pours light over foulnesses that prosper by being hidden; it places before authorities sources of corruption; and it reveals the mistakes of official persons.

Bristol has apparently discovered by this timely inquiry, that the root of manifold social evils is the Poor Law administration. There are other places that are Serbonian bogs from this cause. There is scarcely a more pressing demand at this time, than for the vigilant action of an enlightened public opinion on the neglects and proceedings of relieving officers and the official guardians of the poor. There are signal exceptions, but the whole subject loudly calls for watchful consideration.

There is one point, that relating to immoral houses, on which the Committee speak out by no means too plainly. They report:

> "No remedy can be found till there exists a higher tone of public opinion as regards the sin of fornication. . . . Nor," the Committee believe, "will any improvement in such public opinion be permanent unless founded on those higher views of personal holiness and respect for the body and its chastity which are an essential part of Christianity."

Of this Bristol Committee three-fourths would appear to have been laymen belonging to various religious denominations. Such an example should be followed elsewhere. Christian communities are loudly summoned to take common action in relation to the awful miseries and immoralities that are being fostered in the midst of them by a shameless selfishness. The social evils of the times threaten society; the remedy is not so much with Parliament, as many imagine, as with Christian citizens themselves.

Two timely protests have been written by members of the Society of Friends * against the thoroughly unsound and dangerous book "A Reasonable Faith," by Three "Friends," which we reviewed some few months ago. Our readers will have noticed in our columns that these are not the only protests which have been raised, and we congratulate the Society of Friends on the evidence thus afforded that a book which seeks to overthrow much that is vital in Christianity is not one they will readily endorse. In the usual Epistle, issued by the Yearly Meeting, this subject is specially referred to, and the evangelical doctrine of the Atonement very earnestly enforced.

Resolutions have recently been passed at a public meeting at Wimbledon, in which it was resolved—

> "That to check the gradually increasing practice of betting and gambling, it is desirable that an Act of Parliament be passed—(1) Making it an offence subject to penalty for the Press to report betting transactions, and thus give encouragement to the system as if it were a legitimate commercial enterprise, which the country, by its voice in Parliament, has declared that it is not, as proved by several Acts during the present reign. (2) Making it an offence subject to penalty to transmit betting transactions by telegraph. (3) Restricting the Post Office authorities from transmitting betting telegrams."

These resolutions were sent to Sir Trevor Lawrence, M.P., and Sir J. Whitaker Ellis, M.P., with a request that they would take steps to give effect to this publicly-expressed wish of a portion of their constituents.

In the letter containing these Resolutions, Mr. C. F. Dowsett shows that gambling and betting have greatly increased during the past few years. This is proved by—(1) The large number of sporting papers that have sprung into existence, whose betting announcements are consulted with increasing avidity by an increasing number of young men; (2) The fact that half the gamblers at Monte Carlo are English, and are the most determined gamblers; (3) That the profits arising from betting telegrams constitute about one-third of the telegraph revenue; (4) That gambling is carried on systematically on the railways and ocean steamers, and the streets are becoming the hunting-ground of sharpers, three-card tricksters, sham lottery holders, and other similar impostors; (5) That the public Press is allowed to encourage and extend the vice of gambling.

But one of the worst features of this evil is that special facilities are given by the Government Post and Telegraph offices for breaking the law in this respect. "One who Knows" wrote to The Times last year that he was "practically aware how terrible the peril is, and that parents sending their lads into the Post-offices of this country, little think that there is the greatest danger of their sons, and possibly daughters, becoming confirmed gamblers."

The chief part of the business done in the telegraph offices open on the Lord's day is the transmission of betting messages. Well may the question be asked, "Is it consistent that Acts should be in force for the purpose of suppressing betting, and yet that the Government Post-offices and the public Press should act in open opposition to them?"

It is greatly to the credit of the Directors of the Cunard Steamship Company that they have taken steps towards the suppression of the practice of gambling on board their vessels. A correspondent, who is a shareholder in the Company, having read our recent comments on the subject, wrote calling the attention of the Directors to the evil; he sends us a copy of the following circular, which has been addressed to the Commanders of the vessels owned by the Company:—

> Captain, R. M. S.
> Dear Sir,—The attention of my colleagues and myself has been directed to the system of gambling pursued on board of Atlantic steamships, and I wish very strongly to impress upon you the necessity of doing everything in your power to discountenance and check a practice which the Directors agree with me in thinking can only effectually be prevented by the exercise of the authority of the Commanders. Personally I beg your immediate and serious attention to this matter in regard to the vessel under your command, as it is our anxious desire that such practices should not exist on board the steamships of the Cunard Company.—I am, yours faithfully, (Signed) John Burns.
> Cunard SS. Co., Limited, Liverpool, June 11.

As far as the Cunard Company are concerned it only remains for the various Commanders to carry out the mandate of their superiors; doubtless they will feel it to be their duty to do so in the most loyal and thorough manner. The Directors of other steamship companies have now an example before them which it will be to their highest interest to follow.

In a little book published by Mr. Elliot Stock, and entitled "O Mother, Mother!" there occurs the following passage:—

> "Ask the mothers of England why they are concerning themselves so anxiously about good drainage and pure water, when the cesspools of impure literature are in their very homes? Ask them why they rush hither and thither to escape from contagious diseases, while a disease worse than anything that can assail the body is festering in the souls of their children? Ask them wherefore all this eager analysis of food, while the mental aliment, so much more readily assimilated, is allowed to retain its abominable adulterations? Ask them why, when they are so busy trying to reclaim the poor outcasts of humanity, they do not look more closely into the mischief that is spreading in their own homes, where charity, though it should not end there, ought most assuredly to begin?"

Yes, "Why?" A physician the other day wrote:—"Do not talk to me of 'the drink' while drawing-rooms are flooded with the moral poison called by the name of novels. I am attending girls who are positively dying of a slow, languid disease, brought on by impurity contracted through the pages of the filthy modern novel! Heart-disease? Consumption? Nothing of the kind! All the moral oxygen gets starved out, and

'In glowing health, with boundless wealth,
But sickening of a vague disease,' these votaries of the novel pollute the air they breathe, and then die from all kinds of disease injected by impure reading." Another gentleman writes:—"If 'Adelicia, Evanessa and Company' were burnt alive, it would be only what they deserve." Yet no law can touch these wholesale moral murderers. "O, mothers, mothers!" will not you take the matter into your own hands, and save your girls?

* A Reasonable Faith by Three "Friends" Refuted. By George H. Braithwaite. S. Harris & Co. Christ Crucified: with Strictures on "A Reasonable Faith by Three Friends." By Another Friend. E. W. Allen.

> "Specimen, 12 stamps. Single sermon for any Sunday, 1s. Missionary, hospital, or club sermons, 2s. 6d. each." "Plain teaching of High Church tone." "Beautifully simple, and all preachable." "Your sermons are superior to anything of the sort I have seen."

These extracts, from the advertisement columns of a Ritualistic contemporary, point to the development of a trade of sermon preparation, evidently designed to meet a large and pressing demand. That there should be scope for such an employment is surely not a fact to be rejoiced over. No wonder if the pulpit should lose much of its power when men, who have declared that they have been Divinely called to the ministry, are unwilling or unable to produce sermons of their own, and feel at liberty to buy, for a few pence, the matter which is generally supposed to have cost much study, and to have been earnestly prayed over. The modern working man who has access to the best writing of the day, is far from likely to be attracted by such sermons and such preaching, and if he is not reached perhaps a little of the indignation which is so frequently expressed with regard to his staying away from church might, with reason, be transferred to those who fail to show by their words or acts that they have received the Divine authority which they so dogmatically assume.

The paper from which the above advertisements were taken has a leading article magnifying the office of the Archdeacon. It contains the following remarkable passage, a portion of which would seem to have special reference to the churches where the ready-made, cheap, "preachable" sermons are used:—

> "The internal condition of a large number of country churches is nothing less than disgraceful. Dust, dirt, and untidiness, except, perhaps, so far as meets the eye on a Sunday, reign unchallenged. Especially where the church is the village dormitory, it is pretty sure to be the parish pigsty as well; for a listless vicar is almost certain to mean a careless verger."

The President of the English Church Union, Hon. Charles L. Wood, has, at a meeting of the E.C.U., just held, expressed a desire for union with Rome, in a manner which forms a striking contrast to the language on this subject which has been till lately used by even High Church divines. His words are, as reported in The Times:—

> "Union among themselves and the restoration of the visible unity with the members of the Church abroad, East and West alike, but above all with the great Apostolic See of the West, with the holy Roman Church, which had done so much to guard the true faith—these surely should be their objects, and the objects nearest their hearts."

We would commend to the English Church Union Dr. Littledale's "Plain Reasons against joining the Church of Rome"—a very excellent manual written for the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge by a decidedly High Churchman. Here they will find very plain reasons against calling the Church of Rome "the Holy Roman Church," as Mr. Wood does. He first shows that "whereas Roman Catholics are less than five per cent. of the population, they contribute, wherever they are collected, from sixteen to sixty-seven per cent. of the criminals to our prisons; that is to say from three to thirteen times their fair share of crime. Speaking of the "wickedness of the local Church of Rome," he says:—

> "When we come face to face with the question of the sanctity of the Roman See and its occupants, . . . it is precisely Rome which has sunk lowest, longest, and oftenest; which has been the foulest cesspool of wickedness, profligacy, depravity of all kinds; which has had the greatest number of abandoned criminals amongst its bishops."

Mr. Bright has written a letter re the Poole perjury case, on which Truth thus comments:—

> "John Bright's letter on the Poole perjury case ought to produce some effect even upon Sir W. Harcourt. Writing to a meeting at Birmingham, Mr. Bright says, 'I hope the case may be reconsidered. There is great doubt as to the justice of the verdict, and the sentence seems to me simply barbarous.' This is a good deal for such a man as John Bright to say. But he would, I venture to think, say much more, and use some very much stronger language indeed, if he knew all the facts of the case. But will Mr. Bright be content with merely uttering this mild protest through the press? He is a power in the House of Commons. Let him, then, but impugn the justice of the sentence there, and the man Williams will doubtless soon be set at liberty. Actions speak louder than words, and more effectively."

The new American Minister has complimented this country on the even-handed justice administered by our judges. We must take care that we do not forfeit this good opinion. We have recently very seriously imperilled it. For example: At St. Helen's recently, a railway-ticket collector, for stealing two half-tickets, was sent to prison for two months with hard labour; while on the same day, before the same "bench," a man was fined two shillings and sixpence, and six shillings costs, for cruelly assaulting and threatening his wife.

Take, again, the following extracts from the same number of a daily paper as showing the relative value attached by magistrates to persons and property:—

> A girl of eight years of age was the daughter of a widower who paid 4s. a week to the defendant and his wife for keeping her. The defendant ordered her to strip, and lashed her most cruelly with a horse-whip. Medical evidence was given to show that the child had been most violently beaten. The defendant was fined three pounds.

> The defendant was charged with stealing a leather purse, containing 4s., from an outside jacket pocket. He pleaded guilty, and said he had been out of employment for a long time. He was sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour.

Three pounds without imprisonment for inhumanly assaulting a girl eight years old. Three months' imprisonment with hard labour for stealing four shillings and a purse. Is this "even-handed justice"?

The Manchester City Mission is about to send bands of missionaries and volunteer preachers to upwards of eighty fairs, wakes, and races during the summer months in conjunction with the London Open-air Mission. The co-operation of friends either to accompany the missionaries or to take their work in Manchester during their absence would be welcomed. Address Mr. J.W. MacGill, City Mission, Manchester, mentioning the Sundays which can be given. This is a useful suggestion, and may lead to much profitable and agreeable interchange of work.

A High Church guide-book recently published for the information of tourists, gives full particulars with reference to the churches at which the service is in accordance with ritualistic views. From its pages we learn that in England there are now 869 churches at which "altar lights" are used, 38 where incense is burnt, 1463 always open for private prayer, 449 where vestments are worn, and 2858 where "the Eastward position" is taken. These figures show a large increase since the previous edition of the guide was issued. It is open to doubt, however, if the tourist is to be congratulated upon the fact; it may be that he would be quite content with less incense and fewer altar lights if he only could get a little more faithful preaching of the gospel of the lowly Jesus.

We regret to say that Mrs. Wilkes is ill. We hope her friends will not allow her to be harassed by need of funds for her beneficent work of rescue in the East-end.

Miss Marsh has issued, under the title of "Brief Memories of Hugh McCalmont," a memorial sketch of the late Earl Cairns (Nisbet, 1s.), which, we doubt not, will soon be in the hands of those who love and honour the memory of that deeply-lamented Christian statesman.

With a hearty welcome we greet the second volume of Dr. Parker's "People's Bible." (Hodder.) Exodus affords a mighty theme, but not every man is able to rise to the grandeur of the subject. The quality most manifest in these sublime discourses we should say is insight. The veil is taken off the outward letter, and the spirit is revealed that dwells beneath. In the accounts of Moses, for example, we read the unwritten character of the mother, and discover how she trained her son. The conditions of human life in the individual and in society are the same now as when Moses was in Egypt.

Very appropriate at the present time are the following words of comment upon Moses' first recorded acts:—

> "Moses saw that the conditions of life had a moral basis; in every quarrel as between right and wrong he had a share, because every honourable-minded man is a trustee of social justice and common fair play. . . . We must all fight for the right; and we feel safer by so much as we know that there are amongst us men who will not be silent in the presence of wrong, and will lift up a testimony in the name of righteousness, though there be none to cheer them with one word of encouragement. . . . We must interfere. The cause of righteousness is entrusted to us, and woe be to us if we take counsel with ourselves to save our own quiet at the expense of justice and honour."

We hope the multitude who will read this book with admiration will get these words engraven on their hearts.

"Present-day Christianity" formed the subject of a sermon Dr. Story, of Roseneath, Scotland, lately preached in St. Giles' Cathedral, Edinburgh. Such preaching stands in marked contrast to much of the abstract teaching that some congregations listen to; if it were more frequent, it might break a false complacency in reference to our own times, and show that there are other dangers than commercial ones which threaten the age. These are some of the preacher's words:—

> "It is not without a foreboding of evil to come that one looks on the aspect of so-called Christian society at this date, and marks how much the life of the churches is occupied here with sectarian jealousies, there with mere forms and fashions of religion, and elsewhere with the most abject superstition: how much the life of the world is occupied with what is unreal, morbid, and degraded; with worship of successful wealth, no matter how that wealth has been obtained; with emulation of art which is corrupt in its principles and aims; with the pursuit of pleasures that pollute, and weary, and fail even to satisfy their votaries. One cannot but mark, especially among the young of certain classes, the tone of independence and self-assertion, of cynical contempt for goodness and purity, of dull indifference to all high aims, and, most of all, perhaps, of weariness and discontent with all that they can find in life; the tone of those who, never having tried to lift any of life's heaviest burdens, are finding life itself a burden."

Last week we said, with reference to the days of Edward Irving: "Then, as now, disease was considered a sin." We are requested to say that "no one at Bethshan believes anything of this kind." We did not intend to convey the opposite impression; our remark was a general one, and had no special reference to Bethshan.

"HE KEPT HIS WORD."

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

BY A FOREMAN PAINTER.

As the writer was returning home from preaching in the open air on a recent Sunday morning, at an old-established station in North London, he was accosted by a stranger, an artisan in appearance, who said :—

Good morning, sir. I thought I would stroll up this morning and have a look at you all. Many a Sunday morning "regular" have I strolled up to get some drink at that public-house (pointing to it). I thank God things are different now. It was through one of your Y.M.C.A.'s that I was brought to know Him. One Sunday afternoon I was walking along the Essex-road with plenty of money, having had plenty to drink, and with a bundle of cigars in my pocket. Having missed all my pals I was somehow feeling strangely miserable, when one of your young men from the Islington Association came up to me, and said, "Well, brother, will you come to our place at the Priory, and have a cup of tea?" I said, "You ain't my brother." He said, "Yes, I am; but never mind that. Will you come and have some tea?" I said, "Well, you ask me so pleasant like, I don't mind if I do; but nothing besides the tea, please." I knew what he wanted me to go to tea for. So he says, "All right. You come to tea, and no one shall speak to you." So I went; and we had a pleasant time; and no one spoke a word to me about religion, and didn't even ask me to go to their meetings; and I came away.

That struck me very much, that he kept his word. I could not get over that. My pals did not keep their word, but this young man did. So I says to myself, "I shall go back to that place next Sunday;" and I did. I began to feel quite respectable, and thought I was all right. But presently I had an awful turn at the drink again; that was my trouble. But still I wanted to be good and respectable; I liked the taste I had had of it. But I was too ashamed to go back to that hall. That's where the devil got an advantage over me; I believe if I had gone back, I should have been saved at once.

However I went to other halls; and had some bad turns, and repented over and over again. I felt that things were getting so bad that something must be done. One Saturday night I went to a Gospel Temperance meeting and put on the blue ribbon. When I got back to my shopmates on Monday they all laughed at me, and one, the most leary of them, said, "Why, Dickie, old man, you'll never keep it." I felt very bad, and that it was now or never; so jumping up on the bench before my mates, I cried aloud, "Oh God, you know how weak I am; how I long to take a drink out of that pot now; if You don't keep me I must fall; God, take away the taste for it, and set me free." One of them said, "Dickie, your God will never keep you from it." I said my God could, if He chose, set my arm so that I could not get my hand above my elbow; or He could make my hand leave go of the pot as I was raising it to my mouth, and so all the beer be spilt.

Three weeks passed by without my giving way, when the same mate came up to me, and said, "Dickie, I think your God must have heard your prayer." I said, "Bill, I don't think He has; I know He has; for He has taken the taste right away, and I don't want a drop."

My wife was a Christian all this time, but I would not let her speak to me about God, and I would not go to the mission hall she went to.

About this time she fell very ill, and the Doctor said she was so weak that a puff of wind would kill her; still I used to tease her and say, "Your God—no, I can't trust Him. I tried Him once and don't believe in Him. If He would do some great thing so that I could see it perhaps I might. Don't you talk to me about your God."

You can fancy my surprise when one day when I got home she was up and dressed, and opened the door for me. I said, "Why, Min, it can't be you!" "Yes it is, Dickie," says she. But she never said, "See what my God has done for me." I should have taunted her like that if it had happened to me—but she never did. That struck me as much as that young man keeping his word. I could not get over those two things. She told me how one of her friends and she had agreed to pray, and how the Lord had healed her by faith.

The next Sunday I felt very bad; I meant to go to her mission hall; but the devil kept on tempting me not to go, at any rate not to go with her. I never can make out how he let me go at all, for it was the end of our connection.

That morning I did not go out. One of my pals came round to look for me, and said to my wife, "Is Dickie in?" I sang out, "I ain't coming out to-day, so 'sling your hook,' or I'll come down and bash you; and if you meet any of the other fellows coming tell 'em the same."

When evening came she set out as usual; and in a little while I followed. She must have felt me come in, for she didn't look round, but I saw her make a motion to let me alone. Presently a man came up, and looking at me, was about to speak, when I said, "Who are you staring at?" That upset me, and I got up to go out, but the back of the hall was so crowded I couldn't easily get through. My wife came to me, and she made a way through the people, and we went home together; and there I sat smoking my pipe and feeling perfectly miserable. At last I could bear it no longer, but, laying down my pipe on the table, I fell on my knees and asked God to pardon me, a poor, wicked sinner; and there and then I found pardon and peace through Jesus Christ.

After that I wanted to get my mates saved, and I began with the best of them. I went to him and said, "Bill, you are a man of your word; I want you to promise to come with me the next three Sundays, wherever I like to take you; and after that, you can take me wherever you like for six Sundays." After a time he agreed. I would not take him to our hall lest the fellows should "get at" him, and he shouldn't like it. So I took him to another hall. He was not converted the first Sunday, nor yet the second, though I took him to another hall, and I began to get half despairing; but I said, "O God, you are able to convert him this last Sunday." But he wasn't saved. So at eight o'clock the next Sunday morning he was round at my place, and said, "Come along, Dickie, it's my turn now." He took me to a place where they were drinking and swearing and blaspheming.

Directly we got in they said, "What you, Dickie; we thought you were a Christian!" I said to my pal, who was a fighting man, that as I had kept the fellows off him on my three Sundays, so now he must get me quiet to speak, and so he did. So I told them it was quite true that I was a Christian, that I belonged to the Lord Jesus Christ, and I let them have the Gospel; and then I explained the agreement we had made.

At the end of the third Sunday, my mate said, "Dickie, old fellow, I can't stand it any longer. It's too bad to take you to these places." But I said, "Bill, you must go on. They say Christians don't keep their word; and I want you to be able to say that you know a man as kept his word, although he didn't like it." So he kept on; and where do you think he took me the last Sunday night of the six? To the Britannia Theatre; and there the Lord saved his soul, that sixth night, and he's been a Christian ever since.

NAVVIES AT WHITSUNTIDE.—Through the exertions of General Maclean, Mr. Brown the navvy missionary, by the help of the Navvy Missionary Society, gave two good meat teas to the navvies employed on the new line of railway near Wimborne, numbering about 300. After tea on Whit-Monday a Temperance meeting was held in the Town Hall, Wimborne, and was addressed by Rev. S. Vosper Thomas. On Tuesday the missionary commenced a week's Gospel services which were well attended by the men, who joined heartily in the singing and prayers. The result of the effort has been twenty-three Temperance pledges, while others have expressed their determination to lead a new and better life.

A VISION OF THE NIGHT.

"In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed. then He openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction."—Job xxxiii. 15, 16.

He dreamed that he stood in a darkened room,
 And gazed on an empty chair;
Black Doubt was wrapping his soul in gloom,
"Ah! was there a life beyond the tomb?"
 (The earth-mists had filled the air;)
And straight up to God went a deep heart cry,
From a soul in its lonely agony.

Then sudden a gleam from the Light beyond,
 Shone clear through the chill dark night;
He strove, but in vain, its source to see,
Too high rose the shining mystery,
 The glory was far too bright;
All its heavenward course no eye could trace,
Sight never could fathom the depths of space!

He followed the ray towards the earth again,
 That pathway of glowing light;
Down, down, close down at his very feet,
Behold! a vision most passing sweet,
 A never-forgotten sight;
A message from heaven was there enrolled,
TRUST, written in letters of shining gold!

All the clouds of darkness were swept away,
 Like mists by the rising sun;
The phantom of Doubt no more could stay
Than spectre fire-light shadows, when Day
 Hath its glorious victory won.
Trust, trust in God's perfect love, until sight,
Unveiled, shall behold Him as perfect Light.

MR. HAMMOND IN SHEFFIELD.

The meetings conducted by Rev. E. P. Hammond in Sheffield, are daily being owned of God. The ministers who have thrown their hearts into the work testify that many are evidently being led to faith in Christ.

At one of the evening prayer-meetings last week, the evangelist read the following letter, which he had just received from the Girls' College, Marrash, Turkey :—

"Dear Sir,—Your book entitled 'The Conversion of Children' has been received, with thanks. It has confirmed me in a belief I have always had, that our most fruitful efforts are among the young. I lent my copy to one of our students at the Theological Seminary, who returned it to me with a note saying he had read the book with great interest, and would endeavour to impart the truths it contains to others. I am sure this will encourage you to feel that some will be helped, away in Turkey among the heathens, by your experience and teaching. Yesterday at our noon prayer-meeting for the girls and young married women in the city thirty-five led in prayer, and we are expecting many new souls as the result of our recent efforts among this class of girls. What a joy it is to have the least share in the coming of our Lord's kingdom on earth.—Very sincerely yours,

"(Miss) Corrinna Shattuck,
"A.B.C.F.M."

Mr. Hammond said this was one of many interesting letters of a similar character he had received from American missionaries to whom he had sent copies of "The Conversion of Children" and "Gathered Lambs."

A letter received from Mr. Orr Ewing, of Alexandria, says that the recent mission there has been most fruitful in its results.

THE MILITARY AT THE MANSION HOUSE.—In the hope of befriending the Army Scripture Readers' and Soldiers' Friend Society, the Lord Mayor allowed the Committee the use of the Mansion House for a public meeting. In a genial speech, his lordship expressed a warm sympathy with every effort made for the spiritual benefit of the British soldier. General Field spoke of his experiences in India. Rev. Burman Cassin illustrated the Christian character by references to the godly soldiers mentioned in the Bible. Colonel Sparke spoke of the altered condition of the army as compared with a few years ago, and Colonel Sandwith pleaded for funds to maintain and extend the work.

A WOMAN'S WORK AMONG SAILORS.

IN our last issue we noted the sketch, in The Pall Mall Gazette, of Miss Agnes Hedenström nd her work among Scandinavian sailors; we ow make some extracts which will, we trust, nterest our readers :—

"Some thirty years ago, when quite a child, Agnes Hedenström was left an orphan, and was brought up in the house of wealthy relations in Sweden. 'Let the child have her own way; she has no parents, poor thing.' With that excuse all her wilful pranks were passed over, and she grew up into girlhood with no other desire than o enjoy life and to have her own way in everyhing. Over the Scandinavian hills she drove her wild ponies; she lived among woods and lowers, boisterous and passionate in all her games and gambols. But now and then a sense of dissatisfaction, a longing for something which ould not be defined, a void in her life, made tself felt, and aimlessly she wandered about, eeking rest and finding none. One day she heard a celebrated Swedish preacher; he touched he sore place in her heart, and now she knew what it was that was wanting in her life. But till she went on, blindly groping about, trying o secure peace by almsgiving, by gentleness to her friends, and kindness to her inferiors. Nothing, however, would avail; the craving and yearning increased, and the life of childish, eckless happiness became a thing of the past. Once more she drove her ponies through the ields, but this time they wandered as they pleased while their young driver sat in a state of abstraction. While lost in thought she saw a cow grazing, fastened by a long chain, Northern ashion; it had eaten off all the juicy herbs and lowers as far as it could reach. 'You are like that cow,' she said to herself; 'you have taken everything you could, and now you are straining, ike this cow, after the good things which are beyond your reach. But why not cut the chain and obtain the objects of your desire?' 'Yes,' she said, 'I will cut the chain; I will be free.' Urging the ponies to a gallop, the girl reached home, overwhelmed with joy, crying, 'I am free, free, free!' She called it out to her friends, who whispered: 'She has lost her senses. She was always too highly strung.' She shouted the marvel out to the flowers and firs around her home, she repeated it to the humblest of friends, and made it known to one and all that she was free, that the chain of her old life was broken.

"From that day forth she was changed. The young girl with the brilliant eyes preached to her countrymen and women in the north where no woman was allowed to speak in public. First she addressed them at small meetings; but her burning words attracted wider notice: thousands thronged around her; in the country and in the towns, chiefly at Upsala, she preached; high and low listened to her in silence, and many there were who by her words were changed, and became different, better men and women. For some years she continued her work, then she believed that she was called abroad, into the wide harvest field of India, where the labourers are few. For India she started, and arrived in England to live with an English lady until the opportunity should offer to go out to India. But while assisting her English friend in the religious work in which the latter was engaged, Miss Hedenström became aware of the enormous work which needs to be done in East London, and she resolved at once to abandon her first plan, and to take up the work which lay nearest at hand. And was there not an immense field ready for her?" . . .

"When the Leman-street Home was first taken on a seven years' lease, its disadvantages had yet to be discovered by experience. They have proved to be such that Fröken is determined not to renew the lease at the expiration of the seven years, of which two years are wanting. It should be said that the Committee, discouraged at the many difficulties and the apparent failure of the Home as a self-supporting institution, withdrew three years after it was formed, leaving everything in Miss Hedenström's hands, who gives a periodical account of her management to a public accountant. The chief of these disadvantages are the inconvenient size of the bedrooms, dining-rooms, and kitchen, the two latter being far too small; and the situation of the Home itself, which, if nearer to the Docks, might prove much more useful to the sailors. The work has also grown so much that the accommodation in the present Home is altogether insufficient. With eighty-five beds at her disposal, Miss Hedenström has every day to find sleeping-room for a hundred sailors, and many have to be sent away who would gladly avail themselves of the opportunity offered to them of spending their time among their own countrymen. The fact that the Home has hitherto not been self-supporting is accounted for by Miss Hedenström in the following manner :—'When the work was first begun we had not sufficient capital to start it fairly, but the need was so great that it was impossible to wait. So we had to run into debt at once, and though we have gained much ground, we are not quite free of it yet, the voluntary subscriptions, which are the only thing we can fall back on, not being very extensive. At the beginning not very many of our sailors could pay the full price for board and lodging, which is 16s. a week, there were so many destitute ones among them. Even now they cannot all pay; some have been shipwrecked, or ill, or robbed of their earnings; and though, as a rule, sailors are far too proud to accept what they call "charity," they cannot pay if they have nothing to pay with, and I cannot possibly send them away into the streets when they come to me poor and desolate.

"'But I have not the slightest doubt that a new Home would be self-supporting, because in it I should only take in men who can pay, and for the poor and destitute I would keep a few rooms in this neighbourhood, which would not be a very expensive affair. The food for them would come from the larger Home, where there are always plenty of remainders, for it must be remembered that one of the first things which a sailor requires when he comes to shore is good food and plenty of it. If I do not give them that, they are off to the boarding master, whose table is always laden with good things as long as the sailor has money in his pocket. What I would like to do is this. There is a plot of land close to the East India Docks; I believe there is no site in all London which could be more suitable for my plan than just this plot; the owner is a pleasant man, who does not ask too high a price for it. If I could buy it, and had the necessary funds to build, I should make the plan of the Home myself, as experience has taught me what would best meet the wants of the sailors, and I am sure that such a Home would prove an invaluable benefit to many more of the 14,000 Scandinavians who annually enter the London port. Nobody can know, who has not watched with me from the beginning, what a difference it makes in the life of these men, who are so easily led for good as well as for evil, if they are under the continued influence of a home in which their bodies and souls are cared for with loving interest. They do not become different all at once; time after time they must have been here; they must slowly be accustomed to look at things in a different light, with less carelessness and improvidence. But I have never yet had a sailor among the 5000 who have been in the Home, who has returned from it to his former haunts, and, thank God! there are at present a good many decently dressed men among the Scandinavian sailors in London, whereas, when I began my work, the great majority of those who came under my notice looked ragged or slipshod. I can do but little to raise the funds; my work is little known in England; but never yet have I asked anything in vain from my Heavenly Father, and He will bring this to pass, in his own good time. Of that I am confident.'"

WORKWOMEN IN THE CITY.—In our recent notice of Mrs. Fisher's work among this class, she was represented as saying "We are now obliged to part with our Bible-woman." It should have been "with one Bible-woman;" two of these workers are still busily employed in connection with this effort.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

THE annual meeting of this Mission was held on Thursday last in Lord Shaftesbury's residence, Grosvenor-square. His lordship took the chair. After prayer by Rev. T. Baron Hart, Mr. Weylland (hon. secretary for England) presented the annual report with regret that the London Committee had sent to Paris £63 less than in former years, leading to the dismissal of two missionaries last year; this year, however, four more had been appointed. Mr. Weylland gave an account of a successful Gospel service he had held in the theatre at Chantilly among the grooms and jockeys there.

Rev. T. H. Gill (deputation from Paris) had not had a long experience of Paris life, but he had found the spiritual needs of the city to be vast. The Paris Mission, like the London City Mission, was the friend of all good works, the opponent of none. It formed a bond of union between English and French pastors and workers of all denominations. The necessity of the work is great, as it combats the two great enemies of Gospel work in Paris, incredulity and superstition. The Paris missionaries go from door to door and from heart to heart carrying Gospel truth. At the funeral of Victor Hugo they aided in the distribution of 25,000 tracts composed for the occasion by Mr. McAll and 12,000 by Miss de Broen; men came down to obtain these leaflets from trees where they had been stationed for sixteen hours. The missionaries specially visit neglected districts, and the speaker urged Christians to increase the number of missionaries four-fold.

Mr. F. A. Bevan said the French would listen to the Gospel, but not to the teachings of their priests. The missionaries are well received by the people, who will not come to halls. If 460 men are not half enough for London, what, asked Mr. Bevan, are eight for Paris, with its two millions of inhabitants?

Dr. Underhill said no Christian could go to Paris without feeling pained at noticing the few churches that are devoted to the preaching of the pure Gospel of Christ. He testified to the activity of the French Baptist Church, consisting of nearly 200 members, all of whom are converts from Romanism.

Rev. T. Baron Hart said he had resided in Paris for twenty years, but had now left the city. He looked on the late Victor Hugo as a typical Frenchman, who believed in a God and a future state, but could not believe in the priests, and thus was driven to a Deism that abandons all worship. Respecting the four new missionaries, the men were appointed and must be maintained, for the needs of Paris are quite as great as those of London.

Mr. W. J. Lockie (the Paris secretary) spoke of the work amongst the stable-boys, jockeys, and grooms at Chantilly, and warmly urged the appointment of a ninth missionary to help Rev. Wm. Gibson.

Lord Shaftesbury said such Societies as this softened asperities amongst neighbour nations. He related his conversation on Gospel work with a French Cabinet minister, who said, "Go on, my heart is with you." He also told of the conversion of Hone, the noted Infidel, and in conclusion wished the Paris City Mission every success. Nearly £70 were contributed at the meeting.

HASTINGS Y.W.C.A.—A boarding-house, intended especially for young ladies in houses of business, was opened here at 37, Wellington-square, on Monday, June 8. It has been called Mildmay House. The funds have been supplied to furnish part of the house, the rent having been already given for two years. Dedicatory services were held morning and evening, and the presence of the Lord was manifestly experienced. We commend this new effort to the earnest prayers of all who are interested in young women. Contributions towards the rest of the furnishing, &c., will be thankfully received by Miss Langham, 52, Cambridge-road, Hastings.

ENGLAND AND THE OPIUM TRADE.

THE path of the social and national reformer is a rugged and difficult one. At every step of the way he is confronted by difficulties and obstacles raised by self-interest, or official red tape, or the obliquity of moral view which concludes that whatever is is right. Such has been the experience of the Society founded for the Suppression of the Opium Trade between India and China. Greatest, perhaps, of all the obstructions that have retarded the fruition of their hopes, is the ignorance or dull indifference of the great mass of their countrymen with respect to the evils of opium consumption, and the blackness of the guilty stain that tarnishes the fair fame of Great Britain, in her treatment of the Chinese by forcing upon them, at the point of the sword, the deadly and hateful drug.

It was not very encouraging to find but a mere handful of people at the Mansion House last week at the anniversary of the Society. The meeting, it is true, had been postponed through the death of Lord Mayor Nottage, and the lateness of the season may have helped to thin the audience. Still, a subject so gravely affecting the moral responsibility of one great nation and the social life of another ought to have filled the halls of the mayoral mansion to overflowing.

Mr. STORRS TURNER, Secretary, read portions of the report, which recites in outline the somewhat tardy progress of the movement for suppression during the year. The continued delay in the ratification of the Chefoo Convention, has doubtless to a large extent paralysed the action of the committee as far as Parliamentary agitation is concerned, but they have been doing their best, by publications and lectures, to enlighten the public mind as to the evils of opium smoking, and the culpability of this country in drawing revenue from the very life-blood of the Chinese people. Mr. Turner said that on the evening, last week, after the Ministerial defeat which has ended in their resignation, a question was on the paper addressed to the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs with respect to the reported settlement with the Chinese Government. Owing to the political crisis the question was not formally answered, but Lord E. Fitzmaurice had handed a written reply to Mr. Cropper, M.P., and authorised its publication. It was to the effect that, in addition to the usual Customs' duty, the inland duty on imported opium would be considerably increased. This arrangement may be satisfactory to the Chinese revenue authorities, but we fail to see how it relieves the Indian Government of its burden of moral responsibility.

The LORD MAYOR said that the question was every year becoming more difficult to deal with, as the revenue of India was getting more deeply involved. It might have been dealt with far more easily forty years ago than now, but the opportunity was lost, and to this day we are resting under the great national stigma of encouraging the demoralisation of the Chinese. His Lordship, at some length, sought to show that, as a nation, we are more culpable in our opium dealing than in connection with the drink traffic, and he hinted that Englishmen might do worse than put their hands into their pockets and make up the deficiency in the Indian revenue that would follow the abolition of the Government traffic in opium.

Mr. THEODORE FRY, M.P., said many had hoped that the arrangement of the trade between India and China would have been far more favourable to repression than that which has been published. Bombay has very recently resented the development of the trade in that Presidency. How can we, as a Christian nation, continue to sanction and even to foster a traffic that is so obnoxious from a moral standpoint, and so deleterious in its effect on the Chinese?

Rev. Dr. KAY was of opinion that of late years there had been a little remissness in arousing the national conscience as to the evils that attend the consumption of the opium drug. It was very discouraging to the friends of reform to find that many public men of great intelligence and high moral probity appear content to take neutral ground with respect to this question. He contended that national disaster was bound to follow national persistence in wrong-doing; on the other hand, if a nation repents of evil, and takes a righteous course of action, no power on earth could do her harm.

Mr. JAMES CROPPER, M P., said he had always deemed it a grave national sin that we as a professedly Christian people should force on a weak and heathen nation a drug that debases and destroys its population. The Society had done something in making our Government recognise the injustice of this, and the recent arrangement with the Chinese is to some extent a concession to the equity of the case. We may hope that the moral sense of the Chinese nation itself will speedily be raised to a point that will induce it not only to resent the importation of the drug, but to prohibit the native growth.

Rev. TIMOTHY RICHARDS, from Shansi, having given some statistics as to the great prevalence of the habit of opium-smoking among the Chinese,

Rev. F. J. MASTERS said it was a recognised fact that opium-smoking was the greatest difficulty met with in missionary work. One out of every three inquirers who go to mission halls is a slave to the power of the drug. When one of these is regenerated and reclaimed from the power of the habit, missionaries do more to commend Christianity to the Chinese than anything else that could be imagined. The speaker related a case of one who, after a temporary abstinence from the drug, relapsed and baffled all efforts for his restoration. Cases of this sort frequently happening could not but make the missionary long for the removal of such a terrible curse from the land.

Speaking from a long medical experience in India, Dr. PRINGLE maintained that the curse of God was on India because of the iniquity of her rulers in cultivating and promoting the consumption of this deadly drug. Dr. Pringle referred to the report made a few years ago respecting the prevalence of opium-smoking in British Burmah, by Sir C. Aitchinson, then Commissioner of that province. The speaker declared that such a tale of mourning and lamentation and woe had not been put on record since the days of Ezekiel; he waxed righteously indignant at the thought that this official report had as yet led to no policy of restriction in that part of the British possessions. Having ourselves read this report, we fully coincide with the strong view taken by Dr. Pringle. We wish we could print this official document in extenso, but we hope to give some of its more startling passages in an early issue.

General DAVIES, who also spoke from a long Indian experience, referred further to the condition of British Burmah, where he for some time held an official post. For centuries, under native rule, he said, the use of opium was absolutely prohibited. Now, on the authority of our own official, we find the country wholly demoralised. The General dwelt at some length on the condition of the Burmese, and the oppressive way in which they are ground down by taxation, and contended that they ought to be freed from the fearful temptations to which the opium traffic exposed them.

Mr. B. BROOMHALL signified his dissent from the expressed opinion that the solution of the revenue question was more difficult now than formerly. If the Indian Government were in earnest about it it could be solved. When Major Baring, the Indian Finance Minister, was able to remit three millions of taxation, why were not some steps taken towards the abolition of the infamous opium trade? Before the meeting closed Mr. D. McLAREN added his quota of condemnation to that which had gone before.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—On Sunday-week the annual sermon of the Open-air Mission was preached in St. Jude's Church, Mildmay-park, by Rev. D B. Hankin. Selecting the story of Gideon, and addressing himself chiefly to open-air preachers, a considerable number of whom were present, he described them as clamorous for the fray, careless of their comfort, clear in their testimony, confident of success, and consistent in life. The collection amounted to £16 17s. 1d.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING IN BOSTON, U.S.

THE city of Boston in the olden time used to punish by imprisonment those refractory persons who would not go to the meeting-houses and listen to the lengthy discourses of the Puritan divines, but the pendulum has now swung to the opposite extreme, for within a few days past the judges of the Municipal Court have fined a number of ministers for preaching to open-air congregations.

Rev. A. Gordon, D.D., a prominent Baptist clergyman, Rev. W. F. Davis, Superintendent of the North End Mission, Rev. H. L. Hastings, Editor of The (Boston) Christian, Captain Shirley of the Salvation Army, and several others were arraigned for this heinous offence, and fined 10 dols. each. The services were held on Boston Common, and no licence having been obtained, the magistrate said he was obliged to impose the penalty. The case attracted great attention in Boston, and a determination was expressed to test the validity of the law by appeal.

The following Sunday an attempt was again made to hold the public services without a licence, and the authorities again interfered and stopped the preaching. Mr. Davis and Mr. Hastings were arrested, and it being a second offence were fined 30 dols. each. Bonds were given for their appearance before the Supreme Court, and the legality of the arrest will be fully tested.—New York Evangelist.

FIELD-LANE REFUGES AND RAGGED SCHOOLS.

IN the regretted absence of Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Mount Temple presided last week at the annual meeting of this Institution, in Holborn Town Hall. The secretary, Mr. Peregrine Platt, read the report, which stated that the resources of the institution had, during the year, been taxed to the utmost limits to meet the demands made upon them. The Male and Female Refuges had been resorted to by large numbers of the homeless. They were open all the year round, and, to the extent of accommodation, all applicants had been admitted who had been able to give reasonable evidence that they were respectable persons. The number admitted had been 620, and the number of nights' lodgings given, 15,787. The Industrial Schools had clothed, fed, educated, and industrially trained 106 boys and 81 girls. The Free Night School, the Band of Hope, the Servants' Training Home, and the Ragged School had all been in full exercise during the year. There was still a debt of £1000. The institution has no invested funds, and the balance-sheet showed that the ordinary expenses required an additional income of some £400 per annum.

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, Clapham, said it seemed to him that the institution proceeded on the fundamental principle that they despaired of no man of whom God had not despaired. Surely during life God did not despair of men; neither should they. Every lad who came to their refuges had in him something that might be evoked to higher uses than he had ever attained. Board schools could never do the work that such schools as these did, for they needed a Christian agency to impart the true spirit of the Bible.

The Chairman expressed his regret at the absence of Lord Shaftesbury, whose interest in the Field-lane Schools commenced 40 years ago, and was still warm as ever. It was interesting to know that Lord Shaftesbury's first step in that course of philanthropy among the poor which had made him so prominent as a Christian hero, began in the Field-lane schools; if they looked round and saw the wondrous activities that were spreading all about, they would see what a grand advance the public had made in caring for the poor and needy during that period of about forty years. The old Field-lane Ragged School was the father of the other ragged schools, and Lord Shaftesbury was the father, so to speak, of them all. Rev. Joseph Dixon and others also addressed the meeting.

THE BIBLE FOR THE WORLD.—The average issues from the London depôt of the British and Foreign Bible Society are over six thousand volumes a day, and from the various foreign depôts, taken together, the issues are still greater. Printing-presses are employed by the Society, not only in London Oxford, and Cambridge, but also at Paris, Brussels, Amsterdam, Berlin, Cologne, Vienna, Rome, Madrid, Lisbon, Copenhagen, St. Petersburg, Constantinople, Beyrout, Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, Shanghai, Capetown, Sydney, and other centres of activity.—Monthly Reporter.

WHITE FIELDS BY THE SEA.

By FANNIE TURNER.

"DID you ever hear of Adam and Eve?" a lady asked a little girl and boy staying at e seaside.

"No, never!" answered the boy.

"Oh, yes, Edgar," answered his sister; don't you remember we saw them both at the antomime?"

Those children were of high birth, and the boy as heir to a large property. A day or two reviously their mother had been pressed to low them to go to some children's services. No, thank you," she answered scornfully, "I ok after their bodies, and I leave the Almighty care for their souls."

"Do you know who it means by 'a loving riend?'" I asked two children who had stened with interest to the singing of "Lo! a ving Friend is waiting," at a children's seaside rvice.

"It means the gentleman who is speaking," romptly answered the handsome boy.

On my explaining that Mr. Arrowsmith could ot say, "On the cross for thee I suffered," &c., e answered, with a little dignity,

"Ah! I thought it was all just an advertise-ent of the services, and one never expects lvertisements to be all true. That's where I ot wrong, you see."

"Who can tell me anything that the Bible says oout the sea?" I asked some children, while e were sheltering from a shower one Sunday, at carboro'.

A boy quickly answered, "There was a king -but I forget his name—who sat on the sea-ore, and told the waves to go back; but they dn't."

"I don't remember reading that in the Bible," said.

"Don't you?" said his sister. "I think it as the same king who was drowned when he ied to cross the Red Sea."

Several of the children knew the correct story Canute, but only one of them that of haraoh.

A girl of seventeen, the daughter of a lady of tle, listened with great interest to the simplest ible stories, and said to her governess, "I've ever heard anything like this before." "But rely you had a Bible?" said the lady. Mother thought I should want one when I ame to school, so she bought one with my out-t," was the answer. "But did you not hear bout these things in church?" "We never had reakfast till eleven o'clock on Sundays," nswered the girl, "and then it was too late to o to church."

To the question, "Who wrote the first five ooks of the Bible?" a girl of sixteen answered, writing, "The gentlemen whose names they ear."

Surely these few facts (out of many more that ould be told), speak for themselves. The above emarks were not made by ragged, unkempt street arabs," but by children of the decidedly pper classes. None who have not worked mongst these dear little ones can form an idea f their "respectable ignorance," as to "the old, ld story," or, in many cases, of even ordinary ible knowledge, and often they grow up in the ame sad state of ignorance.

"Oh, why did no one tell me this before?" aid a bright young girl, on leaving a children's ervice at Scarboro'. "It's all so strange to ne; but, oh, so beautiful!" and the dark eyes hone with a new and tender light. The simple ospel was, indeed, good news to her, but all ras as new to her as to a child of six or seven. he only prayer she, a girl of nineteen, had ever rayed was—

"Jesus, tender shepherd, hear me, Bless Thy little lamb to-night," &c.

his her nurse had taught her, and she repeated every night, as she said, "as a kind of charm efore going to sleep."

It is just because we know that many of these bright young creatures, capable of such immense influence for good or evil in the future,

"Have never heard
The message of salvation from God's own Holy Word," that we long to rouse interest in them. Of all classes, the rich are the most difficult to reach. It is often difficult to gain access to the children in their homes; but during the summer months (specially August and September) thousands of the children of the upper classes are to be found at the seaside. And I make a special appeal for the practical help and sympathy of Christian ladies in trying to reach many of them during the coming summer. Services for children and young people "not attending Sunday-schools" were held at about forty of our watering-places last summer, by members or friends of the "Children's Special Service Mission," and richly God blessed their labours. It was a true "labour of love," for each worker goes entirely at his own expense. They do not ask or wish for "female orators." But there are plenty of openings for true "Woman's Work."

Mr. Hankinson, 48, Paternoster-row, London, E.C., will gladly send reports to any friends wishing to know more of the deeply interesting and important work of the "Children's Special Service Mission."—Woman's Work.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

THE twenty-second annual meeting of the above Mission was recently held at the Gospel Hall, Osborn-place, Brick-lane. Mr. Fredk. C. Cory, M.D. presided. The attendance of those interested in the work was large. Among the useful societies which abound in the East of London for improving the condition of the poor, perhaps none is more deserving than the Spitalfields Gospel Mission. There are Gospel meetings on Sundays and week-days, prayer-meetings, social meetings, free tea-meetings, workmen's meetings, classes for young persons, Sunday-school classes, services for young children, as well as daily visitation, a relief fund, maternal aid, &c. Thus the poor people of the district are enabled by their attendance at the Mission to feel something like "home influences." The house-to-house visitation is an important branch, and one only needs to peruse the simple unvarnished records which Mr. W. J. Lewis, the founder, has set forth in his "Promises Proved" and "Trophies of Grace," to understand the benefits conferred by this system of digging and delving for the deserving poor. There is a ragged school connected with the Mission, in which some 200 children of the match-boy and match-girl type receive instruction. Lodging-house visitation, too, is embraced in the work of the Mission, and the evangelisation of the masses is sought by means of open-air services.

Unobtrusive and good work of this kind deserves to flourish, and it is a regrettable fact that at this, the twenty-second year of its existence, it should transpire, from the reading of the report by the secretary, Mr. Edward Geo. Harvey, that the operations are seriously impeded for want of the necessary support.

We feel that it needs only a proper notice of its beneficial character to bring about a different state of affairs. Well might Mr. Lewis impress upon his hearers to make the work better known. The declining state of his enfeebled health has compelled him to give up his active connection with the movement, and to retire to the more suitable atmosphere of the Isle of Wight, from which place he finds it only possible to supervise affairs in a general way. He congratulated the Mission, however, upon the possession of a superintendent already well known to them, and a secretary who had every promise of being indefatigable.

Mr. George Holland (George-yard Ragged Schools) spoke affectionately of the memories which clung to the building and its work, and urged them to be earnest in prayer. Mr. R. C. Morgan remarked that many years ago a meeting was called at Sussex Hall for prayer, and to plead the cause of the East-enders. It was astonishing in its results; the fullest answer had been vouchsafed. That meeting had, indeed, developed various agencies, and new life was infused into the work of East London. He had worked side by side with Mr. Lewis, and was sure that his presence was an encouragement to the younger members to put forward their best energies. Rev. James T. Bennett (who represented the Rev. Wm. Tyler) said his heart was stirred by the addresses to which it had been their privilege to listen. He hoped the difficulties which now stood in the way were but of a temporary character.—East London Observer.

UNITED STATES BELIEVERS' MEETING.

THE time for our yearly meeting for Bible study is drawing near. Again we extend a cordial invitation to our brethren abroad, and earnestly hope we may have the pleasure of greeting many of them this year. The Conference will be held in the quaint old village of Niagara, Ontario, on the mouth of the Niagara river, and within a dozen miles of the famous Falls. The date is July 23—30.

The subjects considered by the Committee as worthy of careful exegesis and presentation, include Inspiration, theories of Annihilation and Restoration, besides the practical themes of The Holy Spirit, Holiness, Home and Foreign Missions, with consideration of Prophecy. It is needless to add that the promoters of this yearly Conference have no affiliation or sympathy with the advocates of annihilationism and future probation. The Incarnate Word in his offices and glory, and the written Word, in its relation to Him, are always prominent subjects for exposition and meditation.

Besides our brethren, Dr. James. H. Brookes, W. J. Erdman, Major D. W. Whittle, with other prominent teachers long connected with this meeting, new men, sound in the faith, and apt to teach, have promised assistance. Professors Moorehead and Kellogg are teachers of deep spirituality and discrimination; their presence and instruction will be of great value and additional interest. Mr. and Mrs. MacGranahan will have charge of the singing.

Secretary Erdman, on behalf of the Committee, suggests: "Special request is made for earnest prayer on behalf of this meeting. The times demand a plain and positive testimony touching the great truths of the Bible, and the Church is in need of greater and unfaltering faith in the Word of God, of more love and self-denying service, and of joyful hope in the coming glory."

In best bonds, Geo. C. Needham.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE.

SATURDAY, June 6, was a red-letter day in the calendar of this Institution. In the afternoon the Committee and friends, with a number of lads, assembled. Most of the party ascended five ladders to the lofty scaffold, where a short but glad and impressive ceremony took place. Prayer was offered, and sincere thanks rendered to God for all his help and blessing. The topstone of the new building was placed by Mr. Henry Hill, founder and hon. secretary, assisted by Mrs. Hill and the Misses Hill. Mr. Hill expressed the earnest hope that the new Institute might be the means of help and blessing to hundreds of thousands of the lads of London. The great need now was the provision of such Institutes. He hoped the day would come when they would be established in all parts of the Metropolis, and in every town and city throughout the empire. A large red flag (the gift of the hon. sec.) bearing in white letters the inscription, "Working Lads' Institute," was unfurled amid hearty cheers.

The friends descended to the large reading-room on the first floor, where the public meeting was held. Mr. Cooke Baines, who presided, referred to the good which had been accomplished at the old Institute amongst nearly 1300 lads. He spoke hopefully of the larger opportunities for usefulness which the increased accommodation in the new building would afford. Lads needed sympathy and help; the question whether their lives should be a success or a failure depended upon how their youth was spent.

Mr. Henry Hill stated that the Committee expected to open this building next October, and to receive 800 or 1000 members. There would be reading and refreshment rooms, library, evening classes, lectures and entertainments, a good gymnasium, and sixty dormitories, and eventually a swimming bath and lecture hall. They hoped also to have preaching of the Gospel. The entire work would be carried on upon Christian principles, while it would be quite unsectarian. The past has proved that the Institute is a sort of training home for Christian, Temperance, and philanthropic workers. With reference to the recent bazaar, much satisfaction was expressed at the kind and generous help afforded. The net result from the sales was about £250, which, with contributions and purses—£50—would make the total somewhat over £300.

Further information may be obtained from Henry Hill, Hon. Secretary, 38, Bow-lane, E.C.

REST and AIR for CITY YOUNG WOMEN.

WOULD any friends interested in our young women in London and other towns help us in trying to provide rest and change during the summer months for the tired and weary ones among our members, of whom there are so many? Numbers engaged either in business houses or in factories, &c., are quite worn out long before "the season" is over. Yet when their holiday time comes round many of them are unable to meet the expense of visiting their homes (if such they have), or of going to the Convalescent Homes nearer at hand. Thus, without attaining the quiet and fresh air they so sorely need, they have to return to their daily toil little, if at all, refreshed in mind or body.

The readers of this article may possibly know of, or be able to find in their vicinity, some lodge, farm, or cottage, where a young girl could conveniently be received and cared for, and where we could have every assurance of her being surrounded by kindly Christian influence during her stay. Would any friends, with means at their disposal, endeavour to provide one, two, three, or more of our hard-worked City associates with such pleasant and suitable lodgings (at a moderate distance from the Metropolis and other towns or manufacturing centres throughout the kingdom), for a week or fortnight in July, August, or September, either paying the whole or part of the expense, or, if unable to do that, letting us know of the quarters, and rent, &c.?

By so doing they will be rendering our Association important aid, and will probably prevent many an over-worked sister from breaking down under the strain of monotonous and dreary toil behind shop-counters or in the airless workrooms of factories and warehouses.

Should any be unable to help in the way indicated, perhaps they may feel inclined to send donations towards the object to facilitate our taking rooms in cottages, &c., this season. Communications may be addressed to Miss Fraser, 4, Inverness-terrace, London, W., who, on behalf of the Association, will correspond with any friends, and undertake to choose suitable occupants for any quarters which may be offered.

The plan here suggested has been successfully adopted by a sister Society, but a few mistakes in the choice of these temporary abodes have made it necessary for them, and would of course make it necessary for our kind friends also, to take special precautions before fixing upon any cottage, &c., or neighbourhood. No guarantee from our local secretaries would be required when those writing to us are already known to the Association; otherwise, it will be understood that this would be essential, and would no doubt be readily granted.

EMIGRATION FOR WOMEN, CANADA.

SIR,—I am still occupied with forming protected monthly parties of young women who desire to go out to Canada as domestic servants. May I say a few words about our plans for this season? The ocean tickets are reduced to £2. On the other hand free railway-passes in Canada are suspended. Our lady friends in Canada are, however, so satisfied with the girls whom we have sent, and so anxious we should send more, that they have agreed that the future mistresses should pay the railway-fares. Thus, although the fare to Toronto is £1 1s. 6d., I am able to undertake that for the sum of £2 13s. all expenses should be paid, with the exception of the fare to Liverpool. This includes contribution to Matron's Fund, food for the journey, kit, and all Liverpool expenses.

Our next party sails in the Parisian, June 18, under the escort of Rev. T. Winter, emigration chaplain, and a matron. We are profoundly thankful for the truly Christian spirit with which our efforts to shelter and aid good girls is responded to by our Canadian friends.

Yours faithfully, ADELAIDE ROSS.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

LAST week a re-union and missionary soirée took place at Exeter Hall, in connection with the work of the Presbyterian Church at home and abroad. Rev. Robert Taylor, the Moderator of Synod, presided. Mr. H. M. Matheson said their Church had in the field twenty-five missionaries, and a communion roll of 3000 members. Rev. W. S. Swanson, M.A., from China, knew of no spirit that welded churches together like interest in missionary work. The mission that stood at the top of the list in China, as to its communicants, was the mission of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, with 3300 members, and the second in position was their own Church, with its 3015 persons in full communion. Mr. R. T. Turnbull quoted some comparative statistics to show that the communicants in their churches in the London Presbytery but very slightly exceeded the number of those in China. Rev. Dr. Edmond urged the subject of Jewish missions. He said they had determined to open a mission in Morocco.

Dr. MacEwan, Clapham, alluded to the responsibilities of Christians towards the Jews, and said that the so-called anti-Semitic movement ought to be called an anti-Christian and pro-Satanic movement. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., spoke of the work of home missions, contending that what was most wanted was personal influence and sympathy between class and class. Rev. Dr. Dykes followed with an earnest speech, in which he urged the prime necessity of reaching with the Gospel the intelligent artisan and wage-earning class. They should not seek to "mission" the lowest stratum of the poor exclusively, for much of the future of the country depended upon the attitude of the hard-headed working-class to Christianity.

INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY.

LAST week the annual meeting of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, was held at Grosvenor House. Lord Ebury presided. The report read by Mr. Richard Egerton stated that steady progress continued to be made from year to year in the work of raising the spiritual, moral, intellectual, and physical condition of the London blind. Last year, being the jubilee year of the society, a special fund was started with a view of rendering the society somewhat less dependent upon uncertain income; £1,000 had already been invested for this purpose, but contributions to the amount of £5,000 are still required. The number of cases under visitation is now 851, all the visitors being blind; 291 blind persons of all ages receive education in the day-classes established by the society. Threepence was paid to each blind person's guide for conducting them to the educational classes, or to places of worship, and the extent to which this mode of assistance had been used might be estimated from the fact that £635 had been paid during the year for the guides. Most of those attending the society's educational classes were adults who learned reading and writing by the Braille system, and reading by Moon's system in cases where this was desirable. Nearly forty blind persons of both sexes attending the classes, who had become good writers, were regularly employed by the British and Foreign Blind Association in transcribing books which did not exist in raised print. The relief given last year amounted to £2,720, and consisted of money, bread, coals, tea, potatoes, blankets, and clothing. Of this amount £1,165 was given from the Samaritan Fund. This fund, which had been established and endowed by Dr. T. R. Armitage, was of the greatest possible value. Although the condition of the blind in London had undoubtedly been very greatly improved, there was still much destitution and suffering which the committee could not relieve for want of sufficient funds.

Canon Fleming said the blind were a more numerous class than some persons supposed, statistics showing the ratio to be one in a thousand. Many of these afflicted persons had, through the instrumentality of this society, been brought to their Saviour, the change of heart being evidenced by change of life. He expressed his admiration of Dr. Armitage's munificence, that gentleman having contributed £1,000 towards the terminated annuities, in addition to a like sum to the Samaritan Fund.

Rev. F. F. Goe, Rev. Gordon Calthrop, Rev. Dr. Rigg, Mr. T. A. Denny, Rev. Dr. Strickland, Dr. Armitage, and Sir Charles Lowther also spoke.

WORK AT EPSOM RACES.

EVERY year as these races come round, our good friend, Miss Alexander, hospitably receives some twenty willing helpers who arrive in time for services on the racecourse, on the Sunday preceding the "Derby." Two meetings were held under the care of Mr. Gawin Kirkham in the afternoon and evening, with a large attendance, as the place had quite the appearance of a fair. On the Monday the gipsies were visited by their old friends, Mr. Clarke and Miss Alexander, and then regaled in the evening with a substantial tea, which was followed by a Gospel service in the Town Mission Hall.

Preaching in the town went on regularly every evening during the week. If we except a very savage attack on Mr. Kirkham, things were much better than in former years. Two men who had been at the meetings in the town on Derby night got into the same carriage with our brethren, and, being asked to cease from smoking, attempted to push a pipe up the nostrils of Mr. Kirkham. This being frustrated a savage blow was struck, cutting Mr. Kirkham's eye very severely; the men then jumped out of the train, and ran away.

We found no hindrance from preaching on the course itself before the Derby; several meetings were held, and no opposition experienced. The police acknowledge the great good that has resulted from Miss Alexander's labours during the past twenty-three years. Some thousands of race cards were given away. We were also enabled to post about the town some very large written posters, displaying passages of the Word of God. Several of the fronts of houses bore huge placards, such as, "God is love," "Prepare to meet thy God," &c. We have known many cases of blessing since we first came here. Last year a young man was led to Christ through hearing Mr. Kirkham expound his Dutch picture. Another case was that of a young man, a backslider, who, on seeing us at work for Christ, left the racecourse, went home, fell on his knees, and was restored.

I have lately returned from Chantilly and Colombes, near Paris, where I was enabled to give away a number of French Testaments and cards at the races. Two things struck me at these French races—the wonderful order and quietness, and the number of women gamblers. No one refused the Testaments, and the only bad language I heard was from the English book-makers. The spirit of gambling is evidently on the increase. May the seed we have scattered be watered by the prayers of God's people!

MISS M. L. WHATELY AND HER WORK.

SIR,—In THE CHRISTIAN of May 28 I see it stated that I contribute yearly the sum of £1000 towards the English-Egyptian Mission founded by myself over twenty-two years ago. This is quite incorrect; as my whole private income is barely half the sum named, it would not be in my power. I spent between three and four thousand pounds of private property on the school buildings many years ago, and, of course, this curtailed my private means a good deal. I am now obliged to depend chiefly upon the kind aid of Christian friends, with a small grant from the native Government for the schools. I think it best to state this as so great a mistake has inadvertently been made.

Our annual expenditure amounts to about £1200 or more, according to circumstances. This means the support of a medical mission, two large schools in Cairo, two smaller branch schools, a Bible woman, and a yearly trip on the Nile for distribution of Scriptures. I am informed by many missionaries from India and elsewhere that they know of no mission that does so much work for so small a yearly expenditure.—Yours, M. L. WHATELY.

Cairo.

THE COLONY OF VICTORIA has happily escaped the establishment of one moral nuisance within its borders. Quite a flourish of trumpets was heard in Melbourne a few months ago, about inaugurating a new agency, or institution, to be called a "Working Man's Club," which was to improve if not to regenerate our working classes. The experiment was made in Adelaide, and from thence comes information that there the Working Men's Club descended into a privileged drinking saloon; the funds were mismanaged, and now absolute ruin stares the promoters in the face. Of the huge debt incurred "one-half of it was absorbed in drink."—Southern Cross.

How we are Saved: A few Words to guide the Inquiring and the Anxious, and to confirm Young Believers. 1d. Partridge. We very heartily commend this little book as an admirable exposition of the full Gospel of Jesus Christ, for pardon of sin and power to overcome it.

The Promise of His Coming. By E. H. Nisbet. A brief but earnest and scriptural exposition of that blessed hope, with a reiterated appeal to be ready for his coming. The little book is happily unencumbered by speculations as to the way in which the prophesies will be fulfilled.

Justifying Righteousness. By Rev. H. C. G. Moule. Seeley & Co. A clear treatise on the foundation truth of Paul's Epistle to the Romans. Mr. Moule writes in a lov ng spirit, but points out unflinchingly the mauy dangers of confounding Christ's work for us with the Holy Spirit's work in us.

Words in Season. No. 1. Some Infidel Objections to Christianity Answered. Preface by Rev. J. Clifford. 3d. S. W. Partridge & Co. In this tiny book the main fallacies and assumptions of prominent infidels are compactly, fairly stated, and concisely and conclusively answered. A most useful book for city missionaries, Scripture readers, and all workers in large towns.

Among the Olives; or, The Allegory of the Bible Readers. Partridge & Co. This little book will be of special interest to members of the various Unions for reading the Bible, which have now been formed all over the world. The words of the writer, herself a member, concerning "the two imperishable things," are adapted to rouse many to be "doers of the Word," not readers only.

Fatherly Chastisement. By H. H. Bourn. Partridge & Co. We have little doubt that this book will, as its author prays, "prove to many afflicted and bereaved Christians a Barnabas, or Son of Consolation. From the Bible, from the lips of ancient and modern martyrs, confessors and suffering saints, from a long personal experience of God's loving correction, he has collected a perfect treasury of comfort and light for dark and lonely hours.

Half-hearted Churchmen; A Reply to Dr. Liddon. By Rev. C. Bullock. Home Words Office. We welcome two timely pamphlets from Mr. Bullock's ever watchful pen. The first is a series of letters in which he refutes from Scripture and English Protestant theology the assertions of various writers, showing that the Church of Christ is not a visible organisation in which sacraments and ceremonies are all important. The second is a brief but able exposure of the narrow and unchristian theory that would exclude from the Catholic and Apostolic Church all non-episcopal bodies. Both pamphlets will assist those who have to combat the above errors.

My Sermon Notes: Ecclesiastes to Malachi. By C. H. Spurgeon. 2s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster. A disreputable trade is done in sermons from half-a-crown upwards and downwards; but here, for half-a-crown, a man may honestly and respectably buy the substantial part of sixty-five sermons, so arranged that he may see their mechanism, like the works of a clock under a glass shade. The study of these sermons is an education as to methods of analysing a text, and of applying it for instruction, exhortation, comfort, or reproof. But there is more than method and mechanism. Human experience, and spiritual intelligence, and Divine unction are here, so that with the lines laid down and the suggestions given, they afford direction for personal meditation possibly more profitable than the hearing of a sermon fully preached. We do not wonder at the large demand. These notes ought to be a sine quâ non in every library.

The first Volume of the new series of The Expositor (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) will compare very favourably, we think, with any previous one. Mr. Nicoll has scored an undoubted editorial success, and the publishers at any rate will apparently have no cause to regret the recent change in the conduct of the magazine. There may be a doubt in some minds as to whether the new Editor has steered altogether clear of the rock of theological speculation on which his predecessor made shipwreck. It will be admitted, however, that the area of speculative inquiry has been so far narrowed as to exclude what most readers would deem vital points of doctrine. Mr. Nicoll claims the great aim of the serial to be the furnishing of "expositions of the Word of God, from the most scholarly and reverent writers of the time." A splendid etching of Bishop Martensen is given with this volume, and a similar portrait of some eminent theologian is promised with each succeeding volume.

Mr. Spurgeon's well-known and richly-experimental book, containing daily morning readings, Morning by Morning (3s. 6d., Passmore & Alabaster), has reached its hundredth thousand. For twenty years past it has proved a feast of fat things in many a Christion household. We commend it anew, not only to the heads of families, but to all who would foster the spiritual life in themselves and those about them.

No Condemnation—No Separation. Lectures on the Eighth Chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, by the Rev. Marcus Rainsford. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. Those who value the deep teaching of the excellent author of these Lectures will not be disappointed in what they will find in this book—a fit sequel to the lectures already published on Rom. v., vi., and vii. Mr. Rainsford is thoroughly at home in Rom. viii., and well describes it in his opening sentence thus: "The Epistle to the Romans is a gem of Divine truth in the midst of the New Testament, and the eighth chapter is the gem in the midst of the Epistle." The critical reader will, perhaps, miss anything like critical treatment of those passages in the chapter that have provoked controversy, and there is a tendency to avoid controverted points by accepting ever-opposing views, which is not always satisfactory. For example "the law of sin and death," in ver. 2, can hardly mean both the law of God and the law of sin within. It must be remembered, however, that Mr. Rainsford was not writing for critical readers, but addressing a congregation for edification; he has, perhaps, wisely steered clear of mere critical discussion. The deeper views of truth with which the chapter abounds are clearly and faithfully set forth; and there is much, too, of very practical application of truth to the heart and conscience. We heartily commend the book as one calculated to do much good; we trust it may lead many to value this "gem" of Scripture as the author himself values it.

Down in the Valley. By Lady Hope. 1s. 6d. Partridge. A gracefully-written book for girls, combining interesting narrative with valuable lessons.

Lockett's Shorthand Instructor. All that is good in this so-called new "system" seems to be copied from the Sloan-Duployan, and all that is bad is of the author's invention.

Our Foreign Mission Work. By Thomas S. Penny. 1s. Alexander & Shepheard. A very interesting account of Baptist and other missionary work. The writer becomes almost servile in his laudation of the King of the Belgians (p. 29), but, this apart, he tells his story well and simply.

Strike While the Iron is Hot; The Man who Spoiled the Music. 1d. each. Woolmer. These are the two latest stories from the pen of Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, whose name alone is sufficient recommendation. They are written in his usual racy style, relating incidents and introducing characters which have come under his personal observation.

The Laws Relating to Young Children. By C. C. M. Baker, B.A. 1s. Waterlow & Sons. The very book that has been wanted for a long time. Handy, concise, plain, it is a really useful work, and is not hampered by confusing legal terms. The law is stated under four heads: (1) "The Custody," (2) "The Education," (3) "The Religion of," and (4) "Offences by and against Young Children."

"O Mother, Mother!" The Story of a Mysterious Cry. 6d. Elliot Stock. Every mother of daughters should read this little book. It is a true picture of what is going on in thousands of lives to-day; and though it is written as a dream, it loses none of its force of argument. As a warning against the reading of evil literature, it is stamped with sad truth. It ought to be widely distributed among the young.

The New Creature. By Rev. J. C. Hamilton, M.A. 1s. Bagster & Sons. A very Scriptural, and therefore spiritual little work on the birth, origin, nature, conflicts, and destiny of the new creature. "Sinless Perfectionists" should read through these wise pages; there is no exaggeration, no adoption of terms, no confusing, unscriptural definitions, but comfort and help for all who are humbly treading the Zionward way.

Christianity and Social Life. 1s. Macniven & Wallace. Pithy, pointed, and practical, these splendid lectures deserve a wide circulation. The publishers are to be commended for their earnest endeavours to place the best things in the hands of the working-classes at the lowest possible price. The lecture on "Christianity and Labour" is worth all the philosophic theories on "Progress and Poverty" that have ever been written. Working-men should read it.

Memorials of Dean Close. 1s. Rivers, 4, Queen's Head-passage. No doubt there was a great deal that was very interesting in the life of Dean Close, but the world could well have waited for it, rather than get such a meagre portion as is to be found in these very incomplete and undignified "Memorials." How is it that, with much namby-pamby chatter, and no real biography of the well-known Dean that does his memory full credit, they have got into print?

Historic and other Doubts; or, the Non-Existence of Napoleon Proved. Edited by "Lily," with an introduction by Richard Garnett, LL.D. 1s. E. W. Allen. This is a translation of a little brochure that appeared nearly sixty years ago from the pen of Jean Baptiste Pérès, professor of mathematics in a little town in the South of France. It was written on the lines and for the discomfiture of a work by a M. Dupuis, entitled "L'Origine de tous les Cultes, ou la Religion Universelle," which essayed to prove, as Dr. Garnett writes, "that the religions of the Old and New Testaments, and, indeed, all other religions, were simply a petrifaction of what, since his time, has been called 'the solar myth.'" M. Pérès, in an easy, logical manner, in the same way, proves Napoleon to have been an allegorical personage, a personification of the sun. The reader who cares to improve himself in this form of argument cannot do better than get the book.

"A Child of Jesus," from the popular book of that title, compiled and arranged as a musically illustrated service, in Staff and Sol-fa Notations, by John Burnham, Metropolitan Tabernacle evangelist. 4d. W. Nicholson & Sons, 20, Warwick-square; or of the Author, Blenheim Villa, Brentford, London, W. "The River Singers." By kind permission of the proprietors of the book. Both of these services are very sweet. The musical part is tender and quite suitable to the words; though rather melancholy there is a tone of hope and chastened joy throughout. Some of the pieces have very charming harmonies, and the whole will improve on acquaintance.

OBITUARY.

REV. E. PAXTON HOOD.

Much surprise and regret was experienced last week in London, on the receipt of a telegram from Paris, announcing that the death of Rev. Edwin Paxton Hood had just occurred in that city. Mr. Hood had been unwell for some weeks. On Tuesday last week he started for a holiday on the Continent, Mrs. Hood accompanying him, and they made a stay at Paris, where his illness suddenly had a fatal termination. Mr. Hood was born in London in 1820, and throughout the whole of his career as a Congregational minister (since 1852) had distinguished himself as a preacher, lecturer, writer, and public speaker, and at the time of his death was minister of Falcon-square Church, London. Deceased had previously filled pastorates at Barnsbury, Queen-square, Brighton, and Cavendish Chapel, Manchester. Mr. Hood had not only attracted considerable congregations at Falcon-square, but had also been an extensive author, and possessed a great store of originality and wit and humour.

THE ALL-NIGHT MISSION.—I met Mr. James Pye and his fellow-workers in St. Jude's Hall, Turk's-row, Chelsea, one evening early in June. They went forth to their several districts with cards of invitation. At 1.30 a.m. upwards of fifty women and girls were assembled in the hall. After tea there were singing, prayer, and addresses. Although some seemed indifferent, others remained to the end, and a number were melted to tears. The addresses of several were taken with the view of helping then to return to a virtuous life. C.

BATTERSEA CHILDREN.—Sir,—Would any of your readers favour me with "letters" for convalescent homes or childrens' hospitals. There has been, and still is, an epidemic of sickness raging in Battersea, where our childrens' services are held. Many have recovered and could be sent away for a change of air. If any friends would like to have further particulars, I shall be pleased to furnish them.—Yours faithfully,

127, Lavender Sweep, Geo. E. Arkell,
Clapham Common, S.W. Superintendent.

PRESENTS FOR THE ICE-BOUND.—There are some excellent men and women, who, with their young families and native converts, spend the dark winter months of each year at the Moravian Mission stations in Greenland and Labrador. For six months out of every twelve, they are more or less ice-bound and shut out from intercourse with European friends. Every midsummer the Harmony is sent to the Labrador Mission stations. About July 2, she will once more start from the London docks on a similar errand. Perhaps some of our readers may be glad to send some gifts to these distant missionaries, who are very scantily supported. Amongst the most acceptable presents are blankets, shawls, warm clothing, lined slippers, and boots, thick stockings, groceries, preserved fruits and meats, books, stationery, pictures, musical instruments, cutlery, toys, lamps, &c. These should be sent, before the end of June, to the Rev. B. La Trobe, Secretary of Moravian Missions, 29, Ely-place, Holborn, London, E.C.

BIRMINGHAM Y.M.C.A.—About two hundred of the members and associates of the Y.M.C.A., on the invitation of Alderman White (the president for the year), breakfasted together at six o'clock on the 11th inst. at the rooms of the institution, Needless-alley. Alderman White presided. After the repast, pointed and practical addresses were delivered by the Chairman, Canon Wilkinson, Mr. Hind Smith, Revs. Jenkyn Brown, F. Kellett, W. F. Clarkson, and J. M. McKerrow, on the value of personal religion, both in its bearings on the individual and its relation to the every-day life of young men. It was impressed upon those present that the "sphere of their daily calling" was the place in which the members could best exhibit the value of character, and by their example influence those with whom they came in contact. The Birmingham Association has about 1000 young men under its influence.—Birmingham Gazette.

Notes on Daily Readings.

JUNE 18.—I CORINTHIANS VIII.

v. 1.—"Now as touching things offered unto idols, we know that we all have knowledge."—This assertion is somewhat ironical, for it is partly questioned in the next verse: "If any man think that he knoweth any thing," &c.; and is denied in the case of some, ver. 7: "Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge," &c. But it is put generally in order to show that even on the assumption that all have knowledge, it would be much better if all had love, for "knowledge puffeth up, but love buildeth up." Knowledge may enable one to do with a clear conscience what may yet be a stumbling-block to those of weak conscience. But here it is where "love" comes in, making us think of others, and even sacrifice our liberty for their sakes, as Christ sacrificed his life for them.

v. 9.—"Take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumblingblock to the weak."—The Greek word for "liberty" is translated "power" in the margin of both A.V. and R.V. It might be even better to render it "right." Then it would appear how contrary to the spirit of Christ is the habit of always insisting upon "our rights." It is by no means always right to do that which we have a right to do.

v. 11.—"And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish?"—For the future tense, "shall perish," all critical editions now read the present, "is perishing." This rendering, while it points out the danger of the state into which the weak brother has been betrayed by the unloving conduct of his "strong" brother, does not absolutely imply that he does finally perish. He is "like to perish," as Canon Evans renders it, and his present perilous condition is caused by his brother's want of love.

JUNE 19.—I CORINTHIANS IX.

v. 1.—"Am I not free?"—This, which is the keynote of the whole chapter (see especially verse 19, where it is more fully explained), ought to stand first in the series of questions, according to the oldest MSS. and versions. So it has been restored to its right place by the R.V. The Apostle's self-denial for the Gospel's sake is not of necessity, but voluntary; and to establish this, he shows that the claims which he foregoes, for sustenance, &c, are legitimate claims, which he might enforce if he chose.

v. 9.—"Doth God take care for oxen?"—Canon Evans renders this, "Is it of oxen that God is thinking here?" He adds: "This clause does not, of course, question God's providential care of animals, but only asserts that the passage cited has a higher sense."

vv. 13, 14.—"They which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar. Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel."—This pointed contrast between the characteristic employment of the Jewish priesthood, viz., "waiting at the altar," and that of the Christian ministry, viz., "preaching the Gospel," goes far to prove that no such notion of the Christian ministry existed in the Apostle's mind as that of a priesthood waiting at an altar. Preaching the Gospel is the Apostle's definition of the employment of the Christian ministry.

v. 18.—"That I abuse not my power" in the Gospel."—"Abuse" is rather "use to the full," and "power" (as in viii. 9) is rather "right" (R.V.). Paul claims no credit for preaching the Gospel, for that is "committed unto him," but he finds his reward in making it "without charge" to his hearers.

v. 21.—"Being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ."—Literally rendered in "Speaker's Commentary." "Not being an outlaw of God, but an inlaw of Christ."

JUNE 20.—I CORINTHIANS X.

vv. 1, 5.—"All our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed, &c. . . . but with many of them God was not well pleased," &c.—R.V. is undoubtedly correct in changing "many of them" to "most of them." The contrast between the all who were baptized, in a sense, and partook of spiritual food and drink, in a sense, and the few with whom God was well pleased, seems intended thus early in the history of the Church to point out the difference between the outward and the inward, the professing and the true Church of God; between those who partake outwardly by form of the Sacraments, and those who partake inwardly by faith of the things signified by the Sacraments. The example of "Israel after the flesh" is to be a warning to those who "walk after the flesh."

v. 17.—The simplest rendering of this verse is that given in the margin of R.V.: "Seeing that there is one bread, we who are many are one body." It was apparently the custom to have but one loaf, as our Lord probably broke (not, as we say, "bread," but) a loaf. This unity of the loaf, partaken of by all, would be a striking symbol of their being "one body," and that in virtue of their all partaking of the one bread or loaf. In other words, the lesson taught is that the one Church consists of all who live by faith on the one Christ.

v. 33.—"Even as I please all men in all things.' —The verb is in the present tense, and implies aim rather than attainment; not that all men were pleased, but the Apostle sought to do so. Here we must add his own limitation in Rom. xv. 2, "for his good, to edification." As to merely pleasing men for his own advantage, he says (Gal. i. 10), "If I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ."

JUNE 21.—I CORINTHIANS XI.

vv. 2-16.—Having explained the "veil" which women wear in Christian assemblies to symbolise the authority of the man under which by God's appointment they have been placed, Paul calls this symbol by the name of that which it symbolises, "authority" (R.V.), or "power" (A.V.), "for this cause ought the woman to have power (a sign of authority, R.V.) on her head, because of the angels." The reason of this reference to "the angels" is well explained by the Rev. J. A. Beet: "Already (iv. 9) we have seen the angels contemplating the Apostle's hardships. They attend upon men (Heb. i. 14), are placed side by side of the Church Militant (Heb. xii. 22), and desire to look into the teaching of the prophets (1 Peter i. 12). Now if they take interest in men, they must take special interest in those assemblies in which men unitedly draw near to God. We must, therefore, conceive them present at the public worship of the Church. Now the presence of persons better than ourselves always strengthens our instinctive perception of right and wrong; and deters us from improper action. Surely a remembrance of these celestial fellow-worshippers will deter us from all that is unseemly."

v. 24.—"This is my body which is for you" (R.V.) —All critical texts omit the word "broken" here as having no authority. Canon Evans says, that if any copula is to be supplied it should rather be "given" than "broken." But "is" in R.V. is best, and J. A. Beet well expands the thought presented, "My body exists for your good. For you it was created; and for you the historic facts of my earthly life took place;" adding, "Christ had specially in view the fact of his death." We should however, perhaps distinguish more than we do between what is signified by the body and the blood. If the blood points, as it unquestionably does, to the death, the body would seem more naturally to point to the life of Christ. The parallel expression "flesh" in place of "body" in John vi. supports this, and so does the received Christian doctrine which finds utterance in such a hymn as "Jesus, thy blood and righteousness."

JUNE 22.—I CORINTHIANS XII.

vv. 2, 3.—The sense and connection are well given in the "Speaker's Commentary," which supposes that the Apostle is replying to a question sent him by the Corinthians, "Who in general is a God-inspired speaker, and who is not, and by what moral touchstone are we to test them?" His answer amounts to, "Learn ye, who have abandoned that wretched once for the happy now, that the criterion of Christian inspiration is the confession of Jesus as Lord, a Divine watchword that can only be uttered from the heart in the power of God's Holy Spirit. There is, indeed, a terrible negative running parallel to this positive, which is Anathema is Jesus. This execration comes from tongues not set in motion by the Holy Ghost." This latter refers to the Jewish opposition at Corinth (see Acts xviii. 6), "when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed."

v. 11.—"But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as He will."—This is one of the proof texts of the personality of the Holy Spirit. Were He an influence only, He would not be spoken of as possessing a will.

v. 12.—"So also is Christ."—We would have expected "so also is the Church," but to show the union between the Head and members, the body is called by the name of its head, "the Christ."

v. 13.—"For by (in, R.V.) one Spirit are (were, R.V.) we all baptized into one body . . . . and have been all made to drink into (of, R.V.) one Spirit."—Baptism has to do with the outward application of water to the body. Drinking is the inward application Probably the use of the two figures points both to the change of state—the baptism into Christ's death, spoken of in Rom. vi.—and also to the change of heart, both changes the work of the Spirit. The latter an important evidence of the former. When told, therefore, as we are by some, that all who are baptized with water are baptized with the Spirit also, we may well reply, "If so, where is the inward reception of the Holy Spirit, the being 'made to drink of one Spirit'?" If this be not forthcoming we can only say: "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his" (Rom viii. 9).

JUNE 23.—I CORINTHIANS XIII.

The R.V. has changed "charity" to "love," and rightly so, as the ordinary meaning attached to the word "charity" made it liable to be misunderstood.

v. 6.—"But rejoiceth with the truth."—"The truth is personified, and denotes the divine truth contained in the Gospel. Love rejoices with the truth, has with it one common joy."—Meyer.

v. 8.—"Whether there be prophecies, they shall fail" (be done away, R.V.).—It would have been better had this word "prophecies" been rendered, as it is wherever it occurs in the next chapter, "prophesyings," for it does not mean "predictions," but inspired utterances, such as prevailed then in the Church, but were soon to "be done away." This assertion of their temporary character, as well as their being classed with "tongues," which we know have "ceased," should have kept some Christians from regarding the next chapter, which regulates the exercise of these spiritual gifts, as intended to be a directory as to worship for all time.

v. 12.—"For now we see through a glass, darkly." —"Through a glass" should be "by means of a mirror." The ancient mirrors were of polished brass or steel—Corinth was famous for such—and presented, of course, an imperfect reflection of things seen therein. Two metaphors are used to express the imperfection of our present knowledge: one is "by means of a mirror," the other, "in an enigma" or "riddle." The first seems to point to the fact that all our knowledge of spiritual things is conveyed to us in language taken from natural things. This resembles the imperfect reflection of an ancient mirror. The other points to the fact that much of the spiritual truth, even when so presented to us, seems as a riddle or enigma for the full solution of which we still await more light.

JUNE 24.—I CORINTHIANS XIV.

v. 3.—"He that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort."—This is not a definition of prophesying, so that it may be taken conversely, as if it implied, "he that speaketh unto men to edification, &c., prophesieth." If I say, "He that speaks French speaks a foreign language," I cannot infer that "he that speaks a foreign language speaks French." The attempt to make the teaching of this chapter apply to our present state, when prophesyings do not exist, leads to great confusion. We now have the "prophetic Scriptures" of the New Testament, which they had not, for they were only then beginning to be written; but the gift which the Spirit of God then supplied to the Church, the right use of which is the subject of this chapter, a gift called prophecy or prophesying, cannot be claimed by any Christians now.

v. 37.—"The things I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord; but if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant."—A strong assertion of the divinely-inspired character of Paul's writings, and of the solemn responsibility of ignoring this fact. Canon Evans renders the latter clause thus: "If, however, anyone ignores (the divine source of what I write), let him ignore: let him persist in refusing to recognise my high mission; he is irreclaimable. I relegate such a man to himself and to his own stolidity."

"GORDON MEMORIALS."—The public should becautious how they subscribe to such "Memorials." The other day in a railway-carriage a friend of ours was asked to take a collecting card for obtaining small contributions for "The Gordon Memorial Hospital." Upon making a few inquiries it turned out to be a large Children's Hospital about to be erected in connection with one of the most pronounced Ritualistic Churches in London. Why the name of the hero of Khartoum was tacked on to it was not explained.—House of Rest Monthly.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Gravediggers.—Mr. G. King has commenced a mission to gravediggers in various public cemeteries.

Handsworth, Birmingham.—On a recent Sabbath evening, Rev. W. Guest, of Tunbridge Wells, preached to an immense congregation here in the large chapel, Soho-hill. The area was afterwards filled by an after-meeting.

Langton.—Mr. F. Holmes has concluded a three weeks' mission here in a tent. The services have excited a deep interest among those who rarely attend any place of worship, and the word has been much blessed. Prayer is requested for tent work at Tunbridge Wells.

Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey have paid a brief visit to New London, U.S., three meetings being held on the one Sunday of their stay. All of the meetings were of an exceedingly interesting character. At the close of the evening meeting an inquiry meeting was held, and a number rose for prayers.

Mr. E. W. Oakes.—The three weeks' mission of this evangelist in Belfast, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., has closed. The services were held in the fine new Hall of the Association, which was filled nightly. A large number of young men profess to have decided for Christ. In one large warehouse the blessing has been so general that they have requested the use of a room in the Y.M.C.A. to hold a weekly prayer and testimony meeting. Mr. Oakes proceeded to Lisburn, at the invitation of the Y.M.C.A. in that town; we understand the services there have been most successful.

Mr. Spencer Walton.—This evangelist has brought to a close a successful week's mission at Hamilton, N.B. Every night the word was with power; a great many gave evidence of their having accepted the Saviour. Mr. Walton had the tent filled one evening with children. Quite a number waited to the after-meeting. The attendance at the afternoon Bible-readings increased to the end. At each meeting God was manifestly present. Altogether we have much cause to rejoice that God inclined his servants to come to this place.

Geo. Wallace, Pastor of St. John's Free Church.
Geo. Bell, Pastor of Evan. Union Church.
Alex. Armstrong, Sec., Lanarkshire Christian Union.

Mission and other Appeals.

Sailors in Teignmouth.—Necessary and important alterations for the furtherance of the Gospel work among sailors here are being made in connection with the Sailors' Home and Institute. About £20 is needed, and any contributions will be thankfully acknowledged by Miss C. Fry, South Lawn, Teignmouth.

The Sailors' Book Bag Mission seeks to supply seamen and fishermen who leave Plymouth with bags of books. Tracts, magazines, Bibles, and hymn-books, or a subscription will be acceptable. Perhaps some ladies would like to help in making the bags. I shall be pleased to give any information required.—Alice Pearce, 5, Bedford-terrace, Plymouth.

Falstaff-yard Mission Hall, Borough, S.E.—This hall is being worked on purely evangelistic lines under the superintendence of Mr. J. T. Smith, a local preacher of long standing. The rent and expenses exceed £1 per week, and as the people on the spot can do little or nothing financially, we appeal to a generous public to aid us.—J. T. Smith, Superintendent of Mission, 52, Chatham-street, S.E.

Convalescent Home, Gilmerton. Edinburgh.—The Ravenscroft Adult Convalescent Home was opened in 1879, and has prospered and been made useful far beyond the most sanguine expectations. Over 800 of the sick and ailing poor of Edinburgh have enjoyed its benefits, and every year the number of applicants increases, till now, the necessities of the institution have far outgrown its present accommodation. A most suitable site has been secured from Sir David Baird, very near the present Home, and it is hoped soon to have sufficient funds to begin to build. Money and promises have been received to the extent of £1000, and it is believed £1000 more would enable the new Home to be started free of debt. Subscriptions for the building fund will be thankfully received by Mrs. Anderson, 13, Dean-park-crescent, Edinburgh.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on tent services at Buntingford, Herts., by Mr. Back.——For Gospel services at Wesleyan Chapel, Horsley, near Stroud, by Mr. Opie Rodway, on June 20 to 22.——For blessing on Gospel services at Haslingfield, from June 21 to July 5.

WALTHAMSTOW ORPHANAGE.—With respect to our recent notice of her Orphanage, Mrs. Parsons, Cumberland House, Greenleaf-lane, Walthamstow, writes: "We hope to hold our sale of work, &c., early in July at The Home, if possible. We trust that friends who have not yet paid us a visit will then do so as purchasers of our wares, and also that, by seeing the children at home, they may be led to take a practical interest in the work. Up to the end of June I shall be glad to receive articles of all kinds for sale. May I add that we are greatly in need of money for current expenses, and for very necessary cleaning of our premises."

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal E VERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of RAPID CONSUMPTION.

JAMES RADCLIFFE, of HUDDERSFIELD.

The case of this patient, whose address is Alma-terrace, Lockwood-road, was brought before me by a clergyman, well acquainted with the case, and who has taken great interest therein, and whose name will be given in reference to the same on any bonâ fide application.

Illness had commenced in April of last year with Cough and pains in the right lung, which symptoms gradually increased.

In process of time bleeding from the lungs had ensued; the expectoration had become purulent and profuse. The appetite had left him, strength had declined, and in the month of November loss of flesh had become more marked all over the body

Medicine and advice were sent in December last; improvement was reported very shortly, and in March the clergyman referred to writes: "The progress of Radcliffe's case is very remarkable. From a broken-down invalid in rapid consumption he has got to look a healthy man: he has gained a stone in weight. I never saw a case where there has been so marked and rapid a recovery."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

INVIGORATION FOR BRAIN WORKERS.

Treatment by Magnetism is a natural impartation of new life and vigour, which effectually supersedes the use of tonics and stimulants in chronic affections. If we exercise a thought upon what we are doing when taking stimulating drinks as tonics, we must be aware that the temporary stimulus we feel from them is not strength, as it is succeeded by a corresponding diminution of the strength we possess. The arguments here advanced against stimulants are such as abstainers do not need, and which many non-abstainers will readily endorse. Yet the want experienced by brain-workers and sufferers from brain-fag is not generally understood, nor is any practical remedy suggested. Rest is certainly a wiser course than stimulation, but it seems almost impossible, in this age of activity, to relax our efforts and still keep abreast with all onward movements. If recuperation of our powers and fitness for work can be obtained while in work, many an anxious heart and aching brow would hail such a talisman. Is this possible? We think it is as possible to maintain mental vigour while pursuing mental work as to obtain nourishment from food while performing physical labour.

The superior value of Magnetic treatment arises from the perfect control which it has over the mental states and the emotional life of the patient, extending its healing virtues into the realm of causation, and touching the spring of the body's vitality and power. For there is a pathology of the mind as well as of the body; and to restore the true harmony of thought and feeling, intellect and sensibility, should be the steady aim of him who would "minister to a mind diseased." It is because this unseen or odic influence of Magnetism acts upon or with the animating principle of our being, that it re-energises the mind, and removes hindrances and encumbrances which are revealed to our consciousness from time to time. Magnetism is, then, pre-eminently an element of mental power, and one which naturally coalesces with all the forces of the (so-called) physical economy, to restore the natural order and normal condition of our being.

Rev. CHARLES GARRETT, 4, Blackburn-terrace, Liverpool.

"Your treatment has been of great benefit to me. I have also watched its effect on others, and the results have been most satisfactory. To all my friends who are ailing I say: 'Consult Mr. Garratt.' Most of them have followed my advice with very gratifying results. The work in which you are engaged has my heartiest sympathy and co-operation."

Miss DUKES, Forest House School, Leytonstone.

March 4, 1885.—"I have much pleasure in testifying to the great benefit I have received through using the Magnetic Treatment. I think it has helped me wonderfully to get through the winter without much illness. I find I do not feel the cold nearly so much since using the Magnetic Jacket and Gloves. Perhaps if I had been able also to rest since I began to try the Magnetic Treatment, I should have felt the benefit much greater still; but as it is, even though working hard, I know it has done me much good, and my general health is greatly improved. I have often recommended the Treatment among friends, and have met many also who have been benefited by it."

Letters commendatory of Mr. Garratt's treatment by Magneto-Electricity have been received from hundreds of persons in all classes of society. A private list of 1000 names as referees can be had on application. Consultation free, personally, or by letter. B. Corson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Four Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

THE DEACON'S WEEK.

BY ROSE TERRY COOKE.

THE communion service of January was just over in the church at Sugar Hollow, nd people were waiting for Mr. Parkes to ive out the hymn, but he did not give it ut; he laid his book down on the table, nd looked about on his church.

He was a man of simplicity and sincerity, ully in earnest to do his Lord's work, and o it with all his might, but he did some-imes feel discouraged. His congregation vas a mixture of farmers and mechanics, or Sugar Hollow was cut in two by Sugar rook, a brawling, noisy stream that turned he wheel of many a mill and manufactory; et on the hills around it there was still a cattered population eating their bread in e full perception of the primeval curse. o he had to contend with the keen brain nd sceptical comment of the men who iqued themselves on power to hammer at eological problems as well as hot iron, ith the jealousy and repulsion and bitter eeling that has bred the communistic hordes broad and at home; while, perhaps, he had still harder task to awaken the sluggish ouls of those who used their days to struggle ith barren hillside and rocky pasture for ere food and clothing, and their nights to eep the dull sleep of physical fatigue and ental vacuity.

It seemed sometimes to Mr. Parkes that othing but the trump of Gabriel could rouse his people from their sins, and make hem believe on the Lord and follow his otsteps. To-day—no—a long time before -day he had mused and prayed till an idea ok shape in his thought, and now he was put it in practice; yet he felt peculiarly esponsible and solemnised as he looked bout him and foreboded the success of his xperiment. Then there flashed across him, s words of Scripture will come back to the abitual Bible-reader, the noble utterance of amaliel concerning Peter and his brethren hen they stood before the council: "If this ounsel or this work be of men, it will come nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot verthrow it." So with a sense of strength e minister spoke:—

"My dear friends," he said, "you all now, though I did not give any notice to at effect, that this week is the Week of rayer. I have a mind to ask you to make for this once a Week of Practice instead. think we may discover some things, some the things of God, in this manner that a ccession of prayer-meetings would not, erhaps, so thoroughly reveal to us. Now, hen I say this I don't mean to have you go ome and vaguely endeavour to walk straight the old way; I want you to take 'topics,' they are called, for the prayer-meetings. or instance, Monday is prayer for the tem-erance work. Try all that day to be tem-erate in speech, in act, in indulgence of any kind that is hurtful to you. The next day is for Sunday-schools; go and visit your scholars, such of you as are teachers, and try to feel that they have living souls to save. Wednesday is a day for fellowship-meeting; we are cordially invited to attend a union-meeting of this sort at Bantam. Few of us can go twenty-five miles to be with our brethren there; let us spend that day in cultivating our brethren here; let us go and see those who have been cold to us for some reason, heal up our breaches of friendship, confess our shortcomings one to another, and act as if, in our Master's words, 'all ye are brethren.'

"Thursday is the day to pray for the family relation; let us each try to be to our families on that day, in our measure, what the Lord is to his family, the Church, remembering the words, 'Fathers, provoke not your children to anger;' 'Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them.' These are texts rarely commented upon, I have noticed, in our conference meetings; we are more apt to speak of the obedience due from children, and the submission and meekness our wives owe us, forgetting that duties are always reciprocal.

"Friday the church is to be prayed for. Let us then each for himself try to act that day just as we think Christ, our great Exemplar, would have acted in our places. Let us try to prove to ourselves and the world about us that we have not taken upon us his name lightly or in vain. Saturday is prayer-day for the heathen and foreign missions. Brethren, you know and I know that there are heathen at our doors here; let every one of you who will take that day to preach the Gospel to some one who does not hear it anywhere else. Perhaps you will find work that ye knew not of lying in your midst. And let us all on Saturday evening meet here again and choose some one brother to relate his experience of the week. You who are willing to try this method, please to rise."

Everybody rose except old Amos Tucker, who never stirred, though his wife pulled at him and whispered to him, imploringly. He only shook his grizzled head and sat immovable.

"Let us sing the doxology," said Mr. Parkes; and it was sung with full fervour. The new idea had roused the church fully; it was something fixed and positive to do; it was the lever-point Archimedes longed for, and each felt ready and strong to move a world.

Saturday night the church assembled again. The cheerful eagerness was gone from their faces; they looked downcast, troubled, weary—as the pastor expected. When the box for ballots was passed about, each one tore a bit of paper from the sheet placed in the hymn-books for that purpose, and wrote on it a name. The pastor said, after he had counted them—

"Deacon Emmons, the lot has fallen on you."

"I'm sorry for't," said the deacon, rising up and taking off his overcoat. "I ha'n't got the best of records, Mr. Parkes, now I tell ye."

"That isn't what we want," said Mr. Parkes. "We want to know the whole experience of some one among us, and we know you will not tell us either more or less than what you did experience."

Deacon Emmons was a short, thick-set man, with a shrewd, kindly face and gray hair, who kept the village store, and had a well-earned reputation for honesty.

"Well, brethren," he said, "I dono why I shouldn't tell it. I am pretty well ashamed of myself, no doubt, but I ought to be, and maybe I shall profit by what I've found out these six days back. I'll tell you just as it comes.

"Monday, I looked about me to begin with. I'm amazing fond of coffee, and it a'n't good for me, the doctor says it a'n't; but dear me, it does set a man up good, cold mornings, to have a cup of hot, sweet, tasty drink, and I haven't had the grit to refuse! I knew it made me what folks call nervous, and I call cross, before night come; and I knew it fetched on spells of low spirits when our folks couldn't get a word out of me—not a good one, any way; so I thought I'd try on that to begin with. I tell you it come hard! I hankered after that drink of coffee dreadful! Seemed as though I couldn't eat my breakfast without it. I feel to pity a man that loves liquor more'n I ever did in my life before; but I feel sure they can stop if they try, for I've stopped, and I'm a-goin' to stay stopped.

"Well, come to dinner, there was another fight. I do set by pie the most of anything. I was fetched up on pie, as you may say. Our folks always had it three times a day, and the doctor, he's been talkin' and talkin' to me about eatin' pie. I have the dyspepsy like everything, and it makes me useless by spells, and onreliable as a weather-cock. An' Doctor Drake he says there won't nothing help me but to diet. I was readin' the Bible that morning while I sat waiting for breakfast, for 'twas Monday, and wife was kind of set back with washin' and all, and I come acrost that part where it says that the bodies of Christians are temples of the Holy Ghost. Well, thinks I, we'd ought to take care of 'em if they be, and see that they're kep' clean and pleasant, like the church; and nobody can be clean nor pleasant that has dyspepsy. But, come to pie, I felt as though I couldn't! and, lo ye, I didn't! I eet a piece right against my conscience; facin' what I knew I ought to do, I went and done what I ought not to. I tell ye my conscience made music of me consider'ble, and I said then I wouldn't never sneer at a drinkin' man no more when he tripped up. I'd feel for him and help him, for I see just how it was. So that day's practice giv' out, but it learnt me a good deal more'n I knew before.

"I started out next day to look up my Bible-class. They haven't really tended up to Sunday-school as they ought to, a long back, but I was busy, here and there, and there didn't seem to be a real chance to get to it. Well, 'twould take the evenin' to tell it all, but I found one real sick, been abed for three weeks, and was so glad to see me that I felt fair ashamed. Seemed as though I heered the Lord for the first time sayin', 'Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.' Then another man's old mother says to me before he come in from the shed, says she, 'He's been a sayin' that if folks practised what they preached you'd ha' come round to look him up afore now, but he reckoned you kinder looked down on mill-hands. I'm awful glad you come.' Brethring, so was I! I tell you that day's work done me good. I got a poor opinion of Josiah Emmons now, I tell ye, but I learned more about the Lord's wisdom than a month o' Sundays ever showed me."

A smile he could not repress passed over Mr. Parkes's earnest face. The deacon had forgotten all external issues in coming so close to the heart of things; but the smile passed as he said—

"Brother Emmons, do you remember what the Master said, 'If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself'?"

"Well, it's so," answered the deacon, "it's so right along. Why, I never thought so much of my Bible-class nor took no sech int'rest in 'em as I do to-day—not since I begun to teach. I b'lieve they'll come more reg'lar now, too.

"Now come fellowship-day. I thought that would be all plain sailin'; seemed as though I'd got warmed up till I felt pleasant towardst everybody; so I went around seein' folks that was neighbours, and 'twas easy; but when I come home at noon spell, Philury says, says she, 'Square Tucker's black bull is into th' orchard a-tearin' round, and he's knocked two lengths o' fence down flat!' Well, the old Adam riz up then, you'd better b'lieve. That black bull has been a-breakin' into my lots ever sence we got in th' aftermath, and it's Square Tucker's fence, and he won't make it bull-strong as he'd oughter, and that orchard was a young one jest comin' to bear, and all the new wood crisp as cracklin's with frost. You'd better b'lieve I didn't have much feller-feelin' with Amos Tucker. I jest put over to his house and spoke up pretty free to him, when he looked up and says, says he, 'Fellowship meetin' day, a'n't it, Deacon?' I'd ruther he'd ha' slapped my face. I felt as though I should like to slip behind the door. I see pretty distinct what sort of life I'd been livin' all the years I'd been a professor, when I couldn't hold on to my tongue and temper one day!"

"Breth-e-ren," interrupted a slow, harsh voice, somewhat broken with emotion, "I'll tell the rest on't. Josiah Emmons come around like a man an' a Christian right there. He asked me for to forgive him, and not to think 'twas the fault of his religion, because 'twas his'n and nothin' else. I think more of him to-day than I ever done before. I was one that wouldn't say I'd practise with the rest of ye. I thought 'twas everlastin' nonsense. I'd rather go to forty-nine prayer-meetin's then work at bein' good a week. I b'lieve my hope has been one of them that perish; it ha'n't worked, and I leave it behind to-day. I mean to begin honest, and it was seein' one honest Christian man fetched me round to't."

Amos Tucker sat down, and buried his grizzled head in his rough hands.

"Bless the Lord!" said the quavering tones of a still older man from a far corner of the house, and many a glistening eye gave silent response.

"Go on, Brother Emmons," said the minister.

"Well, when next day come I got up to make the fire, and my boy Joe had forgot the kindlin's. I'd opened my mouth to give him Jesse, when it come over me suddin that this was the day of prayer for the family relation. I thought I wouldn't say nothin'. I jest fetched in the kindlin's myself, and when the fire burnt up good I called wife.

"'Dear me!' says she. 'I've got such a headache, 'Siah, but I'll come in a minnit.' I didn't mind that, for women are always havin' aches, and I was jest a-goin' to say so, when I remembered the tex' about not bein' bitter against 'em, so I says—

"'Philury, you lay abed. I expect Emmy and me can get the vittles to-day.'

"I declare, she turned over and give me sech a look; why, it struck right in. There was my wife, that had worked for and waited on me twenty-odd year, 'most scar't because I spoke kind of feelin' to her. I went out and fetched in the pail o' water she'd always drawed herself, and then I milked the cow. When I come in Philury was up fryin' the potatoes, and the tears a-shinin' on her white face. She didn' say nothin', she's kinder still, but she hadn't no need to. I felt a leetle meaner'n I did day before. But 'twan't nothin' to my condition when I was goin', towards night, down the sullar stairs for some apples, so's the children could have a roast, and I heered Joe up in the kitchen say to Emmy—

"'I do b'lieve, Em, pa's goin' to die.'

"'Why, Josiar Emmons, how you talk!'

"'Well, I do; he's so everlastin' pleasant an' goodnatered I can't but think he's struck with death.'

"I tell ye, brethren, I set right down on them sullar stairs and cried. I did, reely. Seemed as though the Lord had turned and looked at me jest as He did at Peter. Why, there was my own children never see me act real fatherly and pretty in all their lives. I'd growled and scolded and prayed at 'em, and tried to fetch 'em up—'jest as the twig is bent the tree's inclined,' ye know; but I hadn't never thought that they'd got right and reason to expect I'd do my part as well as they their'n. Seemed as though I was findin' out more about Josiah Emmons's shortcomin's than was real agreeable.

"Come around Friday I got back to the store. I'd kind o' left it to the boys the early part of the week, and things was a little cuterin', but I did have sense not to tear round and use sharp words so much as common. I began to think 'twas gettin' easy to practise after five days, when in come Judge Herrick's wife after some curt'in calico. I had a han'some piece, all done off with roses an' things, but there was a fault in the weavin'—every now and then a thin streak. She didn't notice it, but she was pleased with the figures on't, and said she'd take the whole piece. Well, jest as I was wrappin' of it up, what Mr. Parkes here said about tryin' to act jest as the Lord would in our place, come acrost me. Why, I turned as red as a beet, I know I did. It made me all of a tremble. There was I, a door-keeper in the tents of my God, as David says, really cheatin', and cheatin' a woman. I tell ye, brethren, I was all of a sweat.

"'Mis' Herricks,' says I, 'I don't b'lieve you've looked real close at this goods; 'tain't thorough wove,' says I.

"So she didn't take it; but what fetched me was to think how many times I'd done sech mean, onreliable little things to turn a penny, and all the time sayin' and prayin' that I wanted to be like Christ. I kep' a-trippin' of myself up all day jest in the ordinary business, and I was a peg lower down when night come than I was a Thursday. I'd ruther, as far as the hard work is concerned, lay a mile of four-foot stone wall than undertake to do a man's livin' Christian duty for twelve workin' hours; and the heft of that is, it's because I ain't used to it, and I ought to be.

"So this mornin' came round, and I felt a mite more cherk. 'Twas missionary mornin', and seemed as if 'twas a sight easier to preach than to practise. I thought I'd begin to old Mis' Vedder's. So I put a Testament in my pocket, and knocked to her door. Says I, 'Good mornin', ma'am,' and then I stopped. Words seem to hang, somehow. I didn't want to pop right out that I'd come over to try'n convert her folks. I hemmed and swallered a little, and fin'lly I said, says I, 'We don't see you to meetin' very frequent, Mis' Vedder.'

"'No, you don't!' ses she, as quick as a wink. 'I stay to home, and mind my business.'

"'Well, we should like to hev you come along with us and do ye good,' says I,' sort of conciliatin'.

"'Look a here, Deacon!' she snapped, 'I've lived alongside of you fifteen year, and you knowed I never went to meetin'; we a'n't a pious lot, and you knowed it; we're poorer'n death and uglier'n sin. Jim he drinks and swears, and Malviny dono her letters. She knows a heap she hadn't ought to, besides. Now what are you a-comin' here to-day for, I'd like to know, and talkin' so glib about meetin'? Go to meetin'! I'll go or come jest as I please, for all you. Now get out o' this!'

"Why, she come at me with a broomstick. There wasn't no need on't: what she said was enough. I hadn't never asked her nor her'n to so much as think of goodness before.

"Then I went to another place jest like that—I won't call no more names; and sure enough there was ten children in rags, the hull on 'em, and the man half drunk. He giv' it to me, too; and I don't wonder. I'd never lifted a hand to sarve nor save 'em before in all these years. I'd said consider'ble about the heathen in foreign parts, and give some little for to convert 'em, and I had looked right over the heads of them that was next door. Seemed as if I could hear Him say, 'These ought ye to have done, and not have left the other undone.' I couldn't face another soul to-day, brethren. I come home, and here I be. I've been searched through and through and found wantin'. God be merciful to me a sinner!"

He dropped into his seat, and bowed his head; and many another bent, too. It was plain that the deacon's experience was not the only one among the brethren. Mr. Payson rose, and prayed as he had never prayed before; the week of practice had fired his heart, too. And it began a memorable year for the church in Sugar Hollow; not a year of excitement or enthusiasm, but one when they heard their Lord saying as to Israel of old, "Go forward," and they obeyed his voice. The Sunday-school flourished, the church services were fully attended, every good thing was helped on its way, and peace reigned in their homes and hearts, imperfect, perhaps, as new growths are, but still an offshoot of the peace past understanding.

And another year they will keep another week of practice, by common consent.—Boston Congregationalist.

IS THE REVELATION JEWISH ?—4.

WE have said that the first direct penalty of sin is that inflicted by sin itself, when God has delivered the sinner over to his own lusts. The fifth Trumpet—the first Woe—represents, therefore, under the symbol of locusts from the abyss, the character and action of the lusts of men. The symbolism is evidently based on the prophecy of Joel. There the locusts devastate the land; here they torment men. There, as here, the Trumpet calls to repentance and to faith in God. But, while an invading army was no doubt pointed at by Joel, there was evidently a deeper meaning, which men of earlier days saw and expounded thus:—

> "Actual locusts were very likely one of the scourges intended by the Prophet. They certainly were not the whole; but picture others fiercer, more desolating, more overwhelming. The proverbial dress gained and fixed men's attention on the truth, which, if it had been presented to the people nakedly, they might have turned from. Yet, as in God's wisdom, what is said generally is often fulfilled specially, so here there were four great invaders which in succession wasted Judah—the Assyrian, Chaldean, Macedonian, and Roman.
> "Morally, also, four chief passions desolate successively the human heart. For what is designated by the palmerworm, which creeps with all its body on the ground, except it be lust, which so pollutes the heart which it possesses that it cannot rise to the love of heavenly purity? What is expressed by the locust, which flies by leaps, except vainglory, which exalts itself with empty presumptions? What is typified by the cankerworm, almost the whole of whose body is gathered into its belly, except gluttony in eating? What, but anger, is indicated by mildew, which burns as it touches?
> "What the palmerworm, then, hath left hath the locust eaten, because, when the sin of lust has retired from the mind, vainglory succeeds. For since it is not now subdued by the love of the flesh, it boasts of itself as if it were holy through its chastity. And that which the locust hath left, the cankerworm hath eaten, because when vainglory, which came, as it were, from holiness, is resisted, either the appetite or some ambitious desires are indulged in too immoderately. For the mind which knows not God is led the more fiercely to any object of ambition, in proportion as it is not restrained by any love of human praise. That which the cankerworm hath left, the mildew consumes, because, when the gluttony of the belly is restrained by abstinence, the impatience of anger holds fierce sway, which, like mildew, eats up the harvest by burning it, because the flame of impatience withers the fruit of virtue. When, then, some vices succeed to others, one plague devours the field of the mind, while another leaves it.'"—S. Gregory, in Pusey's Commentary on Joel.

Whether this analysis be regarded as accurate or not, it proves that the locusts were long ago interpreted as symbolising the lusts of the human heart, which are, at the same time, the lusts of the devil (John viii. 44), which his children will to do. We find a similar application in a recent writer to this effect: "Alas that the Church should ever have been shorn of her primitive beauty! But so it was: apostacy succeeding to purity, and papacy to apostacy, and corruption to papacy, and infidelity to corruption, till it was literally as the Prophet has written: 'That which the palmerworm hath left hath the locust eaten; and that which the locust hath left hath the cankerworm eaten; and that which the cankerworm hath left hath the caterpillar eaten.'"

But if literal locusts and invading armies fail to exhaust the significance of the locusts in Joel, and if the lusts of men's hearts are evidently intended, much more is this the case in the Revelation. No one supposes they here mean literal locusts. We do not deny that they may have reference to the Saracen hosts, as the historical interpreters suppose, nor do we deny that they may prefigure actual evil spirits in the last days, as futurists believe. But this we do affirm, that the former of these explanations has never satisfactorily harmonised the descriptive characteristics of the locusts with the Saracen or any other soldiers; and the latter does not attempt to collate the characteristics of evil spirits with the minute description of the mystic locusts seen by John. But immediately we compare them with the lusts of men's hearts, we have a key which answers naturally, obviously, and, above all, Scripturally, to every ward of the lock.

The remarkable appropriateness of the locust to be used as a symbol of the manifold lusts of men may be seen by the following quotation:—

> "'If you carefully consider the head of the locust,' says Theodoret, a Bishop of Syria, 'you will find it exceedingly like that of a horse.' Whence the Arabs of old, and to this day, say, 'In the locust, slight as it is, is the nature of ten of the larger animals—the face of a horse, the eyes of an elephant, the neck of a bull, the horns of a deer, the chest of a lion, the belly of a scorpion, the wings of an eagle, the thighs of a camel, the feet of an ostrich, the tail of a serpent.'"

Whence do those mystic locusts come? They are begotten of the Wicked One, for Jesus said to the contumacious sinners of his day, "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." Well, therefore, does the Seer declare that they come forth from the bottomless pit. But the counterpart of the pit of the abyss is the unfathomable heart, "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked," of which also Jesus said, "Out of the heart come forth evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies." Thence also comes the smoke as of a great furnace, darkening the sun and the air; for, says Hosea of the king and princes, "they are all as an oven heated by the baker; . . . they have made ready their heart like an oven, whiles they lie in wait; . . . it burneth as a flame of fire." "Knowing God, they glorified Him not as God, neither gave thanks; but became vain in their reasonings, and their senseless heart was darkened. . . Wherefore God gave them up, in the lusts of their hearts, unto uncleanness." Ah, happier they who died of drinking the wormwood waters (viii. 11), than they who desire an escape in death, but cannot find it, from the stinging torment of these scorpion lusts!

How remarkably does the frequently enacted story of the Prodigal Son fulfil the description of the desolating effects of the ravaging locust hosts: "The land is as the Garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness." Such has been the prospect and the retrospect of thousands of young men, who have given themselves up to deceitful, worldly, foolish, hurtful, fleshly, youthful, ungodly lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition; men in whose experience the disastrous history of Israel, to whom Joel spoke, has been repeated. In some cases—would God that we could say in all!—the prodigal returns to the Father's house, and the promise is fulfilled: "I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, the caterpillar, and the palmerworm, my great army that I sent among you."

We must defer to our next the interpretation of the symbols by which, with singular minuteness of detail, they are described.

MILITIAMEN AT HOUNSLOW. — A training camp for Militiamen is about to be opened again at Hounslow Heath. Last year a good work was done by the chaplain, Rev. S. Wesley, and his daughter; there were good attendances at the services, and some real conversions. These friends hope to carry on similar work this summer among the men, of whom there are, this season, to be a larger number than before. Any literature suitable for distribution will be gladly received by Miss Wesley, Hampton House, Grove-road, Hounslow.

ON HASTINGS PIER.

A SERVICE AT SEA.

OVER the heaving ocean
We gathered for evening prayer;
No rock of its restless motion
We felt in our worship there,
Though the breezes swept around us,
And the tide with a sullen roar
Rolled in; and the darkness found us
Away from the friendly shore.

No vessel that evening bore us
Ploughing the ocean foam,
No sorrowful parting tore us
From tenderest ties of home;
Beneath rolled the mighty ocean,
But we felt not the billows' shock,
Steadfast through all commotion,
Built on the living rock.

We hear, while the shades are falling
And the light is low in the west,
The voice of the Saviour calling,
"Come ye apart and rest;
In the hurry of earthly pleasure,
In the din of your daily strife,
Ye scarcely can find the leisure
To taste of the bread of life."

So we go where the waves are breaking,
Afar from the busy town,
Its tumult of life forsaking,
Its cares for a while laid down;
Seaward our faces turning
Out on the distant pier,
In its gaudy pavilion learning
To feel that the Lord is near.

To feel that his presence holds us,
By a silent, secret spell,
In the darkness love enfolds us,
And whispers that all is well;
A theatre over the ocean
We turn into hallowed ground;
Where rises the heart's devotion
There will the Lord be found.

So ever may we be willing
To come from the world apart,
And find how the Lord is filling
And blessing the waiting heart,
With spirit devout and lowly
To bow at his sacred feet,
And learn that the place is holy
Wherever his people meet.

AN INVALIDED EVANGELIST.

MR. JOHN B. BAIN, known to many of our readers as an evangelist much used of God, writes a private letter, from which we quote. We commend our dear brother in his weak health to the love and prayer specially of those who know his worth. He has not yet fully recovered from the shock occasioned by the illness and death of his devoted and invaluable wife.

AT Birkenhead we had a good work, but it was also shown me that God's time had not as yet come for me to continue in the work. Twice during the mission I all but broke down. When there I saw some of the Liverpool work. I was greatly taken with Mr. Radcliffe's shop in Lime-street. The meetings in the shop are well attended all day, and souls are being saved. I should be thankful to see such a work being done in all our towns. In most places it could be done. The workers (who are from all the churches) have their heart in it, and there is no difficulty in carrying it on.

I came to Stornoway about a week ago seeking health. I have not been able to get out much, for it has been very stormy. Thousands of fishermen are here at present, and meetings are being held for them on Saturdays and Sundays, the only days they are ashore. There are some fine Christians among them from the East Coast. Some have joined the Salvation Army, and hold meetings amongst themselves in a hall here. The fruits of the good work that was done here some few years ago are easily seen. I am pained not to be able to enter into the work here.—Yours faithfully, JOHN B. BAIN.

OXFORD AND CULTURE.

THE Methodist Times, edited by the Rev. H. Price Hughes, has in a recent number a striking leading article on "Our Duty to Oxford," bearing upon an article in the same number, written by Dr. Edwin Hatch, and entitled, "Nonconformity at Oxford." Dr. Hatch is the author of the well-known Bampton Lectures for 1880, on "The Organisation of the Early Christian Churches," of which The Methodist Times says:—

> "This is the one modern attack upon sacerdotalism which the sacerdotalists have not dared to answer. When this epoch-making book appeared, the word was sent round that no notice was to be taken of it. . . . We believe the priests will justify the reputation for astuteness which they enjoy, by refusing to break their conspiracy of silence. . . . For two generations they have been loudly appealing to history, and to history has Dr. Hatch taken them—not to the Papal legends and monkish fancies which have so long deluded good men, but to that true history of the real past, which German patience and learning are bringing into the light of day."

The article thus proceeds: "Dr. Hatch continues his great work in the current number of the Contemporary Review, where he shows conclusively that Canon Liddon's recent discourse on the episcopacy was founded upon a series of baseless and incredible assumptions. But Dr. Hatch never struck a deadlier blow at sacerdotalism than in the remarkable article with which he honours our columns to-day."

Dr. Hatch's article on "Nonconformity at Oxford" does not appear to be so very deadly a "blow at sacerdotalism" as our contemporary imagines. It is a liberal and kindly welcome on the part of a leading Oxford man to Nonconformity in general to come in and make Oxford the sphere of their labours on the ground that > "The existence and working of a considerable Nonconformist element, with able Nonconformist teachers, would introduce a new and hopeful feature into the life of the University. With it, in all probability, a revival of religion would begin. For it would attract to itself many minds which, though possessed of strong religious instincts, are at present wandering in the dark. It would show the possibility of a vigorous Christianity which believes in Christ and yet is not sacerdotal. It would stimulate those latent forces within the Church of England itself which the want of a leader, and the want of a creed, have either crushed into quiescence or diverted into the insufficient channels of philanthropy."

We would wish God-speed to any movement which presented any fair hope of attaining such results as these. But it is impossible to ignore the fact that it is not Nonconformity as such, nor Church of Englandism of an Evangelical type, nor any other "ism" of any sort, but the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, which alone can make the dry bones of Oxford, or any other place, live. Our contemporary will not have forgotten that about a hundred years ago a few young men, High Churchmen as we would call them now, met together to read the Bible and to regulate or "methodise" their lives according to its teaching. They did not then dream of any "Nonconformity," except nonconformity to the world (Rom. xii. 2); but the Spirit of God wrought in time through them a greater "revival of religion" than, perhaps, has ever since been seen or known. We doubt very much if the mere importation of Nonconformity, as such, would produce any "revival of religion" at Oxford. It might produce fierce political antagonism; for, alas! Nonconformity too often identifies itself with politics, and little spiritual blessing is to be expected from this element. But if men of God, men of truth, whether Nonconformists or Conformists (and many of the latter we know are working for God at Oxford) were to be stirred up by Dr. Hatch's appeal, or by Mr. Price Hughes' echo of it, to labour more earnestly for the spread of the Gospel at Oxford, and for the conversion to God—not to mere ecclesiastical system—of the young men there studying, we would most truly and heartily rejoice.

There is another point to which our contemporary draws special attention, but we will give its own words:—

> "We thank Dr. Hatch for his friendly candour in delicately but plainly stating that Nonconformity 'in general wants that indefinable thing called culture.' Dr. Hatch has laid his finger upon the weak place in our armour. That is the vulnerable heel of the mighty Nonconformist Achilles. That is the one point in which the sacerdotalists have an immense and incalculable advantage over us. That is why they steal from us so many of our most gifted sons, and so many of our most refined and saintly daughters. That is why our influence among the educated classes, in the world of science, literature, and art, in public life and in society, is so utterly disproportionate to our resources and our ability. But, as Dr. Hatch observes, 'culture is the special product of University life.' He rightly says, 'University life,' not University examination. It is the life, the intellectual and social intercourse of a residential University life that alone can give what Dr. Hatch so happily describes as, 'that appreciation of the proportion of things, that appropriation of the noblest traditions of the past, that delicacy of mental touch,' which constitute culture. The University of London is the finest examining body in the world, but it does not pretend to do anything except register the intellectual attainments of its graduates. Only Oxford and Cambridge can give culture, and until yesterday cruel ecclesiastical intolerance excluded all Nonconformists from those national seats of learning."

The writer goes on to anticipate great results from the "very hopeful sign that the Congregationalists have already decided to remove one of their theological colleges to Oxford, that the Presbyterians intend to erect suitable churches in both Universities, and that we ourselves have built a fine church at Oxford, and established the Ley's School at Cambridge."

Now granting fully the influence for good at our Universities of a wholesome admixture of Nonconformity with Church of Englandism, especially at Oxford, with its somewhat narrow ecclesiastical tendencies, have we not in this panacea for the evils of Oxford an almost absurd over-estimate of the advantages of this so-called "culture"? Nonconformity is to go to Oxford and Cambridge, it seems, for "only Oxford and Cambridge can give culture," and having obtained this great boon, it is to be used no doubt for a good purpose. But are our Scotch and Irish Universities so absolutely lacking in this "indefinable thing," not to speak of the unfortunate graduates of London University, whose "intellectual attainments" our contemporary thinks may "have been registered," but no more! What if Nonconformity in going through Oxford should itself become affected not only by culture but by ecclesiastical æstheticism also? Dr. Hatch well remarks: "It can scarcely be wondered at that a large number of students, possessing strong religious instincts, with here and there an over-educated tutor or two, should be attracted by the beauty of Anglo-Catholic services, and the definite dogmatism of Anglo-Catholic theology." If Nonconformity, in pursuit of "culture," ventures into an infected atmosphere, it must not be surprised if some of its students should fall victims to the prevailing epidemic, and become in the end (as Nonconformists not unfrequently do when they enter the Church of England) the most illiberal and intolerant of Churchmen.

Wholly disagreeing, then, as we do, with our contemporary as to the value it attaches to mere "culture," and indeed doubting very much whether it does not confound culture with what is often popularly called "breeding," an "indefinable thing" towards which both birth and school or home education and companionship contribute to a much greater extent than University life, we are inclined to think that if Nonconformity seeks to enter in to influence Oxford aright, as Dr. Hatch invites it to do, it must seek something better than "culture," and that is, to know more, and live more, and preach more, of "Christ." The solemn and timely warning which Mr. Spurgeon has lately so faithfully given, should not be disregarded. It is not from Sacerdotalism alone, great as the evil is, that danger is to be apprehended. The Rationalism that is sapping the religious life of Nonconformity, and which is the real "vulnerable heel of the Nonconformist Achilles," has too often arisen from the ill-advised pursuit of mere "culture," severed from the far more important pursuit of "godliness," and cultivation of personal "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ."

A LETTER FROM BISHOP TAYLOR.

THE Governor of Angola has returned from a six weeks' tour down the Coast. He and his secretary attended our preaching service last Sabbath evening, and had a long chat with us after the close of the religious service. He welcomes us to Angola, and will give "one thousand hectars"—2700 acres of land—as a basis for each industrial school we may choose to found in this province. We shall honour his generosity so far, at least, as to secure a line of stations leading in toward the centre of the country. This is what I hoped from the start, so as to make it easy to keep up regular communication with our base at Loanda, and our extending advance across the continent.

We rise at 5 a.m., assemble at 5.30 for worship and roll-call, take coffee, bread, and bananas at 6 a.m., breakfast at 10.30 a.m., dine at 4.30 p.m., respond again to the bugle blast at 6.30 p.m. for worship. Our roll-call record tells a remarkable story. The children are all there to answer to their names, and nearly always there at every call, with but slight exceptions from temporary sickness. The same is true of their fathers and mothers. The mass of our young men—strong, heroic young men, in the main, make a sorry showing on the roll-book. All of them have been down with fever, and some of them for weeks. One has died, the rest are convalescent. Our children are devoted to God. They play on instruments and sing and add good cheer to the camp, and make themselves very useful in rendering service to our sick young men.

The Lord has kept me in good health, all through, as usual. We will leave our ladies and children here in our most comfortable quarters in Loanda, while I and a few of our able-bodied men go inland to select stations and build the houses required for the families, then they will follow as, and occupy them. We shall be off now, very soon, the Lord willing. There has been great drought on this coast, till the recent heavy rains, which are said to have come too late to save the crops, so we are paying famine prices for everything. We are obliged to buy maize and beans at 17s. per bushel instead of 2s., the usual price, and everything in about that ratio, so that this part of our transit expense is very high; but we trust the Lord, through his people, to pay our way into our fields of labour in the interior, and help us to open them, and pave the way for adequate indigenous resources. Pray for us. We are all in good cheer, and have not a doubt about our success, but it is a life-long tug, beginning, as we do, in the wild woods.

Your Brother, WM. TAYLOR.

THE HEM OF HIS GARMENT.

AN INCIDENT OF THE LONDON MISSION.

DURING the ten days' mission held last February in a thickly-populated London parish, one agency at work for the ingathering of souls was a meeting for women only, held every afternoon, and generally addressed by a lady. Through her unavoidable absence one day it fell to the lot of the Vicar of the parish to give the address. He took as his subject the account in the Gospel by Mark of the woman who touched Jesus in the press, and was healed. Dwelling specially on the words, "She told Him all the truth," he based an earnest and thrilling appeal, and at the close two ladies sang together "She only touched the hem of his garment."

An after-meeting was held, to which many remained, whilst a large band of workers went to one and another with the words of life. Amongst those who awaited a word of counsel was a poor fallen girl, evidently touched by what she had heard. Strangely enough, not one of the numerous workers addressed her, and after lingering a little while, she quietly slipped out, but not alone.

A poor widow, herself a true Christian, had noticed her emotion, and also that no one had spoken to her. On seeing her go out she followed, and offered a few words of loving sympathy to the stranger. Finding that she had no place in which to sleep that night, she took her to her own home, and, upon ascertaining that she would be willing to return to her friends, she gave her the railway-fare, and saw her off by train.

Weeks passed, and the widow heard nothing more of the girl she had befriended, except that she received an envelope simply enclosing the amount she had advanced. At last a letter came from the father, saying that their girl had only returned to them to end her short life, but that she had obtained his solemn promise before her death to communicate with the widow, and entrust her with a dying message to the clergyman who had addressed the meeting: "that she had only gone home to die, but that she died 'touching the hem of his garment.'" The fulfilment of this thrilling request could not but bring joy to the heart of the faithful pastor, and it may well cheer those who seek to "sow beside all waters." E. M. L.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

THE work of God in Marin has been blessed to the conversion of whole families. Mr. and Mrs. Blamire arrived here about three years since, and have superintended the whole proceedings. My daughter is a helper in the schools and women's classes. Night schools are held for adults, who are otherwise employed in the day. The day school is conducted by Don Caster, the ex-Priest, who likewise helps in Gospel work. Over 100 baptized believers now meet weekly at the Lord's Supper.

Several intelligent fishermen, from Bible study, are now able to preach the Gospel. Mr. Sankey's hymns, translated into Spanish, have proved most helpful in singing the Gospel, thus bringing in the people to hear words whereby they may be saved. A young man, converted at a cottage meeting about a year since, has lately passed to the better land, shouting victory through the blood of the Lamb, a beautiful witness in a dark village. Many neighbours crowded around his dying bed to hear this glorious testimony. We have just had an interview with two converted farmers, whose home is about three leagues off, entreating for someone to labour among them and bring salvation before their poor perishing neighbours. A locale and house are available, but no one here seems able to enter this opening. Our cry shall be unto the Lord of the harvest, that He will thrust forth into this harvest labourers who are filled for this self-denying glorious work.—Yours truly,

Ellen Brooks.

THE PURITY MOVEMENT.

FOLKESTONE.

AN enthusiastic meeting of men only was held in the Tontine Hall, Folkestone, on Wednesday last week, and was addressed by Mr. J. B. Wookey. Large numbers were unable to gain admission.

In the course of his address Mr. Wookey said he had no doubt, if the meeting had been for the suppression of cruelty to animals the Town-hall would have been granted, and the Mayor would have felt it to be a privilege to preside. Very touching was the lecturer's account of an interview he had had with the mother of the girl of eleven years of age, who disappeared from Folkestone so mysteriously over twelve months ago. It is much to be feared she was sent over the Channel to swell the ranks of the many who are known to have been inveigled there for criminal purposes. The poor mother's agony, Mr. Wookey said, could not be described. She has no hope of ever seeing her daughter again in this world.

The following resolution was carried unanimously, and was forwarded to Lord Salisbury:—"This meeting is convinced that the better legal protection of female children, and the putting down of the foreign traffic in girls, are matters of urgent importance; considering also that they are great social and national, and not in any sense party or political, questions, the meeting calls alike upon the new Government and upon the leaders of the Liberal party to act in concert to secure in the present Parliament the passage of a brief measure for the above-mentioned purpose."

WHITEHAVEN.

A mass meeting of men only was lately held in the Protestant Hall, Whitehaven, to hear an address by Mr. Wookey, on the British and foreign traffic in English girls. The speaker said he looked upon the feigned ignorance of the rulers of the people and the ministers of religion in regard to this revolting traffic as highly criminal. In eight years, in three London hospitals alone, 27,000 children between the ages of eleven and sixteen had been treated for terrible diseases. It was a well-known fact that the younger and more innocent the child the greater price she would fetch in the British slave market, where her treatment was infinitely more cruel than the black slave in the dark long ago.

The speaker concluded by appealing to working men to use their political influence in sending men to Parliament who should represent their homes on this matter, so that their children might be protected from a life of hopeless misery—men who will make laws to protect the homesteads of the poor as they desire their own protected. The following resolution was unanimously adopted, and ordered to be sent to Lord Salisbury, as the new Prime Minister:—

"This meeting of the men of Whitehaven considers it is an outrage upon the rights of the poor that five years and a half after the exposure of the foreign traffic in English girls, and three years after the report of the House of Lords' Committee on the subject, the British Government has not taken any adequate steps to put a stop to the kidnapping to the Continent of the girls of the working classes, and this meeting respectfully urges you to use your influence to secure the immediate adoption of some measure for that purpose."

MANCHESTER.

An enthusiastic mass meeting of working men was held on Sunday afternoon in the Manchester Free Trade Hall in support of the movement for suppressing the horrible traffic in English girls to the Continent. Between five and six thousand men were present, and were addressed by Mr. Wookey. At the close a resolution embodying a request to raise the age of protection to eighteen years was unanimously adopted.

SOLDIERS IN INDIA.—Rev. Mr. Gregson reports having again completed the tour of the garrisons of India, travelling 14,193 miles in a circuit outlined by Peshawur, Simla, Calcutta, Bangalore, Poona and Kurrachee. He had meetings at fifty-nine stations, and administered 1388 pledges. Very few persons would be equal to the constant strain of this work, and it must be acknowledged that Mr. Gregson is singularly well fitted for the work to which he has now for so many years been devoting himself, with such remarkable success. It is believed, however, that the time has come when it would be desirable to divide the work, and have agents in the different presidencies. — Bombay Guardian.

IMPRESSIONS OF THE COLAR MISSION.

A letter recently received from Miss R. Steer, dated May 4, gives a very interesting account of her first impressions of the Colar Mission. She writes:—

"My first sight of all the orphans was the morning after my arrival, when all were assembled for the breaking of bread. It was a very touching, as well as a very grand, sight. I wish that all interested in the mission could have seen it. Kodunda Row read Ps. cxlix., and, although I could not understand what he said; yet, on reading the psalm myself, I felt that it suited me so well that my heart went out with theirs in praise and thankfulness. They sang very heartily, 'O happy day, that fixed my choice.' After the cup was passed round, they sang, 'Nothing but the blood of Jesus.' The meeting lasted from 8 to 10 a.m., and I was told that a hundred of the orphans broke bread with us. At 2 p.m. we met for the preaching of the Gospel; four brethren spoke in succession, and for two hours the love of Jesus was told forth. In the evening, at 7 p.m., we had a Bible-reading in English.

"I feel sure I shall be very happy among them all. To know some of these dear native Christians is to love them at once, for they seem to be so real and earnest, and labour so happily together. As far as I can judge, female workers are much needed; there are many girls yet to be won for Christ, as well as much nursing and feeding to be done among the converted ones. I have undertaken the Bible-reading for married women at the Orphanage. Many loving inquiries are made after Miss Anstey, with the question, 'When will mother come?' They are so anxious for her return, and I am constantly receiving messages for her."

If any of our readers know of some one requiring the services of a reliable and experienced nurse, either for ladies, or for children being taken out to India in October next, Miss Anstey can recommend an earnest Christian who is desirous of joining the Colar Mission, and would give her services free during the voyage out, provided her passage to India were paid for. Miss Anstey's address is, 23, Ely-place, Holborn, London.

BIBLE CLASS UNION.—A meeting of this union, which is composed of Bible-classes in business houses, was held at Exeter Hall on Saturday, June 13. Mr. George Williams, chairman, in a short address, gave some valuable advice for the furtherance of Bible study. Short addresses followed from two members, Messrs. Martin and Blyth, the keynote of each being the responsibilities of Christian young men in houses of business. Testimony was given as to benefits received through the classes, and short accounts of work. The hon. secretary, Mr. F. Phillips, 11, Vere-street, London, W., will be glad to communicate with any desirous of forming Bible-classes in houses of business.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—Last Thursday afternoon a meeting in connection with the Jubilee of this Mission was held at the Duke of Argyll's residence, Campden Hill, Kensington. The meeting was held on the lawn in front of the house, and there was a fair attendance. The Duke expressed his delight at being able to afford them a spot at which to gather, and apologised for the absence of his son, the Marquis of Lorne, who had been announced to speak. Every event of the time in which we live, and every discussion with respect to the condition of the people, serve to impress upon one more and more the importance of every agency which could bring Christian charity and instruction to the doors of the great masses in that immense city. He was not disposed to undervalue the special organisations of the separate Churches, but he was delighted to see any assembly of men engaged in a work like that carried on by the London City Mission, and any effort that combined different branches of the Christian Church in one common work of charity and evangelisation. The Jubilee Secretary made a statement respecting the origin of the Mission, and urged that they should give it further support; after which, the Earl of Shaftesbury, who spoke with great earnestness, referred to the modus operandi of the mission. The changed condition of the masses of that city during the last fifty years had been largely due to the influence of the London City Mission. Amongst the other speakers were Mr. Joseph Hoare and Rev. Colmer B. Symes, of Kensington.

MESSRS. PENTECOST AND STEBBINS.

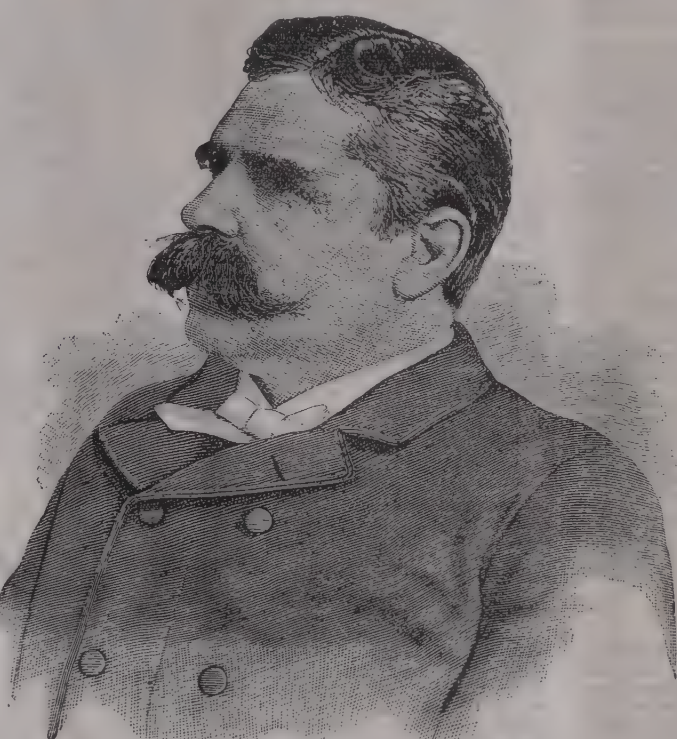
FROM "THE GOSPEL UNION NEWS."

REV. GEORGE F. PENTECOST, D.D.

THIS evangelist was born at Albion, Mich., September 23, 1842, and is, therefore, now in his forty-third year. He is of Huguenot-English and Jewish origin, his grandfather on his mother's side, George Flower, being an Englishman, and his grandmother a Jewess. His descent through his father is from a Bohemian, who, visiting France, became a convert of the Huguenots, and finally developed into a zealous lay evangelist. He was so active and successful that he became known as "Old Pentecost." William Flower, an ancestor, was one of the English martyrs whose suffering and death are recorded in "Foxe's Book of Martyrs."

Owing to business reverses of his father, in which he lost his property and was reduced to comparative poverty, the early life of Mr. Pentecost was one of much hardship and many privations. At the age of fifteen years, when his father died, he had served an apprenticeship to a printer, and learned sufficient of the trade for practical use. Restless under the restraint of home, he joined a company of emigrants on their way to Kansas, which was then a centre of interest in the anti-slavery excitement. Young, inexperienced, uneducated, without religious training, and with unusual and abundant animal spirits and mental activity, it was inevitable that he should fall into evil ways. For about three years he "roughed it" in Kansas, forming many wild habits, which only the merciful goodness of his Heavenly Father prevented from proving his utter ruin. Then returning to Henderson, Ky., whither his mother had removed, he became a clerk in one of the Courts. He continued his wild life until the spring of 1860, when he was converted in a series of special meetings conducted by the well-known Baptist clergyman, Rev. George C. Lorimer. He soon became an active worker in the Baptist church at Henderson, which he joined at once. Making a choice of the ministry as his life-work, he entered the preparatory department of a Baptist College at Georgetown, Ky. His student life, however, was brief, being continued for only ten months, for on the breaking-out of the War of the Rebellion, he was ordained to the ministry, and became chaplain of a cavalry regiment. His life as an army chaplain was evidently not conducive to his spiritual growth, for we find him at its close entertaining a proposition to enter the regular army as an officer. Abandoning this, under the advice of a friend, after his marriage in 1863, he engaged with his mother in business at Indianapolis, Ind. He apparently gave up the idea of continuing in the ministry. But one day he was asked to preach for a weak and small Baptist Church at Greencastle, Ind. Complying with the request, he went and preached to about twenty people. He finally became a stated supply, and was in time called by the church as its pastor, at a salary of 300 dollars a year. Writing of this Mr. Pentecost says:—

"This offer was not very encouraging to a young man with a wife, who had entered upon a business then yielding thirty-five hundred dollars a year, with flour at twenty dollars a barrel. However, through the entreaty of a true-hearted wife, who 'would rather go and live in one room and do all the work,' if I 'would only preach the Gospel,' than to have all the luxuries I could procure her otherwise, I accepted the call, and settled as pastor of the Baptist Church at Greencastle, Indiana, in May, 1864, living in one room, which served as bedroom, kitchen, parlour and study. It was hard, discouraging work. The Church had been torn and distracted by political strife, was very low in religious life, and very poor. I was without experience, utterly without trained preparation for my work, having no education, except such as I had picked up in the printing office, and knew absolutely nothing of theology. My entire library consisted of the Bible, hymn-book, 'Cruden's Concordance,' Flavel's 'Fountain of Life,' and Bunyan's doctrinal works. With these I went to work, studying the Bible topically, with the aid of the Concordance, preaching and studying Bunyan and Flavel, taking their propositions of Scripture truth, and expanding them into sermons for myself. I suppose during my pastorate of two and half years, within which time I held one protracted mission during which I preached every night for three months, I worked almost every page of those blessed old Puritan preachers boldly into sermons. Little by little I added to my store of books, beginning a course of reading and study, including Greek, which I have pursued ever since, reading omnivorously in every direction—theology, science, philosophy, and general literature."



GEORGE F. PENTECOST.

From Greencastle, Mr. Pentecost went to Evansville, Ind., where he preached in a hall and on the streets, during the summer, and often as many as five times on Sunday. Remaining at Evansville two years and a half, and declining a call to the Coliseum-place Baptist Church, New Orleans, he settled at Covington, Ky., where he remained a year and a half, and then, in 1869, he became pastor of the Hansom-place Baptist Church, of Brooklyn. From Brooklyn he was called to Boston, in December, 1872, to become pastor of the Warren-avenue Church. He resigned this position in February, 1878, in order that he might give himself wholly to the work of an evangelist.

He continued in the work of an evangelist until December, 1880, when he became the pastor of the Tompkins-avenue Congregational Church, of Brooklyn, N.Y. As an evangelist, Mr. Pentecost was no less successful than he had been as a pastor in building up churches and winning souls to Christ. In the various cities and towns he was greeted by multitudes, and did most effective work for the Master. Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stebbins accompanied him, assisting in the singing. And for two years "Pentecost and Stebbins" were almost as well-known in the evangelistic work of America as were "Moody and Sankey." Mr. Moody, by whom he was strongly urged to engage in evangelistic work, said of him: "He is the ablest evangelist who has ever crossed my path."

Mr. Pentecost is a man of great physical endurance. It has been said of him that he can preach eight or nine times a day, and feel all the better for it. He certainly may justly be called a great worker. He never writes his sermons, and is a model extemporaneous speaker. Mr. Pentecost is "mighty in the Scriptures," and it is in his expository sermons that he excels. He also writes much for the press, preparing the Comments on the Sunday-school Lessons for the New York Witness, and doing editorial work for the New York Independent. He has published several books, among which, perhaps the best-known is, "In the Volume of the Book." A volume of Bible readings, entitled, "Out of Egypt," which has recently been published in London, has had a sale in a few months of over 40,000 copies. It is estimated that over one million of his tracts have been published. He is also the editor of a new magazine, "Words and Weapons for Christian Workers," devoted to the culture and training of the individual and associated Christian life.

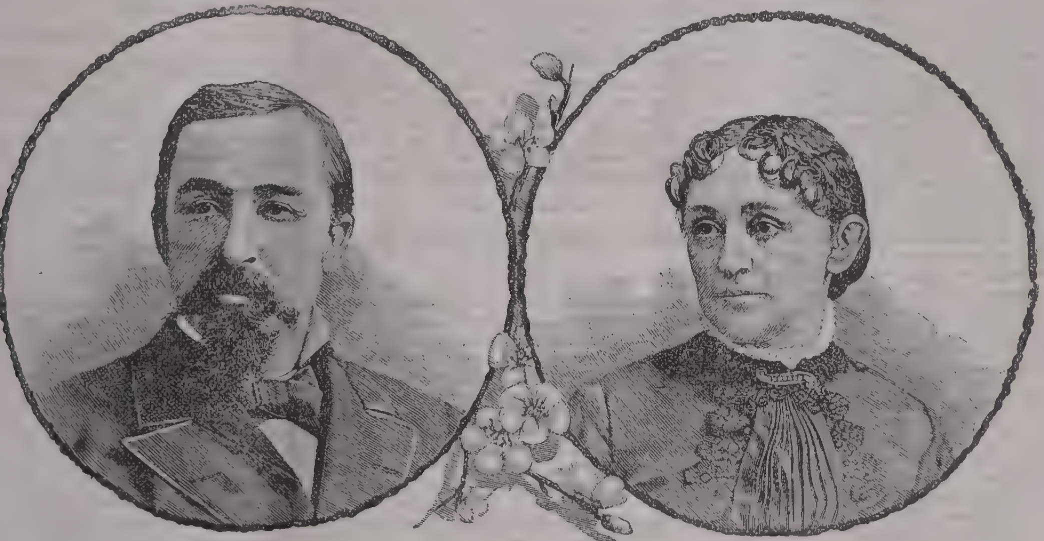
Mr. Pentecost's life, of which the above is the merest outline, is a stirring example of what under God may be accomplished by one who devotes himself in thorough earnest and with untiring zeal to his life-work. He is a close student, and such has been his zeal in this direction that, although without early advantages or college training, he may justly be considered liberally educated. Several colleges have conferred honorary degrees upon him.

MR. AND MRS. GEORGE C. STEBBINS.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins throughout the country, who have been helped and strengthened by their sweet and inspiring songs, will greet with pleasure their familiar faces as they appear in the accompanying portraits. There is also a peculiar fitness in the arrangement by which the artist-engraver has placed them side by side. They have so often appeared together before the people and mingled their voices in songs of praise and Gospel invitation, that to represent them otherwise would seem incomplete. Mr. Stebbins is one of the four Gospel singers who have been directly or indirectly associated with Mr. Moody in his work. The three others are Messrs. Sankey, Bliss, and MacGranahan. These four men have had an influence which may not be estimated in stirring the multitude by spiritual songs. One of them, Mr. P. P. Bliss, has gone to his reward, having been killed in the railroad accident at Astabvla, Ohio, December 29, 1876. Mr. McGranahan, like Mr. Stebbins, is assisted by his wife. It is not desirable to make comparisons. It is sufficient to say that each of these sweet singers possesses some peculiar excellence. No one who has ever heard any one of them will be likely soon to lose the memory of the experience.

Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins were born in East Carleton, Orleans County, N.Y. Their parents were farmers and neighbours. Naturally the young people were thrown often into the society of each other. They both developed a fondness for music. Among their early associations was that of the country singing school, which was held in the evening in the schoolhouse of the district. They were married in 1869. One of Mr. Stebbins' first experiences as a public singer was in the neighbouring city of Rochester.

In 1869 they removed to Chicago, where Mr. Stebbins was engaged in musical enterprises, and where he became acquainted with Mr. Moody. In 1875 they removed their residence to Boston, where Mr. Stebbins was in charge of the singing in the Clarendon-street Baptist Church, and Director of Music in Tremont Temple. This latter position he held until he resigned to enter into evangelistic work. In Boston he met Mr. Pentecost with whose life and work he has been closely identified in recent years. For some time previous to his union in evangelistic work with Mr. Pentecost in 1878, he had aided in conducting the music in such meetings, but his first solo singing before an immense concourse of people, such as were wont to gather in the great tabernacles of Moody and Sankey, was in the Chicago Tabernacle, at the close of Mr. Moody's meetings in that city in December, 1876. It had been arranged that Major Whittle and Mr. Bliss should follow Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work in a series of meetings, but it was ordered otherwise, and Mr. and Mrs. Bliss lost their lives in the railroad accident, which has been already referred to, while on their way to begin the meetings. It was then decided by Mr. Moody and the others workers that Mr. Stebbins should assist Major Whittle. The Tabernacle seated eight thousand persons, and it was not supposed that there was a solo singer in the world other than Mr. Sankey whose voice was powerful enough to fill the great building. When Mr. Stebbins took his seat at the organ on that Sunday afternoon following him whom God had raised up and used so mightily in the service of song, and sitting in the place of him who so recently had gone to be with his loved Master, a hush fell on the great audience of over 8000 souls; then clear and strong, filling all parts of the building, and with a distinctness of utterance that carried each word to every listener, came the notes of the song—



MR. AND MRS. GEORGE C. STEBBINS.

"Oh, the clanging bells of Time!
Night and day they never cease;
We are wearied with their chime,
For they do not bring us peace;
And we hush our breath to hear,
And we strain our eyes to see,
If thy shores are drawing near,
Eternity! Eternity!

Oh, the clanging bells of Time!
How their changes rise and fall!
But in undertone sublime,
Sounding clearly through them all,
Is a voice that must be heard,
As our moments onward flee,
And it speaketh aye one word,
Eternity! Eternity!"

Shortly after this, when Mr. Pentecost resigned his pastorate in Boston, and devoted himself to the work of an evangelist, it was decided that Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins should assist him in the singing. With Mr. Pentecost, Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins visited many of the chief cities in America in 1878, '79 and '80. When Mr. Pentecost accepted the call to the Tompkins-avenue Church, of Brooklyn, Mr. Stebbins accepted an invitation to conduct the singing, which he still continues to do. In the winter of 1880-81, before beginning the work of the Tompkins-avenue Church, they visited California with Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and did most effective work in the revival on the Pacific coast. At this time Mrs. Stebbins conducted a series of meetings for ladies, which were attended by large numbers and were most successful. In 1883 they visited Scotland at the request of Mr. Moody, and aided him in his meetings in that country. And again in 1884 Mr. Stebbins visited England with Mr. Pentecost, and assisted in the great London revival.

Mr. Stebbins is the composer of many tunes found in the popular Sacred Songs and Solos.

AMERICAN CHRISTIANS IN COUNCIL.

DURING the last ten days, national assemblies of Christians have honoured this favourite American watering-place with their presence. The usual Baptist anniversaries came first, occupying, very profitably, the last week in May. This week the Congregationists have occupied two days and nights with their even more demonstrative exposition of American work—i.e., the operations of the American Home Mission, and its satellite societies, or boards. Both conventiens were numerously attended, and fairly represented by the distinguished ministers of their respective denominations, north, south, east, and west.

The Baptist foreign missionaries, male and female, present, excited much interest. Their reports of the work in heathen lands were encouraging, and they pathetically pleaded against the considerable retrenchment which the deficit in the general treasury (168,000 dollars) urgently demanded. The publication department, with its grand building in Philadelphia, where an immense amount of Baptist literature is printed, had, too, its wail of regret on the same account; so also the church-erection, colportage, and other branches of the Union, doing grand work when given the financial means, lamented impecuniosity. The collapsed millionaire, through whose failure the depletion and indebtedness were largely owing, and such of the Union's officials as had led the Society to lean upon so weak a reed, were severely treated.

The elastic church government, and general polity of the Congregationalists suits well another large portion of our Southern population, whose love for loose and easy clothing symbolises, perhaps, their dislike of all unnecesarily rigid peculiarities of Church organisation, and ministerial manners. Two or more missionaries, whose fields of pious labour are in the far south, laid some emphasis on that point, in their hopeful reports to the Convention, this week; much to the satisfaction, apparently, of the from 1200 to 1500 people who listened to them. Without alluding to the addresses, sometimes eloquent, and invariably interesting, representing the wide-spread work of the American Home Missionary Society, and its branches, I will close by saying, that the greatest stress of all was laid by several able native and foreign-born missionaries among the immigrants, German, French, Bohemian, Polish, Scandinavians, &c., upon the gloomy fact that the aliens are being proselyted by the socialists, communists, and nihilists, and threaten the destruction of all social order, and every vestige of Christianity in America. It is the duty, and the manifest mission of the Congregational Churches (and why not all others?) to win these foreign-born residents, by kindness and Christian teaching, to the support of good government, and a godly life. A. L. S.

RACE SUNDAY, NEWCASTLE.—Sir,—We purpose holding our annual out-door services on Sunday, June 28, on the Town Moor, Newcastle. Thousands go to the Moor to see the tents, &c., erected for the great temperance carnival held in the following week. We need a large number of tracts, leaflets, &c., for work, also for the meetings during the temperance festival, and I shall be glad to receive parcels. Jno. P. Squire.

Central Hall, Hood-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

OPEN-AIR MISSION (West London Auxiliary).—Large and interesting meetings were held in the Grosvenor-road, Pimlico, on Sunday week. Gospel addresses were given by Rev. W. M. Sinclair, Rev. Mr. Hazel, Messrs. C. F. Allison, C. de Selincourt, W. Grove, A. Hewitt, F. Searles, Royce, and Mr. W. Davis. At the close many went to the Bessboro Mission Hall, where a meeting was held for the anxious. Many appeared to be convinced of sin.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING IN BRIGHTON.—During the summer season Brighton affords a splendid field for open-air preaching, and is worthy of the best gifts of the preacher as well as the fervent zeal of the Christian. We are desired by the Open-air Mission in London to say that there is an Open-air and Special Service Mission in Brighton, which will be glad of the help of preachers visiting the town, and that Mr. John Watts, 34, Chatham-place, is the Secretary.

FOREIGN PRISONS.—Last week a meeting was held in the Lower Exeter Hall, the Earl of Aberdeen presiding, when a lecture was given by Mr. Charles Cook, descriptive of his visits to various foreign prisons. The lecture was illustrated by a number of persons attired in Oriental costumes. Mr. Cook narrated several cases in which he had been the means of benefiting deserving prisoners. Most of the facts related have already appeared in our columns. Mr. Cook intends, if friends supply him with the funds, to journey through Turkey, Asia Minor, and Austria, scattering copies of the Scriptures in the prisons. As every copy of the Testament in Turkish costs 2s. 6d., he was anxious that the funds should be ample.

A WEST-END MEDICAL MISSION.

THE annual meeting of the Marylebone Medical Mission was held at Stafford Rooms on Tuesday week. Dr. E. Parker Young was chairman, and, as treasurer, appealed for continued and enlarged support. Hon. and Rev. E. Carr-Glyn, Kensington, said that some of the ladies in his congregation were in the habit of sending dinners from their own table to the sick poor. He urged others to do the same, and enjoy the blessed privilege of the giving of their substance to those in deep need.

A statement of the general work and progress of the Mission was given by the medical superintendent, Dr. Robert Chambers, who said that the police, sanitary officials, school-inspectors, and the people themselves, were all prepared to bear testimony to the value of the Mission. It was a lamentable fact that out of 20,000 persons whom he had dealt with in the district of Marylebone, only twenty had any appreciable knowledge of God's way of Salvation. One poor fellow, who excused his inquiries on the ground of having had no larnin', said, "Is the prodigal son God A'mighty, sir?" Several cases of conversion were narrated, with an enthusiasm that showed as great a delight on the part of the Doctor with the spiritual as with the physical aspect of the Mission.

Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson followed with an address in which he declared that no mission was so well fitted to reach the poor as the Medical Mission. There was among them a hardness and a growing bitterness against religion that had never been exceeded, if equalled. Not long ago he attended a meeting where a large number of Atheists and Freethinkers were present; he was prepared to say that he never before gazed upon a more inhuman and hideous looking body of men. They were enraged at the very mention of the name of God; their hatred of law and order was evidently something fearful, and the result, if God did not interpose, would be a state of anarchy. The second part of the Doctor's address contained some severe strictures on the "faith-healing" teaching of the day. The term itself was a misnomer, for there could be no faith apart from a scriptural foundation, and he denied that anywhere in the Bible had God said He would heal sick people. That persons were often cured there could be no doubt, but this was largely wrought by expectation and hope. Of the delicate and intimate connection existing between the body and mind there was probably much more yet to learn, but enough has been discovered to show that it is most powerful. But this is not faith. Dr. Paterson asked the meeting to place at the disposal of the Committee plenty of good food for the patients; this would prevent or cure more than half their ailments.

Dr. Owles, late of the Liverpool Medical Mission, added a word of testimony to the great value of such work, and hoped the day would come when every Christian medical man would feel it his privilege to be a home missionary. He had witnessed some striking conversions among his patients, some of them in high life. One said, "I have prayed for years without success, but now that you have set before me the simplicity of the Gospel it all comes to me in a moment."

Articles for an approaching sale on behalf of the Mission may be sent to Mrs. T. Buxton, 41, Belsize-square, N.W.

A ROLL-CALL OF HEROES.—Under the title "The Roll-call of the Heroes," the editor of The Quiver will publish in the July number of that magazine, an account of the brave deeds in recognition of which the first batch of silver and bronze medals have been awarded from the fund now being raised by the readers of The Quiver, for the institution of medals for heroic conduct in the saving of life by land and sea. Among the first recipients are a college student, a clergyman, a miner, a fisherman, a policeman, and a lifeboat coxswain.

ALCOHOL AND DISEASE.—In the recently issued report of the London Temperance Hospital we read: "The relation of alcohol to the treatment of disease is becoming one of increasing interest to members of the medical profession. In this discussion the value of the Temperance Hospital must be highly estimated by the scientist who desires to know wherein consists the medicinal value of alcohol, if any, and by the social reformer who is anxious to learn how far the use of an article so widely injurious can be wisely foregone in the treatment of the sick. In the balance of this Institution many of the supposed uses of alcohol have been weighed and found wanting; and, while an imitation of its practice will be attended with physical advantage to patients, the moral welfare of mankind may be still more signally promoted."

A BASUTO MISSIONARY.

IN a recent letter from Mrs. Osborne, Soldiers' Home, Cape Town, to a friend in London, she says:—

"A couple of days ago I invited Miss Ferguson and her assistants who have charge of our 'Mary Lyon' Seminary, to come to Cape Town, to give an account of their recent visits to the mission-fields of Basutoland and Natal. About ninety ladies and five men assembled, and the earnest desire of the speakers was to stir up a missionary spirit and interest in the heathen. The narrative was an interesting one, especially the story of a native missionary, who went from Basutoland to the Zambesi. He returned to his people, and in addressing them said that before he left them he thought they were very earnest Christians, and he had thought himself very earnest. Now, after seeing what he had seen he would cut off his right arm if he could turn it into a missionary, and his left arm too; he would cut off his right leg too if he could plant it and make it grow into a missionary; he would have his body cut up into 1000 bits if each bit could be a missionary for dark Africa.

"I should be specially thankful for prayer for the young women of Cape Town. Many of them have been trained at the Seminary I have mentioned, and ought to be prepared and willing to enter upon Christian work. The work is waiting; may the Lord quicken, and then send forth the labourers."

In another communication Mrs. Osborn earnestly asks for books and periodicals for the Soldier's Home, and, with reference to abounding temptations, specially desires a supply of Mr. Varley's tracts for young men and youths, and for such of the White Cross series as would be suitable for soldiers and sailors (such as "The Black Anchor" and "The Ride to Death"). Any supply of the above, or funds to purchase them, would be gratefully received, if forwarded to Miss A. Gurney, Hon. Sec., 12, Camden-hill-road, Gipsy-hill, S.E.

SERVANTS' SCHOOL, WESTBOURNE-PARK.

A GATHERING of friends took place at this Training School for Girls, on Monday, June 15 The school was begun by Lady Kinnaird in 1842, with one child, and has gradually grown until the present building, capable of containing 130 girls, was opened in 1861 through her exertions.

After tea on Monday, Rev. Flavel Cook, D.D., in a few telling words, urged the claims of the school on the support of the Christian public. He said that the teaching adhered to the old lines; the principle of industrial, combined with mental training, was founded on the Word of God. Hon. A. F. Kinnaird pointed out the peculiarity of the school, children being received on a moderate payment (£15 per annum over the age of fourteen, and £13 below it). The education is conducted under Government inspection, and the reports of H.M. Inspector bore witness to the teaching being of a thorough character, while the industrial training of the girls was efficiently carried on. £200 was needed annually over and above the payments of the children and the Government grant, to meet all the expenses.

Mr. T. A. Denny remarked that while people are often ready to start fresh schemes, it is very important to maintain those already in existence. He touched on the crying need of good servants, and, in view of this fact, of the importance of such a school. Dr. Lyle, one of the medical officers, said he had watched over the health of the children for over twenty-four years, and was thankful to report it excellent. He attributed the good health of the young people, under God's blessing, to the efficiency of the staff, who worked under the personal supervision of Lady Kinnaird and her family.

Mr. W. Williams, of the Great Queen-street Homes, spoke of the many temptations to which girls in London are exposed, and the folly of many mothers who unwisely think their children too well educated for domestic service. After a few words given by Rev. E. Beauchamp, the children entered the room, and kindly words were spoken to them by the Earl of Aberdeen and Mr. W. T. Paton, who arrived at this moment. The proceedings terminated with a short address to the children by Rev. Frank White.

There are vacancies for more children, at the usual moderate rates, and a few girls are trained for superior positions at higher rates. Donations and subscriptions would gladly be received by Lord Kinnaird, 2, Pall Mall East, S.W.

WORKERS AT THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

AT the monthly gathering on Wednesday, June 17, Mr. Joseph Merry gave some very practical thoughts on the Lord Jesus, as our example in service, based on Isa. xlii. 1—4, John xiii. 3—5, 12—17; Eph. v. 1, 2; Phil. ii. 2—8. He pointed out that the true spirit of service is that manifested by the Lord in taking the lowly servant's place, forgetting self, and willing to minister to the good of others. The most fruitful cause of failure in service is getting the eye off our great Copy. We often get discouraged looking at our difficulties, measuring them against our own power to overcome, instead of against the Lord Jesus Christ who never got discouraged, though He had much more to discourage Him than we can have.

Miss Child afterwards gave some very encouraging particulars of the work among the sailors at the "Welcome Home" in Ratcliff Highway. The remainder of the evening was spent in praise and prayer, and in hearing an account of work in China from Mr. Brunton, who, for some time, laboured with Mr. George Clarke. The second party of children safely reached Canada. Mrs. Merry wrote on May 30:—

"The Lord's goodness and love have been displayed more than ever during this voyage. The children have had happy times on deck. When fine we had several services, and large crowds gathered around the dear children. A better-behaved family I never took across the sea. We had from seven to eight hundred souls on board. The Lord opened a way for earnest conversation with many of the passengers."

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

FOREIGN BRANCH.

DEAR SIR,—May I again appeal through your columns for help towards this deeply important branch of our Society? Our object is to supply missionaries of all denominations, and in all parts of the world, with good, sound, Gospel tracts for children, free of charge. Those who have not seen specimens of these illustrated tracts, should send to me for them; I will gladly forward a few in different languages.

We have already issued between three and four millions in the following twenty-seven languages: German, French, Dutch, Swedish, Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, Flemish, Danish, Norwegian, Finnish, Bohemian, Slavonian, Hungarian, Polish, Bulgarian, Servian, Welsh, Bréton, Hindi, Hindustani, Bengali, Oriya, Marathi, Gujerati, Japanese, and Arabic. But this is only a beginning. Whilst we are deeply grateful to the Lord for what He has allowed us the privilege of doing for the children of other nationalities, we can only look upon it as an incentive to go forward, as there is very much land yet to be possessed. We long to issue these beautiful leaflets in Tamil, Telugu, Punjabi, Malay, Malayalim, Singhalese, Lettish, Russian, Turkish, Chinese, Persian, Kaffir, Armenian, Malagasy, Modern Greek, Lapponese, Syriac, Eskimo, Roumanian, Sindhi, Sangarese, Techurna, Tibetan, Samoan, Rarotongan, Maltese, Burmese, Icelandic, Cashmiri, Santali, Assamese, &c., &c. In some of these languages the translations are nearly completed, but we need substantial help to enable us to print good large editions.

We have just sent out paper, printed with the pictures only, for 120,000 more Arabic, and 160,000 more Finnish; and we have recently printed 160,000 more Swedish. We are now earnestly requested to print 160,000 more Bengali. During the past twelve months we have supplied Mr. McAll's mission with 176,000 of the French leaflets, besides smaller numbers to a great many workers throughout France.

One fact should be distinctly borne in mind as regards these children's tracts for India—namely, that the poor women in the Zenanas require just the same simple elementary Gospel teaching as the children. We desire to be an auxiliary to all the Missionary Societies in the world, as they must, with the rapid advance of education, devote even more time than formerly to the children.

Who will have a share in this glorious enterprise? £100 will print 150,000 of these beautiful tracts, including cost of pictures. Will not some readers of THE CHRISTIAN devote £100 to such a delightful object? £10 will print 15,000 tracts. Oh, that we might be enabled to scatter millions more before the year closes! Our treasurer is Mr. James E. Mathieson, Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, London.—Yours faithfully,

48, Paternoster-row, London. JOSIAH SPIERS.

SHOEBLACK JIM

A TRUE STORY.

In a small, crowded room in one of the rear tenement houses of our great city, where the sun's rays were never known to shine, or the fresh air allowed to penetrate, our little Jim lay dying.

Months before, one morning, I saw him standing on a street corner, with his shoe-box strapped to his back, calling out in tremulous tones, "Shine, sir?" But the hurrying business men paid little or no attention to the pleading voice and the frail form which was swayed to and fro by the bitter, biting, December wind. As I handed him a picture paper, I asked, "Are you hungry, my boy?" I noticed the pale, pinched cheeks, and the large brown eyes fast filling with tears, as he replied, "Yes, miss, I've had nothing to eat since yesterday morning; but granny is worse than me; fur she's had nothing but a cold tater since day afore yesterday."

"And who is granny?"

"She lives in the rear alley on Mott; me own mother died over on the island, so granny says, and I guess I never had any father."

"Did you ever go to a Sunday-school or Band of Hope meeting?"

"Laws, no, miss! I've no time. I has to stan' around all day, and then sometimes gits only a couple of shines; them Italian fellers, with the chairs, takes all the profit off us chaps. Granny says, 'tis a hard world."

I handed the child a dime, and told him to get a warm cup of coffee and a roll; then got from him a promise to attend the Band of Hope meeting that afternoon at four o'clock. I hardly expected to see him again, but was happily surprised to see him walk in—shoe-box on his back—while we were singing, "Fold me to thy bosom." I shall never forget the expression that was on his face as he stood spellbound in the middle of the floor, and stared at me and the organ. I motioned him to a seat, but he did not move till the music had ceased, and the other children were all seated.

My lesson that day was about the great Shepherd that goes out upon the hills and mountains of sin, and gathers in the little lambs that wander away from the sheepfold. I did not know, that day, that the dear Saviour's hand was already stretched out to receive this one little lamb that had many times, young as he was, been found tipsy, and also smoking cigarettes that he had stolen from somebody's street-stand. He was a regular attendant at Sunday-school and Band of Hope, and no one joined more heartily in the singing than "Jim." One day, in our children's prayer-meeting, he gave his heart to Jesus. No one could doubt the conversion of that little heart when they looked into the bright eyes and beaming face that continually shone with heavenly light.

One day a messenger came to me in haste, and said, "Jim is dying. Hurry, please, miss; he wants to see you agin a'fore he dies." I hurried; and, as I groped my way along the dark alley and up the rickety stairs, I caught the sound of the sweet voice singing, "Fold me, fold me, precious Saviour." I entered quietly, so as not to disturb the singer, but his bright eyes saw me, and he said, "Sing it with me once more, teacher." We sang it through together, then he said, "The next time I sing will be when Jesus folds me in his arms; I'll never forget the hymn, but will remember it till you come up there too; then we'll sing it ag—ain."

The little lamp of life went out. The Great Shepherd had called his little lamb home. There was "Another gem in the Saviour's crown, Another soul in heaven."

AN AFRICAN GIRL'S LETTER.

The following interesting epistle appears in the New York Weekly Witness:—

Dear Editor,—I see a great many letters from boys and girls telling things about your wonderful country. I live in a country where we have always summer. Our hottest weather is just drawing to a close, then fierce tornadoes and then the rains set in, and it rains every day for months. I belong to the Kroo tribe, and have a broad blue-black mark down my forehead to denote my tribe. My mother was shot in a tribal war. I have been now three years with a missionary, Miss Sharp, and know English very well. I've read the history of the United States, and have been through geography a number of times.

I want to tell the little boys and girls that I have seen some things that they have not. Big elephants come down within thirty miles of the coast, and the woods abound in monkeys and parrots. Leopards sometimes come very close to us, and boa-constrictors come into town. My tribe, like all the other tribes, are heathen, but some of us have learned of God and the Saviour of sinners. Bishop Taylor was here three weeks; we did like him so much. Some of the United States boys and girls send us some papers and books. It makes the world seem so large and grand when we can read and look at the pictures.

THE FOUR RUPEES.

BY MRS. J. L. PRESTON.

A gift has come to us over the seas—
A gift of beautiful, bright rupees;
And who do you think has sent us these?

Was it one of the Rajahs, rich and grand,
Who lives in that wonderful, far-off land—
The land of simoon, and sun and sand?

Or was it some Brahmin, who has thrown
Forever away his gods of stone,
And worships the Christian's God alone?

Or was it the Viceroy, who controls
The destiny of those millions of souls
From Kyber to where the Hooghly rolls?

Nay, none of them all; nay, none of these
Has sent us this royalty of rupees,
From this strange sun-land over the seas.

Who was it then? Listen, and I will tell,
For surely, 'tis something to ponder well,
Till the truth of it makes our bosoms swell.

'Twas an eight-year old, brown-faced Hindu lad
Made gift of the four rupees he had,
To help us at home; for he was sad

Because he had heard his teacher's fear
That the work of the children over here
Might wane with the waning of the year.

And therefore he brought his four rupees,
And earnestly whispered, "Sahib, please
Send this for the work beyond the seas!"

Sweet, innocent faith, that did not doubt
That his four rupees would help us out
Of the troubles that compass our work about!

Ah, think of it, Christian children! can
You let this heathen of Hindustan
Do more than you for his fellow-man?

Christ, save this orphan, who of his store
Gave all to aid us; and may his four Rupees increase to thousands more!

MR. THORNE AT LUDLOW.

The Gospel Mission held here in connection with the Y.M.C.A., and conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, was characterised by remarkable interest and power. Christians of all the evangelical churches united in the work, and one of the blessings resulting from the mission is the greatly increased cordiality among members of different denominations. Getting closer to Christ, they have got closer to each other.

The mission was intended to extend over nine days; but, in consequence of the manifest blessing attending the meetings, the committee decided to continue for seventeen days. The largest hall in the town proved too small to contain all who came together to hear Mr. Thorne proclaim the glad tidings of salvation. Such crowded audiences have seldom been known in Ludlow.

It is impossible, in the limits of a short notice, to do more than mention some of the chief features of the mission. These were: the very encouraging answers to the requests for prayer sent to the noon prayer-meetings; the instructive Bible-readings given each day by Mr. Thorne; the early prayer-meetings on Sunday mornings, not soon to be forgotten by those present; the large numbers of young people inspired with concern about eternal questions; a large "camp meeting" held on the beautiful hillside against the town, at which 2000 were present; and, best of all, nearly one hundred and twenty professed converts.

ENGLISH ORPHANAGE IN PARIS.

We have had a serious visitation of measles at our Orphanage, twenty-eight out of forty-four of our little ones being laid aside for the past six weeks. We thank God that all are recovering, although measles have been very fatal in Paris this spring.

Many of these children have strange histories. There are two whose father—a French Count—deserted his English wife and her seven children. Another child was deserted in the same way, with her English mother out in Egypt. Three little girls came to us one night, when the snow lay thick upon the ground last winter, having been "turned out" with their mother because she could not pay the rent of their small apartment.

Our joy is when we hear the children tell us one by one that they have given their hearts to God. We have three Jewish girls. The eldest longs to be baptized, but the mother, though willing that her children should learn of Jesus, starts back and says, "Oh! no, anything but that!" The child weeps and prays, but the mother is inflexible. One day, with subdued and earnest tones, the child asks: "I am asking Jesus to baptize me in my heart; will not that do as well? God will see it."

This unexpected outbreak of sickness brings unlooked for expenditure, and that at a time when our exchequer is peculiarly burdened. Will each mother, whose little ones have been spared any sickness this spring, send a thank-offering, however small, with her prayers: so shall our necessity at this time be ministered to by thanksgiving.

Notes and Comments.

MR. MOODY writes urgently hoping that his friends in this country will muster in large numbers at his Conference at Northfield in the beginning of August. As the young people will be away from the Seminaries at that time, there will be ample accommodation. The Conference will be for ten days, commencing August 5. Friends thinking of going may communicate before the end of June with Robert Paton, Esq., 103, Highbury Quadrant, N., as Mr. Moody is anxious to know by July 10 who are to be his guests.

We cannot possibly give space to the numerous letters we receive for a share in the Day in the Country Fund, but we earnestly press upon our readers kindly to contribute freely and at once, so that we may be able to divide substantial amounts amongst the hundred missions whose children and mothers are eagerly longing for a sight of the fields and woods and a whiff of country air.

An interesting experiment has been made in the capital of the Midlands. At the end of January last Rev. F. W. Macdonald began a series of mid-day services in a neutral hall in the very centre of the business part of the town. He was told that in Birmingham nothing would awaken interest that was not related to politics. It has happily proved otherwise. A service of less than an hour, comprising prayer, singing, and an address in the defence or the illustration of God's Word, has attracted representative audiences that have sometimes inconveniently filled the large hall of the Y.M.C.A.

At the eighteenth of these services (before pausing for the summer) Dr. R. W. Dale conveyed the thanks of all Evangelicals to the originator of the services, and said:—

> "For five or ten years at least—perhaps he might venture to name a longer period—the aggressive element, the militant element had assumed not only a great place in the Christian thought and regard of the churches of this country, but the supreme place. It was not enough, however, for the Church of Christ to be aggressive. Unless those whom Christ had drawn to Himself clung to each other in devout communion, the Gospel, as it came from their lips, would not have the spell for the hearts and consciences of men which it had had in other times and in other lands. The work of the Church would lose its passion, its hopefulness, its power. He did not believe that even solitary fellowship with God would compensate for the want of fellowship with each other in Him. When God received them back into his household it was not that they might live in rooms apart; and if they refused to be restored to fellowship with the family he believed that God would refuse to receive them into fellowship with Himself."

Mr. Macdonald is a Wesleyan Methodist, and many persons would hail the more manifest identification of this great Christian body with outside evangelical movements. Isolation is in any party a mistake in these days. Christ's redeemed, regenerate, and separated people must understand one another, and must sympathise with one another. Dr. Dale's utterance, therefore, can hardly be thought too strong that our refusal to have "fellowship one with another" may be followed by signs that God does not receive us into full communion with Himself.

We are not to faint in our prayers. Although God is long-suffering, He will avenge his elect which cry to Him night and day. The great missionary, Robert Moffat, poured out perpetual prayer on behalf of Bechuanaland. The filibustering wars and Boer depredations that had broken up his grand work there lay heavily on his last days. His cries seemed unanswered. But now, even before his Life is published, the providential answer has come. The vast territory of Bechuanaland, with its elevation, fine pasturage, soil that will grow all kinds of fruits, and temperate air, has come under the protection of the British Government, and we may hope that the dangers which menaced its native churches are ended.

Rev. W. Crosbie, Congregational Minister at Brighton, has been induced to publish a sermon lately preached by him on the miracle of the crippled sufferer, who was let through the roof of the dwelling into the presence of Christ. Stone walls and a people thinking only of themselves were the barriers then; they are often the barriers to blessing now, so that for many, who would do the Lord's divinest work, it is "positively necessary to go outside the organised churches altogether." These men, added the preacher, who carried the paralytic, and felt for him, "would scarcely have stopped at pulling down the house altogether." When there is intense earnestness a "formal, stereotyped order of things" will not be too much respected by those who would bring victims of misery into contact with the Saviour.

The preacher very properly emphasised the fact that Jesus strongly commended the faith of those who brought the man. Christian workers need above all things to be inspired by this faith. Were the Church aglow with the fire of it, formalism, narrowness, cold decorum, and exclusiveness would be cast aside, and unusual methods would remove hindrances of every description. Houses would be unroofed in zeal for the perishing. In these times of "the world's open sore," the compassionate are summoned to study the great and pregnant words, "When He saw their faith." Such preaching is very timely.

The daily papers show that suicidal mania is on the increase, and men of the world are asking how it is. They say that if another Goethe had arisen to invest with new and romantic interest a fresh series of "The Sorrows of Werther," they could understand it. Or if the stoic Epictetus were in our midst, pointing to the door which he averred was always open to those who wished to escape the miseries of mankind, there would be some reason for the frequency of self-murder. Béranger immortalised two of his countrymen who sought death in this way; but Béranger is no more. What, then, is the cause? The followers of the Meek and Lowly One know it quite well. Men's minds are being unhinged by what they hear and read of Agnosticism and Theosophy. The faith of fools is the prop of these so-called advanced religions, which, like the ichneumon in the caterpillar's body, take deadly hold upon those who are influenced by them. The world is being taught, whether it will or no, the truth of that word: I will give them up to strong delusions, that they may believe a lie."

There may be some evangelistic workers who think that they are precluded from exercising their gift in a foreign land because of their ignorance of the language. In his rousing appeals that more labourers should be sent to these non-Christian countries, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe is wont to lay much stress on the fact that the Gospel message has been, and can easily be, conveyed to foreigners by interpretation; he quotes his own experience as conclusive on the point. His argument has just received strong confirmation from the experience of the venerable Dr. A. N. Somerville, during his evangelistic tour in the East. In a recent address at Glasgow the Doctor said:—

> "All the while I spoke my own language. The power of interpretation is extraordinary. I had about twenty-four different interpreters who spoke for me in different places. Some people think that interpretation must stand very seriously in the way; but I began to think that interpretation gave an added interest, and rather drew auditors instead of driving them away. I have often thought that our Lord speaks significantly of interpretation. Christ Himself did not speak one word of Greek; and, as we have the inspired interpretation of the four Gospels, so we may have the uninspired interpretations told with great force and power to-day among the nations of the earth."

These words of the world-wide evangelist claim the most serious attention. They add one more to the many encouragements by which the Lord would coax us to go forth and disciple all nations. They cut away from beneath our tardy feet one more of the many excuses that we are trying to heap up as a barrier between us and our plain urgent duty.

A foreign missionary, who was present at the recent annual meeting of the China Inland Mission, wrote as follows to Mr. Reginald Radcliffe:—

> "I never before had my eyes so widely opened to the awful neglect of the Church with regard to the heathen world. What can be done to arouse Christians to a sense of their responsibility? I wish a few men full of faith and of the Holy Ghost could be found who would bind themselves together as one man, to give the Churches no rest till they awake out of their sleep, and send men and women to the heathen, not in parties of five or ten, but in hundreds. If this is not soon done persecution will, perhaps, compel us to be scattered, not only in Samaria, but unto the uttermost parts of the earth. It is much better to obey willingly."

In writing to us on this subject, Mr. Radcliffe says: "Would that the suggestion of this invalided missionary could be responded to in London, before many earnest Christians separate and disperse." We see no reason to prevent it. Could not some of the most earnest-minded spirits who gather at Mildmay this week from different parts of the kingdom, band themselves in a solemn league and covenant to carry out the proposal of our missionary friend? Surely there could be no better or more favourable opportunity, and the suggestion, in its timeliness, seems to us to be clearly of the Lord. If it were followed up in serious earnest it might make the Mildmay Conference of 1885 memorable to all eternity.

In his terse and blunt fashion, Rev. H. Price Hughes writes thus in last week's Methodist Times, respecting the Indo-Chinese opium trade:—

> "The sum of the whole matter is that the British nation keeps a poison-shop, and every voter ought to know it."

This is an age of specialties. Some devoted and high-souled women have made their specialty the brave defence of their own sex, and war to the death with all that tends to degrade it. Among these noble women Miss Ellice Hopkins stands in the foremost rank. With a force born of real inspiration, she and others are doing battle by speech and pen with one of the giant evils of the day. We cannot speak too highly, either of the literary excellence or of the moral and spiritual worth of the "White Cross Series" of leaflets "for men only" (4d. per doz. Hatchards). We warmly commend them as a most timely and high-toned addition to English Christian literature.

The deplorable explosions last week at lifton Hall and Apedale Colleries, by which bout 180 miners were killed, ought to waken deep and practical sympathy for the ereaved survivors. We observe with plea- ıre that the Lord Mayor of London and the layor of Manchester have opened relief ınds. The accounts of the Clifton Hall ccident are painful to read. A survivor ıys:—

> "The fright of the boys and some of the men as painful to behold. One had become delirious ith fear, and began to repeat, schoolboy fashion, ıe letters of the alphabet. The men sighed and oaned, some shouted for help, and others muttered ords of prayer."

These sad events emphasise the importance f Christian work among our mining popu- ıtion, exposed, as they are, to most sudden nd fatal disasters. It is in such a testing me of bodily peril that the consolations of good hope through faith in Christ become priceless possession.

The Pall Mall Gazette, through the me- ium of "a cynical correspondent," as our ontemporary calls him, tells a most un- leasant tale of the way in which Europe ivilises Zanzibar with the brandy-bottle. ut why should a man be called cynical ecause he speaks or writes the simple, onest truth? Let Christian Britons hear is report and then say whether they are ot ashamed of those who have represented ngland in her political and commercial ealings with the native authorities of Zanzi- ar:—

> "The real achievement of civilisation is neither issions nor emancipation, but the success that has owned its efforts to introduce drunkenness among e native population. We persuade them by a entiful display of force to suppress the slavery hich their law approves and allows, and at the me time we make them admit the liquor which the abomination of their faith. If there were European traders in the place, his Highness the ıltan would not suffer a drop of spirits to find its ay into his dominions. By the English treaty, o articles whatever shall be prohibited from being ıported into or exported from the territories of s Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar.' The duty imports is limited to five per cent. The treaties ith the United States, and with France and Ger- any and other European countries, contain auses identical with that quoted. In consequence, ere is an unlimited and increasing traffic in quor.
> "The Sultan sees the mischief that is being rought, but is helpless to check it. If the various wers consented to a modification of their treaties, e Sultan could protect himself and his people om what he regards as their ruin, by these or her means. Unhappily there is small chance of ople at home taking much interest in the matter. ey send a bishop and a staff of followers to Zan- bar, and then they have done their duty by that r-away place. It is a disgrace to our civilisation at we should compel a foreign State to permit e unrestricted sale to its own subjects of poisonous quor. Yet this is what we are doing, in spite of e Sultan's protests, and in spite of our knowledge at, were he his own master, not a drop would ey get."

This is of a piece with our treatment of ina in relation to the opium trade. Truly ere is little sarcasm in the idea broached by meone, that these heathen countries should nd missionaries to England to teach her e elements of civilisation and fair dealing.

The Brooklyn Y.M.C.A. is about to open very handsome building as its home. It described in the Brooklyn Eagle as "an aborate and magnificent structure," cover- g nearly half an acre, and costing 300,000 llars. In such a building as this, a mighty ork for God and young men ought to be stained. There are some of our London M.C.A.'s that would be content with some- ing much less pretentious and costly.

Mr. Spurgeon told a good story at Stockwell on Thursday. "I was told," said he, "of a man who was so mean and stingy that he never gave anything to anybody. 'But,' said I, 'he gave me something once. In my early days, when my salary was £45 a year, my hat had got shabby, and this man at one of our meetings asked me to speak with him. He then put into my hand 7s. 6d., and said the Lord had bidden him to give it to me.' At our next meeting he asked me to pray that he might be delivered from the sin of covetousness. I asked him what particular form his covetousness took. He replied, 'Why the Lord told me to give you ten shillings, but I only gave you seven and sixpence,'" and then he gave the young preacher the half-crown of which he had defrauded him. Has it not sometimes happened that the Lord has told a steward of his to give a sovereign or a five-pound note, or a hundred, or a thousand pounds, to some work in which He and all heaven are interested? But only a part was given, and the steward, not being as honest as Mr. Spurgeon's covetous friend, the balance remains to this day to the debit of his account with God. Had it not better be paid at once?

Some twenty years ago one of the daily papers declared that the age was out of breath. It has not slackened pace since then, and the natural results are evident. Many are running to and fro, and knowledge (not wisdom) is increased. Like the Athenians, thousands are ever listening for some new thing, and profane and old-wives' fables are often more acceptable than doctrine according to godliness.

The Epistles to Timothy and Titus are appropriate reading for the present time. "Lay hands hastily on no man" is a timely caution. Pious or un-pious cranks, who are played out in America, or other parts of the world, come to England and promulgate profane and old wives' fables, and creep into houses and take captive silly women, who are ever learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. The Apostle said:—

> "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but, having itching ears, will heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts, and will turn away their ears from the truth, and turn aside unto fables."

That time has indeed come. We have crazed men, foolish men, designing men, at home, and we import them from abroad, whose erratic utterances will work mischief unless true ministers of Christ hold fast the form of sound words themselves, and exhort their hearers to hold them fast.

The pitiful story told by Mr. Wookey in his address at Folkestone, of the child kidnapped from a village near that town (p. 9), leads us to beg our readers distinctly and earnestly to warn mothers, and others who are likely to need the warning, to be very careful that those to whom their children become servants are persons of good repute.

At the Faith Healing Conference, a lady said "they had been forming their expectations of blessing upon past experiences; they should rather be looking for something entirely different. God said, by Isaiah, He would do a new thing. We should forget the things behind, and reach forth unto those things which are before." This address was quiet, thoughtful, and spiritual, and if spoken to some audiences would have been most useful. But addressed to an assembly looking for signs and wonders it was likely to prepare them for any new manifestation, the more extravagant, the more welcome.

Those who have the control of Faith Healing or other platforms incur a grave responsibility as to those whom they receive and put forward as teachers. At the recent Conference we were informed that a speaker from Australia brought no sufficient credentials, and, on inquiring at headquarters, we did not find this contradicted. It was observed that when, on one occasion, he was going forward to assist at an "anointing service," he was prevented by one of the responsible directors. Touching the forehead with oil is one thing, passing the hand, mesmerically or otherwise, over the parts affected, is another. This seems to have been a method familiar to Naaman, but which Elisha significantly discountenanced.

Some of the opponents of Faith Healing appear to us to go as much too far on the one side as its professors do on the other. There is abundant evidence that, in many cases, God has healed the sick in answer to prayer, though such cases are in danger of being crowded out of knowledge by the new system of multitudinous and indiscriminate anointing.

It appears to us that Conferences, Conventions, and Congresses, which have of late years become an institution, might very properly, and indeed ought to, occupy themselves not so much with abstract doctrines and general exhortations, as with subjects of present interest, on which the people who compose the audiences need counsel, instruction, and advice. At present they are in danger of being led by extremists on either side. We cannot deal with every question as Alexander did with the Gordian knot, and cut it into two halves. We want the knots disentangled, and the people taught how to distinguish the true from the false, and how to separate the precious from the vile.

SCIENTIFIC INQUIRY.

THE annual meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute took place last Thursday evening at the house of the Society of Arts, the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G., in the chair. The report was read by the honorary secretary, Captain Frank Petrie, and showed that the number of home and foreign members had increased to upwards of eleven hundred. The Institute's object, to promote scientific inquiry, and especially in cases where questions of science were held by those who advanced them to be subversive of religion, was aided by scientific men, whether in its ranks or not. The address was delivered by Dr. J. Leslie Porter, President of Queen's College, Belfast, the subject being "Egypt: Historical and Geographical." Having referred to the antiquity of Egyptian records, which, in so many instances, bore on the history of other ancient countries, he proceeded to describe the various changes through which that country had passed since its first colonisation; and, touching on its physical geography, concluded by giving the main results of recent exploration.

Among the speakers were Sir H. Barkly, G.C.M.G., and Professor Stokes, F.R.S., of Cambridge, who gave an important account of the progress of physical science during the past quarter of a century, and, reviewing the results, specially noted that, as scientific truth developed, so had men to give up the idea that there was any opposition between the Book of Nature and the Book of Revelation, both of which had the same source.

Captain Calver, F.R.S., having moved a vote of thanks to the President, Lord Shaftesbury expressed his gratification at the way in which the Institute was uniting scientific men in the search for truth, more especially as the dangers of a little knowledge were proverbial, as had too often been apparent in the past.

"WORDS OF LIFE."

SUCH is the title of a neat little book issued by Mrs. Robertson, of Hampstead, Hon. Secretary to the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. Its sixty pages are almost exclusively made up of brief and intensely interesting reports, written by the Distributors, relative to the progress and success of the work. A few added words, however, show that the number of copies of Scriptures distributed, including Bibles, Testaments, and Gospels, has not been far short of half a million. Mrs. Robertson, while expressing earnest thanks to all those friends who have enabled her to scatter these beams of light to so large an extent, longs to do a great deal more. "There is practically no limit to our power for doing good if the means were at hand for procuring the books; for the whole of the work is done by free agencies, and the funds of the Association are employed entirely in purchasing the Bibles and Testaments which are given." She adds:—"Let us pray that special blessing may accompany the message of pardon and salvation thus freely given, and let us have faith to believe that multitudes may by this means be brought to the knowledge of the truth."

As to the call for this effort, we are reminded by Mrs. Robertson that at times there are "piles of applications" from different countries, waiting for the coffers to be replenished before supplies can be sent. Opportunities are sometimes lost altogether, as in the case of vessels with perhaps a thousand emigrants going from Italy to South America with not a single Bible among them, or a regiment of French soldiers going to the wars. "How we should rejoice to be able to send out ten thousand times as many as we do, and thus give the 3500 precious promises contained in God's word to poor souls who in sadness of heart are crying, 'Who will show us any good?'"

Our readers will, we are sure, peruse the following extracts with interest; for the rest, we must refer them to the Report itself, which can be obtained from Mrs. Robertson, whose address is, 1, Oak Hill-park, Hampstead, London, N.W.

Mons. Lecoat, writing from Fremel, in France, says:—"One of the Bibles, given to a poor young man at Morlaix, has been the means of his conversion. He has lately written to me, saying he never ceases to thank God and to pray Him to pour down blessing on those who procured him the Book. Another Bible given away in one of our schools has been the means of converting a young schoolmaster."

Mr. Hathaway writes from Boulogne:—"We gave away a large number of Testaments, all of which were eagerly received, with cries for more, so that I had to go and get another supply. It was heart-cheering to see, when I returned, the workmen all sitting in groups, reading those precious Words of Life. Then we gave copies to the men working upon the quay, and to the sailors and custom-house men, who not only received them respectfully, but greatly astonished us by their eagerness to get them."

Mr. Pendridge, of Jaffa, writes:—"Since the first distribution of the Scriptures here, there has been a secret stir among the Mohammedans in favour of the Word of God. Some few days ago I presented a Bible to one of the principal teachers. Could you believe it that the Mahdi, or highest dignitary of the Mohammedan Church, has actually requested and received a copy of Holy Scriptures?"

Dr. A. N. Somerville wrote from Smyrna:—"Already forty copies of the New Testament have been put carefully into the hands of the Jews in Smyrna, who requested the Book. 156 copies in modern Greek have been given to Greeks."

The late Mrs. Smith, of Beyrout, wrote:—"Last month, as we drove along the Damascus-road, we were greatly struck by the urgent application from the soldiers who came around the carriage entreating for Bibles. Moslems, Druses, Greeks, and Maronites were then put in possession of new and saving truths. I can truly say there never was so great a demand for the Word of God as at the present time."

These are but short and stray samples of many others that might be quoted, all proving the fact that the Bible is the Book for the World, and the Book that people of all kindreds and tongues will gladly receive if it is placed within their reach. Mrs. Robertson will do her part in the great work, if Christians who value this Gift of God will but help her to hand it on to those who as yet sit in spiritual darkness.

FAITH v. PRESUMPTION.

A FEW days since, the writer was much grieved, as well as greatly surprised, to hear of the death of a very dear friend under peculiar circumstances. He was a most devoted, earnest, and consistent Christian, whose one desire seemed to be to glorify his Father in heaven by doing his will and benefiting his fellow-men. He was engaged in a somewhat large and prosperous business, and delighted to be able to assist any needy individual or struggling cause. About thirty years of age, and enjoying most excellent health, he was yet in a few days cut off, his wife left a widow, his children fatherless, and all the opportunities he possessed for usefulness ended.

Taken sick with a bilious attack, he refused to obtain medical aid or take medicine, believing it to be dishonouring to God to do so. After seven or eight days of suffering, a doctor was called, who at once pronounced the case hopeless, and in a few hours the patient died, after suffering terrible agony from internal inflammation, which medical skill might have relieved.

This being the third case of a similar kind known to the writer (singularly enough, each was known to the other two), and occurring in a few months, it seemed to be his bounden duty to call the attention of his fellow-Christians to the duty of using medical means. Satan, in his final temptation of Christ, came, Bible in hand as it were, and saying: "It is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone," he urged Him to cast Himself down from the pinnacle of the temple, for no harm could befall Him. Such a specious temptation it took the Son of God Himself to see through and overcome; but notice how He did so, not by argument, but simply, "It is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

It is evident that this was not intended by Christ as a rebuke to Satan for tempting Him, but to show the wrong of putting ourselves into a position of peril and danger needlessly, and thus tempting God, while apparently and professedly trusting to God to deliver us therefrom. To do this would be presumption, and the Lord would not therefore so expose Himself, notwithstanding the promise of his Father to specially preserve Him from danger.

What Satan could not succeed in doing with regard to the Lord of Glory, he may and will succeed in doing with us, his more or less weak and ignorant children, unless we are sober and vigilant, and armed both by the shield of faith and the Word of God. We are cautioned against his wiles, and are supposed not to be ignorant of his devices, even to his appearing as an angel of light, when in truth he is the prince of darkness. One of his devices is to turn any special blessing of God into a curse, even as when he succeeded in turning her whom God had given to be a help-meet to man into a means of helping him to accomplish the downfall of man. And how he has diabolically followed up this plan all through the ages is often seen in Scripture as well as in modern times.

Now, if there is a great blessing on earth, i is that of prayer, by which we ask for and obtai from our Father above the blessings we need and many are the recorded instances of answer given in response to the exercise of faith in th many precious promises for its fulfilment During recent years no subject has so stirre the hearts of Christians as that of the healing b faith of cases pronounced beyond the reach o human skill; and the writer has known of suc instances, his own beloved partner having bee spared to him more in answer to prayer, he feel assured, than to anything else.

The writer has no doubt of God's ability to d anything He pleases, but, at the same time, h does question our right to ask and HIS willingness to do for us by miracle what He has alread given us the power to do for ourselves. It just here that some honest-hearted and earne Christians are, we think, being led astray. An this appears to be due chiefly to a want o appreciation of God's gifts to man, or from lack of being able to see the Giver in his gifts.

Surely we need not question for a moment th origin of that which will relieve pain and cur disease, for we know full well that such thing are not of Satan, his aim and purpose being t cause as much misery as he can, both here an hereafter. Now, it seems that to reject thes gifts is to reject the Giver, and to be quite consistent, we might as well ignore the use of foo drink, fuel, &c., for are they not his gifts too?

It is impossible to go at all deeply into th subject in this limited article, but it occurs t the writer's mind that it would be easy to sho that nowhere in Scripture can it be found tha the Lord, so to speak, wasted his miracles b doing for man what he had the power to do fo himself. On the contrary, his power was th more manifest in the presence of man's inabilit to help himself. Again, wherever means wer at hand in any way applicable to the case, the were used, even as the five loaves and the tw fishes were used, the Lord asking, "How man loaves have ye?" He could as easily have performed the miracle without the nucleus in th shape of these loaves and fishes, but He use that which man had.

So with Elijah: the Lord could have cause him to subsist without food, but He did not d so, but used the ravens and the brook, and th widow's oil and meal.

Further, when Jesus stood at the grave o Lazarus, He could have spoken to the ston and it would have rolled away as readily as th dead came back to life at his word, but as thos standing by could do that, He commanded ther to do it, and, having spoken the word of life an power, He said to the people, "Loose him, an let him go."

It is very sad to see how Satan succeeds i alluring, as a rule, the most honest and earne of God's children into the by-paths of error.

The young man referred to had even gone s far as to join a few others in forming a kind o sect, of those who were considered as havin sufficient faith to trust God that they shoul never see death, but be translated to heaven a Elijah was. The fact is that unless we kee closely and intelligently to the lines of truth there is no knowing where we may be led to i the end.

Briefly summing up the subject, it appears t be our duty to use the means placed at our disposal by a beneficent Providence, for the suppl of our varied needs, recognising his hand in hi gifts, thanking Him for them, and asking hi blessing upon their use; and if, from any non preventable cause, these means should not b within our reach, or should be insufficient fo our relief, then it is our privilege to call upo Him, who is above and beyond all his gifts, an can as easily work without them as with their aid

This we believe is intelligent faith; but t refuse to take that which He has given us t use, and to ask and expect Him to work miracle instead, this we believe is simply presumption. These words are penned in Christia love, and it is hoped they will be received in th same spirit. God forbid that we should increas error or offend one of God's little ones; but ma He who is the Spirit of truth, guide us into al truth. GEO. D. DOWKONTT.

LADY'S CRUISE IN THE NORTH SEA.

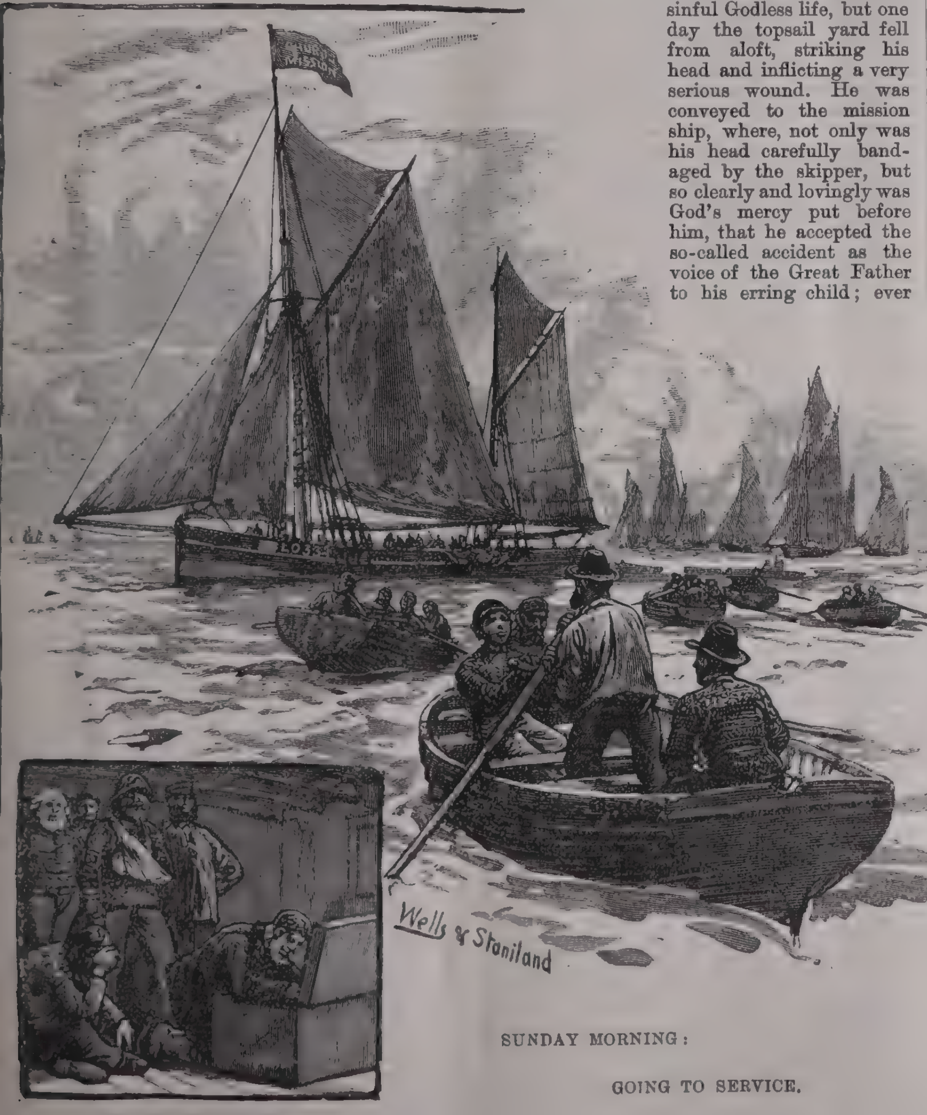
"We are making up a party for the North Sea. Will you join us?" Such was he tenor of a letter I received in May last. The ffer was tempting, the idea novel; but the reather was rough, and gave no sign of improve-ent. Should I risk it, and go in faith? I rote a hearty assent, and on May 27, we were ll (two ladies and three gentlemen, including he Secretary) at Gravesend, our appointed renezvous, awaiting the arrival of the Edward uriol. After several delays, caused by fogs and alms, she came up the river early the next orning, and in a few hours' time we had started n our expedition to the trawling fleets, towed wiftly out by the steam fish-carrier, Endeavour, y the kind permission of its owners, who thus ractically evinced their appreciation of the ission work carried on in their fleet.

We were all up by 5.30 a.m. on Saturday, to vatch the trawl net hauled in. "Praise the ord," said the skipper, as it came in sight, "that's the best bag the Edward Auriol has ever ad." It was a new and interesting sight to us s the knot was untied, and the whole mass of sh slid in all directions on the decks. Then nsued the process, so often described before, of leaning, packing, and transporting the fish to he steamer. About 150 other vessels were imilarly engaged, and it was now that we ained our first practical insight into the value f the medical and surgical appliances with which each Mission smack is furnished. We found it to be a regular practice in the Fleets for boats to call at the Mission Smack either for medicines or library books on their way back from the steam carrier to their own vessels. This morning two poor fellows who came in great suffering speedily found relief, and received, moreover, words of kindly sympathy and Christian advice.

Sunday morning's sun rose on a scene never to be forgotten; a cloudless sky, the sea calm as a lake, the crew all arrayed in their Sunday best, preparing for the day's services. At seven o'clock a prayer-meeting was held in the hold; indeed, long before that hour we ladies were awakened by the sound of deep voices joining in the General Confession, followed by the "Venite." Soon after breakfast, boats put off from the fishing smacks all round us, bringing a goodly number of fishermen on board, and for hours our sweet songs of praise sounded over the waters. Then followed a short Gospel service in the hold.

After dinner came the best part of all. "Let us have an experience meeting," said the Secretary; "I know you will enjoy it." So we gathered on deck again, and one by one those dear simple-hearted fellows testified to what the Lord had done for them—how He had saved them and kept them, and filled their hearts with joy and peace. Several told us it was on the deck of the mission vessel the Saviour had found them. "Praise the Lord," they said, "for putting it into his children's hearts to send out these Gospel ships."

One dear skipper said he had been steering a course heavenward for just twelve months. Until then he had lived a sinful Godless life, but one day the topsail yard fell from aloft, striking his head and inflicting a very serious wound. He was conveyed to the mission ship, where, not only was his head carefully bandaged by the skipper, but so clearly and lovingly was God's mercy put before him, that he accepted the so-called accident as the voice of the Great Father to his erring child; ever since, by God's grace, he had been conscious of pardon and acceptance, and "he blessed God for that topsail stick!"



THE DISPENSARY!

SUNDAY MORNING:

GOING TO SERVICE.

Another, whose bright beaming face was itself a 'testimony,' told how one summer's evening, three years ago, the missionary from the Ensign boarded his vessel (The Desire), remonstrated with him in very plain language upon his carelessness as to his spiritual condition, and of God's claims upon him, and urged him "before that dog-watch was out" to come as a penitent to the Saviour. He did so, and as an interesting coincidence, he shortly afterwards was removed from the smack Desire to the Good Hope. When we met him he was in command of the Peace.

As each one finished, our joy and gladness found vent in some ringing chorus of thanksgiving. Never shall we forget the expression on those dear men's faces, all aglow with Divine enthusiasm—head, hands, and feet, were keeping time as they sang:—

> "We are marching onward, singing as we go,
> To the promised land where living waters flow,
> Come and join our ranks as pilgrims here below,
> And we'll work till Jesus comes."

We all felt it was a little foretaste of heaven, and one of the company reminded us of the saying of the old negro: "If de crumbs dat fall from de Massa's table am so sweet, what will de great loaf in glory be?" A few earnest words from the Secretary and his friends brought the happy meeting to a close.

We sailed the next morning to the "Short Blue" Fleet, passing the "Columbia" fleet, with the mission vessel Ensign. The trawls were down for a day's haul, and there was no chance of a service. Hearty greetings were shouted out to us from passing vessels, and the skipper of the mission smack Salem came on board for a brief visit. Then eastward once more till we lay to off Heligoland, on one of the loveliest mornings of the whole week. Great interest was displayed on this the first visit of the Gospel ship to the island. The Deputy-Governor came on board to inspect her. He most kindly placed his own boat at our disposal, and heartily fell in with our suggestion to have a Gospel service on the beach, as the only church there is the German Lutheran, and of little use to the English residents. A large number of Heligolanders joined heartily as we sang the songs of Sion, and our friends told out the "Old, old story."

The afternoon was passed in visiting and admiring the charming little island, so spotlessly clean, and quaint-looking, with its happy comely inhabitants. At 7 o'clock we all assembled on board for another service. Here our skipper gave a brief history of his work in connection with the "Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen," speaking of the way in which it had originated, and the good it had already done. Other addresses followed, and then, as the sun went down, we gathered round us a band of bright young girls and lads in their picturesque costumes, and taught them to sing with us the well-known simple hymn:—

> "What can wash away my stain?
> Nothing but the blood of Jesus."

We explained to them in German what it meant, though they all understood a little English; then over and over again we sang it, praying as we sang that the words received by the outward ear might sink down into the heart, and bear fruit unto life everlasting. Sweet it was to hear them singing in their broken English—

> "Noosing boot se blood of Yesu."

A scene to be remembered while memory remains. At last the farewells were said, and we sailed away bearing with us the souvenir of one of the happiest days we had ever spent.

The next morning, while waiting about at the mouth of the Elbe for the Hamburg steamer to pick us up, a pilot boat came alongside and hailed us. "Where are you bound for?" "To heaven," replied our skipper. "Where are you?" By eleven o'clock we were on board the Kestrel watching out of sight our beloved Edward Auriol. Here too we were kept at work, for the captain having given a ready assent, two services were conducted in the saloon, and one in the forecastle; much interest was manifested both by passengers and crew.

At 8 o'clock on Friday we were safely landed after our ten days' cruise, full of thankfulness to Him Who had so guided and guarded us, and given us such joy in his service.

ISRAELITES OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

A BERLIN correspondent of The New York Independent gives a vivid sketch of the movement toward Christian faith among Jews in Bessarabia. Interesting particulars are furnished concerning the leader of this movement, Joseph Rabinowitz, gathered in part from personal interviews with him. After relating the circumstances of his visit to Jerusalem, his conversion to faith in Christ, and his baptism on March 24, the writer says:—

"Rabinowitz is a man not quite forty-eight years of age, so that it is to be hoped he may for many years be able to carry on the work to which he has devoted himself. He has made on the Christians in Germany with whom he has conferred the impression of being sincerely consecrated to Christ as Lord and Saviour. Theologically, he appears to be thoroughly orthodox; but, as might be expected, he betrays his Jewish and Rabbinical training by occasional subtleties of interpretation, as, e. g., when he finds the Trinity in the three principal names of the Deity—God, Jehovah, and Lord. The statement at first made, that over two hundred families had joined the movement, was unwarranted. Rabinowitz himself has not made so high an estimate of the number of his adherents. Some two hundred or more have attended his services, but how many may be fit to be reckoned as true Christians is still doubtful. It was thought that the fact of his baptism would drive many away from him, and even, perhaps, excite the unbelieving Jews to still greater hostility than heretofore. A letter just received from him, however, reports that the knowledge of the baptism seemed, thus far, to be doing good, and that the meeting-house on Easter Sunday was filled with those who came to hear the Gospel. A young Jewish Christian has been requested to go from Prague and act as teacher in the new congregation, and thus relieve Rabinowitz of a part of the necessary work of building up his Church. May the Lord guide and bless the movement, and make it a beginning of a large ingathering of his ancient people into the kingdom of Christ! In the meantime it is commended to the earnest prayers of the Christian Church."

THERE ARE TWO SIDES in a well-developed Christian. There is what may be called the Martha-side, which is occupied in benevolent activities—in giving, teaching, toiling, and other diffusive methods. Some good people rather overdo this side, and neglect the Mary-side, which consists in self-study, reading, meditation, and heart-communion with their Master. Every Christian requires repose and recruiting. No healthy believer can afford to live in a perpetual whirl. Daniel needed to have an "Olivet" in his chamber amid the roar and revelry of Babylon; and William Wilberforce, the busiest philanthropist of his age, tells us that he was forced often to withdraw from the distracting bustle in order to keep body, mind, and soul in a wholesome condition. In large towns the temptations to incessant motion are very great; the opportunities for thinking, praying, and resting are proportionately few. A beloved and honoured friend, whose name is as widely known as his beneficence, secured his feeding-time and filling-time by giving a good hour to private devotions every morning. The result was that he kept his balance, and never degenerated into a noisy enthusiast, or fell off into a disheartened pessimist. At seventy-five he possessed the alert and ardent hopefulness of a boy: as the admirable new revision of Psalm xciii. has it: he "brought forth fruit in old age; he was full of sap and green." He is the highest style of Christian who is perpetually flowing out, because he is perpetually filling up, who keeps his balance between external activities and internal intercourse with his Master.—Dr. T. Cuyler.

GLASGOW LASSES AFLOAT.

ON Saturday, June 13, the Allan Liner Siberian cast off her moorings at Mavisbank Quay and dropped down the river Clyde, outward bound for Quebec, carrying among her passengers 145 girls from the Bridge of Weir Homes for Orphans and Destitute Children. Mr. and Mrs. Quarrier accompany the present band of young emigrants, and there are none who will not wish them a happy and prosperous voyage and safe return home. Before the children went on board the ship a farewell meeting with them was held in the Christian Institute, Bothwell-street. Mr. Quarrier described, how, despite the hard times through which Glasgow and the country were passing, the money to help the children had come in more abundantly this year than in any previous year, so that, instead of sending away 300 children to Canada, well on to 400 had already been sent. Another 100 remained in the Homes, so that in the past year of starvation there was an increase of 200 in the number of children rescued from poverty and the streets. The cost of preparing, fully equipping, and sending out the 345 children to Canada was just £3500, or £20 a head. Of that amount £10 went to feed, educate, and clothe the waifs, and £10 to fit them out for emigration. In regard to the work in Canada, he had a letter from Miss Bilbrough, and one also from his daughter, with the pleasing news that 40 of the last band of 100 boys sent out had already found homes, and that Miss Bilbrough had double the applications she could grant for the children now going out. It was explained by Mr. Quarrier that, of the 145 girls, 27 were going to join as many brothers, and about 30 others were going to be near brothers already there.

Each of the 145 girls was equipped with a good-sized painted wooden chest, which contained, among other things, four complete suits of clothing (besides the one she wore), a hat, aprons, gloves, boots and stockings, cuffs and collars, a writing case with paper, pens, and ink; brush and comb, needles and a good stock of thread, a Band of Hope pledge-card, copies of Moody and Sankey's, and the Foundry Boys' hymns, the Pilgrim's Progress and the Bible, and lots of warm underclothing. Loving hands made the dresses, and motherly hearts suggested that the girls, being Scotch lassies, would not be spoiled if their best "claes," and particularly their Sunday dress, were trimmed like other folks with lace or other innocent trumpery at the neck and cuffs. An interesting sight certainly it was to see the large numbers of young things—all healthy-looking children, comfortably attired like the offspring of parents in fairly good world circumstances—walking on board the ship that was to take them from a country where only poverty or crime, or both, would have dogged their footsteps, to a land where they will be received into comfortable homes, and in due time get married respectably like many other poor Scotch maidens to whom Mr. Quarrier has given this fair start in life.

The departure was witnessed by hundreds of people, mostly composed of the working and poorer class. It could not be called a jubilant or joyful crowd. Many, whom curiosity alone attracted to the spot, looked on sadly. Others, men and women stricken with poverty, stared helplessly with tear-dimmed, bloodshot eyes on the scene—no doubt relatives of the children in some degree. The girls, whose ages might range anywhere between four and fifteen years, crowded against the ship's bulwark amidships and eagerly scanned the faces of the people on the quay. "Stand bye there forward!" "All clear behind?" boatswain's whistle; then "Clear away," were the orders from the captain on the bridge, and the ship moved slowly off, such cries coming from the crowd of children on the deck as "Good-bye, aunty," "Father, good-bye."—Glasgow Daily Mail.

SUNDAY CLOSING.—Temperance men and lovers of the Lord's Day, says The Sunday Closing Reporter, should make themselves felt in the coming election. If they are true to themselves, no political party can afford to ignore them. If they act together, no candidate can afford to despise them. If they make up their mind to work and vote for a candidate who satisfies them, they will likely decide the contest. Having this power and the approaching opportunity, let them "stand fast in the faith, quit themselves like men, and be strong." The Sunday Closing flag gathers round it in these lands an innumerable and ever-increasing host. Why should it not be waving soon, in peaceful triumph over the sacred citadel which has too long been in the hands of those who neither fear God, nor regard their fellow men?

DEACON ABRAHAM.

MOST of your readers are to some extent familiar with the name of our Nestorian brother, Deacon Abraham, and his labours in the Gospel and among the young in the far-off land of Persia. His first visit to England in 1878 will be remembered by many. The grievous famine that followed his return to his native land in 1880, and the sad story of suffering and death that resulted, form a record not easily forgotten. The hardly less devastating attack of the Koord swept over the already sorely visited district, leaving many homes and hearths desolate, and thousands of children orphans and helpless.

Through the liberality of Christians in England the Deacon on returning home established an Orphanage, where he has been enabled to provide for about 100 boys, of whom forty still remain with him. Two English ladies opened an Orphanage for girls in the same district, but, having to return to England in the summer of last year, their work was transferred to the Deacon, who has now twenty of these girls under his care, which, together with the forty boys, make sixty orphans to be provided for and trained for a useful life.

Many of the Deacon's old friends and supporters in England having been removed, the Lord's work in his hand has been to some extent suffering, and the burden has been increasing year by year. His present needs are £1000 toward the purchase of land upon which to employ the labour of the boys, and render the institution to some extent self-supporting. His labours in lecturing and holding meetings during his present visit have produced sufficient means to carry on the work of the institution during his absence, which, had he not come to England, must have been given up. He has also been enabled to purchase six acres of valuable land for the benefit of the Orphanage. He desires to build a home for the girls, the work amongst them being at present carried on in a hired house. It has been the writer's privilege to read interesting and descriptive letters from two Christians in Oroomiah, showing the indirect influence the children of the Orphanage are exercising on the minds of the surrounding population. A letter from the village pastor also speaks of the wrestling in prayer on the part of these dear children, that the Deacon may be abundantly blessed in his labours on their behalf.

It will interest the friends of the work to know that the Deacon's son Simon who accompanies his father, has made rapid progress in acquiring the English language, which he reads and writes with considerable accuracy. He materially assists his father in the conduct of, and in speaking at, the different meetings. He is now studying the art of photography, with the view of applying it in the educational part of their work at the Orphanage.

It is to be hoped that many of the Lord's stewards will help this servant of God that he may return to his people and his loved labours with a glad heart. Deacon Abraham's address is 36, Gloucester-street, Queen-square, W.C. W.

THE SAMARITAN SOCIETY'S SEASIDE HOME.

THIS institution, in the quaint and pleasant old town of Sandgate, is a model institution of its kind. Very few well-to-do people who go to the seaside have the privilege of living in such a house as this. Fifty persons can be accommodated in it, and there ought never to be less, either summer or winter. The fare provided for the inmates is excellent and abundant; there are no harsh rules, but plenty of pleasant and pictorial literature is provided for them, as well as telescopes and other forms of pleasant pastime. Praise of the most unqualified character has been bestowed upon this convalescent home by those prominently connected with charitable work, and their eulogiums are well deserved.

Mr. J. J. Jones and his co-workers have certainly shown themselves to be wise men in procuring such a delightsome spot, and they deserve the support of all friends of such institutions. Most of the patients pay five shillings a week, though they are admitted for twelve shillings a week without a subscriber's letter. In specially needy cases they are even taken free. Full particulars as to the Home will be forwarded by the secretary, Mr. H. H. Board, 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill, London, E.C. I strongly recommend all rich persons who are charitably disposed to see this Home; having seen it they will subscribe to it. As for poor people, who need change and fresh air to restore them after an illness, let them induce their well-to-do friends to send them there. G. B.

"NO MORE SEA."

MIGHTY, beauteous, restless ocean,
Stretching far from strand to strand,
Oh! to think our Father holds thee,
In the hollow of his hand.

How I love to note thy changes,
As I watch thee day by day,
When thy soft and rippling wavelets,
Seem like children at their play;

At the chill and evening hour,
When shine forth the moonbeams pale,
And the cry of wandering sea-bird,
Sounds like some sad spirit's wail;

When the howling winds distress thee,
As they beat upon thy breast,
And thy dashing waves remind us,
Of the human soul's unrest—

Ever longing, thirsting, yearning,
Never fully satisfied;
So impatient for the blessings
That are yet by God denied.

But a glorious time is coming,
When our hearts will restful be,
In our Father's love and mercy;
Then there shall be "no more sea."

RATCLIFF "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

FOR some months past we have been laying aside a store of hats and outer garments which have been sent to us, in order to be able to take our "mothers" and poor little waifs for a day's outing in the country, but lately I have been afraid that, unless some kind friends will send us money specially for that purpose, we must forego our usual excursion.

There are so many things to plead for, and all the winter the stern, hard, grinding poverty which has stared us in the face has left no room for any thought but how to supply immediate needs, and at the present time scarcely anything is left.

Now the summer is here and the bright weather come, we would like to take our poor friends for a long draught of pure air, and for one sight of the sky as God made it. I think we have got to the lowest strata, and that nowhere more ragged or desolate children could exist than those whom we call ours, nor any mothers much more hopeless or careworn than those who so regularly come to our meetings; perhaps it may be in a great measure for the cheerful welcome, and warm room, and sometimes a cup of tea; but still they come. I do not plead for them all, because of their deserts; I fear the character of very few would bear close investigation, but they are miserably poor and hopeless. We cannot tell, we do not know, into what dire temptations they are thrown, nor what a terrible struggle life has been to them from the beginning. But even from among these poor mothers, there are some, at least, who have found peace for their troubled hearts in our Saviour's love, and who show that they partake of his Spirit by their efforts to help one another, be it ever so little.

I am quite sure it would have often cheered the hearts of our kind subscribers during the winter, when from times being so bad, and perhaps from other causes, our funds were unusually low, I had to take our girls into confidence, and ask them to help by saving in every possible way, in order that we may be able to give away food to those who had none. Cheaper dinners were many times substituted that those, as hungry as they had once been, might have a meal. Mary H. Steer.

SUMMER TREATS.—Our Coffee Palace and Hall, situated at the Norwood Junction Station (L.B. & S.C.R.), are most convenient for these summer outings. We are only two miles from Shirley Common, and a tram runs half way there. Our hall easily seats 150 for tea, while a meeting can always be arranged afterwards, making a good ending to the day's excursion. We had several parties down last summer, all of whom thoroughly enjoyed themselves. For further particulars apply to The Manager, Crown Coffee Palace, Norwood Junction, S.E.—Yours faithfully,

THE SALVATION ARMY.

TUESDAY, last week, being the thirtieth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Booth, was made the occasion of a Salvation Army festival at the Great Western Hall. Holiness meetings were held morning and afternoon; in the evening an immense and enthusiastic concourse listened to some interesting reminiscences, by the General, of his early experiences.

Thoroughly converted to God at fifteen, he gave himself up, he said, to aggressive Gospel work, very much on the same lines as those now pursued in the Army. When thoughts of marriage came, he resolved that his partner in life should be a decided Christian, a total abstainer, and a sympathetic companion in his life-work. Mr. Booth went on to tell how these qualifications, and many more, he found in Mrs. Booth. Amid the approving cheers of the great audience, he sounded forth her praises and acknowledged the unspeakable blessing she had been to him, especially in times of trial and perplexity, when her courage and faith had nerved him to go forward into fresh and untried fields of effort. Mr. Booth also referred to the part his wife had taken in the thorough and Christian training of their family; the result was now seen in the fact that all of them are taking an active and prominent part in the work of the Salvation Army.

Mrs. Booth, in a most earnest and feeling address, told how the motto of their wedded life had been "Seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness." She urged that if other Christian parents were to train their children on the same principles, they would have a like reward in seeing them used in the service of God. Mr. Bramwell, Mr. Herbert, Miss Eva, and Miss Catherine Booth each struck their note in the family chorus of thanksgiving to God, and affectionate regard for their worthy parents.

The General, while he somewhat facetiously reiterated the remark that he was not to do any begging that night, yet managed to make an effective plea for help in prosecuting the Army work. In this he was ably seconded by Miss Booth, who said that if she could have had the opportunity, she would have gone round to all her father's rich friends and collected a handsome wedding gift. Various sums were announced, and the General said that whatever was given to him was of course devoted to the Army. In the course of the evening Mr. Bramwell Booth's second child, a daughter, was publicly dedicated to God and Salvation Army service.

MR. PAYSON HAMMOND IN SHEFFIELD.

THIS evangelist has completed his third week of work in Sheffield. Each district of the town is being visited, and meetings for young people are being held night by night. Those interested in the spiritual welfare of young people, and who throw themselves heartily into the work of the after-meeting, find many instances of genuine conversion.

One very manifest result of the meetings is to exercise the minds of teachers and parents with the general question of the conversion of the young, and the urgent necessity for more direct personal dealing with them. J. C.

VILLAGE EVANGELISATION.—Mr. Gawin Kirkham begs the prayers of our readers on behalf of the villages of our land, and especially for the labours of William E. Bailey, who commenced a ten days' mission on July 19, in Sawbridgeworth, Herts, and neighbourhood. Christian men and women, out for their holidays, might have the most delightful meetings in the rural parts of the country, so often overlooked in favour of cities and towns. Our Lord went through the cities and villages, teaching. Let his people follow his example.

MR. SPURGEON'S ORPHANS.

THE gala day, in connection with the Stockwell Orphanage, that serves the double purpose of an anniversary for the institution and a birthday festival for the much-esteemed founder, was held in the grounds last Thursday. The weather being favourable, many thousands of sympathising friends were present, afternoon and evening, and the proceedings were marked by all the usual heartiness and eclat.

In the afternoon a procession was formed of the children, who, headed by Dr. Barnardo's band, marched past the platform and round the grounds. Afterwards Mr. Spurgeon laid the memorial stone of a laundry, with bedrooms over, which it has been deemed desirable should be erected. He stated that £2500 was wanted for this and other new buildings, but they were going on with them with the sure conviction that the money would be forthcoming. The motto on the stone was "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us," and he was sure they would say that, if they looked round and saw what the Lord had done. When this structure is erected, the parallelogram of buildings comprising the institution will then be complete. Afterwards, addressing the people from the platform in the grounds, Mr. Spurgeon said they must understand that this was all for the glory of God. Had they ever seen a Voltaire Orphanage or a Tom Paine Hospital? Infidelity produced no such institutions. It was indeed a great thing to have a number of children under holy influence. The children were very happy there. He dropped in now and then to have a look at them, and he never found them doing "a little comfortable groaning." As the number of children increased, the quantity of bread and butter and beef must be increased in proportion, and he told his hearers that they would have to give.

In the evening another meeting was held, over which the Earl of Aberdeen, who was accompanied by the Countess, presided. In his opening address the Chairman said, the keynote of the report of the managers was thankfulness and hopeful expectation, and its brightness and buoyancy were only a reflection of what appeared to prevail throughout the establishment.

Mr. Spurgeon said one of his friends sent him every year as many sovereigns for the Orphanage as he was years old, but he said he was now getting to be a dear minister, for when he began he only sent him thirty, but now he had to send him fifty-one. During the last few days he had received many presents for the Orphanage. Some were from Scotland; others were from Constantinople, British Guiana, and New Zealand. One friend wrote that he hoped he should have that day a host of prayers and payers. He did not believe in that man's prayers who was not willing to help. They needed help. At the close of the year they had a balance of £1472, which would soon be gone. He had never any anxiety about the money, he had seen the great arm of God so conspicuous. He must confess he should like to have the money come in as it was needed, but if it did not come in day by day it would be sure to come.

The meeting was also addressed by Revs. James Spurgeon, J. E. C. Welldon (head master of Harrow School), C. Spurgeon, D. Davies (of Regent's Park Chapel), Mr. Shaw (late missionary at Madagascar), Archibald Brown, Mr. W. Noble (of the Blue Ribbon Army), and Mr. Willis, Q.C. Mr. Spurgeon moved and Dr. Barnardo seconded a vote of thanks to the Earl of Aberdeen for presiding, which was carried with cheers. Afterwards there were choir singing, handbell ringing, another procession of the children, and an illumination of the grounds.

According to the annual report, which has just been issued, it appears that the total number of children received into the Orphanage since its commencement is 1012, of whom 562 have left. There are now 450 in residence—243 boys and 207 girls; the parents of 392 of the children are members of the Church of England, 240 are Baptists, 112 Congregationalists, and 95 Wesleyans, the remainder belonging to other bodies. The report further states that the question of the denominational connection of the parents has no influence with the committee in considering an application, and that they are more concerned that the children should become disciples of Christ than the devotees of any sect. The children, as they marched around the square, were a very pleasant sight, and no other argument was needed to show the great and good work that is being carried out, in caring for the fatherless children, and preparing them for the business of life.

Letters to the Editor.

FAITH HEALING.

Dear Sir,—Could any of your correspondents, who may happen to believe in Faith Healing, kindly explain what seems to them the meaning of Matt. ix. 12?—Yours truly, L. B.

Manchester.

Dear Sir,—I trust I shall not be trespassing too far upon your courtesy if I ask permission to say through your columns, with reference to your very moderate strictures, in your issue of June 18, upon my paper on "The Principles of Faith Healing," that I do hold and teach most emphatically, in its proper place, the blessed hope of our future and complete redemption and glorious resurrection at our Lord's Second Coming. But the very passages which you quote respecting that final and complete redemption of the body distinctly state that "the earnest" of it is given to us now, through the indwelling presence and work of the Holy Ghost.

Now, everyone knows that the word "earnest" literally means a handful of the very soil which has been purchased, given as a pledge of all the rest coming into our possession in due time. In this sense then the Holy Spirit brings into our bodies now a part of the very life of the resurrection as a pledge that we shall then possess the whole. It is the very same life, only less in measure and degree. It must be physical life or it could not be an earnest of our physical redemption. Now this is exactly what we claim in healing through faith. It is the resurrection life of Christ imparted to our mortal body now in sufficient measure for its present needs, even as that resurrection life shall then be imparted without measure to our immortal body.

And this is just what the Apostle teaches in 2 Corinthians 8, where, after speaking fully of this very hope of glorious physical immortality, he adds, "Now, He that hath wrought us for this self-same thing is God, who also hath given to us the earnest of the Spirit." Earnest of what? Why, of course, of our physical resurrection. But how? How else but by imparting to us physical life now. And this is exactly what the Apostle teaches in the passage you quote from Rom. viii. 11: "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." This passage cannot, as John Calvin so conclusively shows, have reference to the future resurrection, which the Apostle so fully takes up at a later period in the chapter in most logical order. He is here, and up to 17th verse, describing the present blessings of "the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." And, after showing his quickening and cleansing power in the soul, He here unfolds his physical working, for our body is the temple of the Holy Spirit, and there is a physical as well as a spiritual receiving of Him. This work is to "quicken." This word, used in Rom. iv. of Abraham's body being quickened, does not refer so much to the raising of the dead as the quickening of that which has lost its vital energy, such as a diseased or enfeebled organ. Again, it is the "mortal body" that is quickened—our present body, not the immortal, or resurrection body. Yet, again, it is the "Spirit which dwelleth in you," but that must refer to the present, for the Spirit will not then be dwelling in the bodies of the saints. It is an indwelling Spirit. And yet, again, the resurrection of the dead will surely be by the Son. "They that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and shall come forth." Surely there is nothing arbitrary or strained in applying these precious words to the exhilaration, quickening, healing, and life, which they who trustfully receive, now sweetly experience from the blessed Holy Ghost. This then is "the earnest," and this is what we humbly claim and so abundantly receive, even in the present life, from the risen Lord. And then, the full redemption, when mortality shall be not only "quickened," but "swallowed up of life."

I do not deny the still greater work of the Divine Spirit upon the soul, nor should any physical blessing ever receive, a disproportionate place in the symmetrical fulness of the glorious Gospel. As a Christian pastor, God has never allowed me to stand before his Church and the world to be the special advocate of mere physical healing. What we do plead for is a full Gospel, without mutilation, disproportion, defect, or extravagance.

Pardon this claim upon your space; but, as this subject is now before the public mind, and as you have already kindly given place to my words upon it, I desired, before leaving England, that these words should go forth to the Christian public without misunderstanding or possible misconstruction. —Yours most truly in Him, A. B. Simpson.

Sir,—If these were practical truths in Mr. Simpson's paper, it must follow that unbelievers should be unhealthy, and a certain notorious atheist, instead of having almost herculean strength, should be paralysed; and if, as Mr. Simpson says, "There is a constant parallel between the state of the soul and body," how comes it that some of the men most honoured of God, men rich in faith, have been greatly afflicted?

Then, with regard to the cures wrought through Mr. Boardman and his confères, they seem to be exactly like those now being wrought by the mental healers in Boston, U.S.A., an account of which you gave us in your previous issue, like those also which you point out as having occurred in connection with the late Edward Irving, and, may I not add, like those wrought at Lourdes, and also by magicians in every age? In examining these matters, should it not be borne in mind that faith on a purely natural principle will work wonders. Fear will also. In great scares in a marvellous way the lame have been cured of their lameness, and invalids have risen up from beds of sickness with great energy. "We are fearfully and wonderfully made."

I do not quite understand what Dr. McKilliam means by calling faith healing a "perfect gift." How can that be called a perfect gift which does imperfect works, and only in special cases can do anything at all? Will the Doctor kindly explain his meaning?

But I have one very serious object in writing, and that is to point out the harm that is being done to not a few by this movement. To Christians, who adopt the theory of faith healing, and yet are not healed when sick, it must be a crushing disappointment, and by and by a terrible re-action of unbelief may set in. To tell them "that it is entirely owing to their lack of faith that their sickness is not healed, and that sin must be working with them," has, I know, been to some of them a new and most acute spiritual torture. With these facts palpably before us, viz., that some great unbelievers are very healthy, and some most saintly believers are heavily afflicted in body, I ask "Can such teaching be true?" And, if it be not true, it is cruel, and adds immensely to the crushing load which has to be borne by those to whom I refer.

Looking at the new teaching which professes to be a finer form of Christianity, I for one feel "the old is better," truer to facts, and truer to the inspired teaching of God's Holy Word.

Discipulus.

My Dear Sir,—I have just been reading the editorials contained in your issue of May 21, and have been particularly struck by those having reference to a Mr. Carty, an American, now in London. He is well known here, especially in the Fulton-street prayer meeting, which it is often my privilege and pleasure to attend, and it is to be regretted that he should have gone to such painful extremes in doctrine and teaching.

I have long desired that some of our leading men in the Christian Church would take up and throughly investigate and ventilate this whole subject of healing by faith, especially since some have gone so far as to teach that it is sinful and dishonouring to God to use means for the relief of pain and the cure of disease.

However, my heart was so stirred within me recently that I could not withhold my testimony upon the subject, and was led to write an article to the *New York Witness. The young man whose death I refer to in the article was one whom Mr. Carty had led three months before to embrace this doctrine of "trusting God for a glorified body," so that he should not see death, but be translated as Elijah was.

It seems to me that there is not only danger of presumption in disregarding the use of what are evidently God-given means, but, also, in the direction of our being lifted up, perhaps unconsciously, and hence the greater danger, and desiring for ourselves great things in the same line as the two brethren who were not content with an equal position with their fellow-disciples, but who desired the pre-eminence of being one on either side of the Master. As far as my experience has gone during the past twenty-one years of Christian life, I have generally noticed that intelligent Scriptural faith has been linked with deep humility. "Walk humbly with thy God" is a good text to keep in mind; each word seems to have its special place and particular value.

Let me express my indebtednes to The Christian for much cheer and instruction, and permit me to state my gratitude to the kind, unknown friend, who has sent me your valuable paper for the past ten years, following me from Portsmouth to Liverpool, thence to Philadelphia, and now here in New York. Our medical mission work is going along very encouragingly. Let me crave an interest in your prayers that we may be guided and blessed in our efforts.—Yours in the Master's service,

(Dr.) Geo. D. Dowkontt.

118, East 45th-street, New York City, U.S.

P.S.—When about to mail this to you, I received two pieces of intelligence from Africa—one dated St. Paul de Loanda, April 14, from our first student, Dr. W. R. Summers, now with Bishop Taylor, who writes that the party were in tolerably good health now, but that some of them had been sick from fever, and among them those who refused to use medicine as being dishonouring to God. However, after some days of suffering, they were led to accept of medical aid and recovered again. Dr. Summers had been exploring some 500 miles inland—was gone a month, and only spent 18 cents during that time. So much for self-supporting Missions in Africa.

The second piece of information was that of the death of our young brother, John A. Condit, who went out in charge of a party which left about three months before Bishop Taylor's. Mr. Condit was led to the Lord at the late Jerry McAuley's Cremorne Mission in this city. He then joined Rev. A. B. Simpson's Church, and went out from that place with the determination, as I understood, not to take or use medicines, but to trust in God alone. Surely it is high time to awake out of sleep about this matter, and to search the Scriptures to see if these things are so.

In spite of all precaution and medical aid, we know that many of our best sons have perished on the "Dark Continent," even as Livingstone, and later Drs. Southan and Comber, but surely there is the more need to do all that in us lies to lessen the danger by using all precautionary, as well as curative means in our power. G. W. D.

EVANGELICAL CLERGY AT IPSWICH.

A LARGE gathering of evangelical clergy attended this long-established annual meeting. Last year Norwich was the rendezvous. This year the meeting was held on June 10 and 11, in the fine Town Hall, at Ipswich. From 100 to 130 clergy took part in the conference.

The subjects were of special importance and interest. On Wednesday, after an exposition of 1 Peter iv. 12—14, by Rev. C. F. Childe, Canon Bell, Cheltenham, and Rev. S. Hawkins, Tattingstone, read papers on "What is the distinction in the present day between the Church and the World?" Discussion followed, and it seemed agreed that ministerial influence depends on the "transformed mind," which, while in the world, is not of it.

On Thursday morning papers on "Faith Healing" were read by Rev. R. C. Billing, Spitalfields, and Rev. D. B. Hankin. In the discussion, though interesting, much was said about the "prayer of faith," but the subject of the papers was, probably from its comparative novelty, too little dealt with. In the afternoon a remarkable paper on "Christian sanctification and perfection," was read by Rev. Herbert Jones, Livermore. Mr. Ripley added some beautiful thoughts on the same subjects. All who spoke seemed led by the Spirit, and a very profitable conference ended in a spirit of praise and consecration.

DRESSMAKERS.—In an article in The Pall Mall Gazette on "Dressmaking as a Profession," the writer says:—One difficulty against which all alike have to fight is the dimensions and ventilation of the workroom. The sanitary inspector seldom if ever enters the close apartment where a number of women sit together for ten hours a day, working in an unhealthy atmosphere, and often with the most inadequate light. This is the chief complaint of dressmakers, and if this difficulty could be removed, the ill health so often met with among this class of working women would speedily decrease. Another great boon which might be conferred on dressmakers would be to make some charitable provision for their amusement and instruction during the evening hours. The Young Women's Christian Association has been doing excellent work in this direction, as in many others, but there is room for other institutions of the same kind.

Accounts are given of the opening of mission-rooms, Bible-classes, and schools on works where previously there was no attraction for the men, but the public-house. Letters from navvies testifying to good received, are given. We heartily recommend the book to all who may covet the privilege of helping to carry on an excellent work among a class of men too often neglected.

A Glimpse Behind the Curtain; or, Harem Life in Egypt. By Miss M. E. Whately. Seeley & Co. A most interesting and instructive book. It gives a description, taken mostly from real facts, of life in an harem. The reader will be moved to pity at the lot of the majority of Egyptian women, and will perceive the difficulties of spreading the Gospel among them. Miss Whately vividly portrays the dangers that attend a Moslem on his profession of Christianity. Private poisoning is even resorted to, and the only path of safety is that found in flight. A perusal of this book would prove a stimulus to all interested in the dissemination of the Gospel in Egypt.

The Parson's Round of Parish Duty. By Rev. W. Holt Beever, M.A. Elliot Stock. Though specially applicable to parochial clergymen, no minister of Christ can fail to learn much from this book. The author has before his mind Apostolic models and injunctions, while his experience of ministerial duties and dangers is deep and varied. To general readers we commend the chapters on "Visiting," "Study," "the Sermon," "General Hints," and "The School." To clergy those on "The Parson," "Services," "The Two Sacraments," and "Fasting," will be of real assistance. Mr. Beever has the rare art of giving minute instructions without wearying or perplexing.

Two neat books in the old-fashioned style, with broad margins and leaves uncut, sent out by Mr. Elliot Stock, may be warmly commended. Notes for Boys, by An Old Boy (3s. 6d.), deals in a most pleasing and practical manner with various subjects bearing upon "Morals, Mind, and Manners." The advice given is on the whole unexceptionable and cannot fail to profit the youthful as well as the more matured students of them. For Good Consideration, by Edward Butler 3s. 6d.), contains nine charmingly written essays on such topics as "Advice to Young Orators," "The Christian in Contention," "Philanthropic Beggars," &c. We are not prepared to endorse all Mr. Butler's views on these and other subjects, but he is altogether a most agreeable and profitable mentor.

Our Sowing. By Forbes Moncrief. 1d. A. Stevenson, Edinburgh. An appeal to Christians to engage more extensively in the work of distribution, reprinted from The Christian.

Sight and Hearing. By R. S. Wyld, LL D, F.R.S.E. Macniven & Wallace. A lecture delivered at Bordighera, and affording curious evidence of the Divine provision for man's enjoyment in sight and hearing.

A Short Form of Prayer for Four Sundays in the Month. To be had on application to L. F. L., 4, Crown-hill, Upper Norwood, 3d. Specially adapted for those unaccustomed to extempore prayer either at sea or on land, in lightships or lighthouses.

London by Night.—Into the grim world of "London by Night," Mr. Thomas Archer has recently made a fresh tour of discovery, and has recorded his impressions in an article which is to appear in Cassell's Magazine for July, with illustrations from a well-known pencil.

Children and Our Colonies.—For the information of the rising generation some specially written papers, telling in a pleasant and chatty way the story of "England's Colonies, and How She Came by Them," are appearing in the new volume of Little Folks. The first paper deals with Australia.

The Home Sanctuary. Selected and edited by W. Garrett Horder. 6d. Elliot Stock. A collection of very beautiful hymns for those detained at home from public worship. Mr. Horder is a poet; "The Home Sanctuary" (which is a portion of a larger work) is therefore a treasury of praise in which the beautiful, the devotional, and the musical are equally blended.

The Fourfold Blessing. By Rev. W. Hockin. 2d. Partridge. Brimful of love, these words on faith and works are made doubly interesting by being in narrative form.

An Officer's Experiences of Foreign Missions. By Major Seton Churchill. 4d. Nisbet. Interesting beyond the telling. Bright pithy, and true, these wise words should be read by missionaries, their supporters, and their detractors. The statistics adduced are useful and encouraging.

A very outspoken pamphlet on The Theatre as it is, has been published by Mr. J. G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay-park, N. It is in the shape of a letter to a friend by Dr. Burns Thomson, of Stoke Newington, and contains many facts of the most painful but unimpeachable kind as to the evil influences of the theatre of to-day.

Walks in Epping Forest. A very complete and well-illustrated handbook to this ancient and famous summer resort of Londoners has been prepared by Mr. Percy Lindley, and is published at 123, Fleet-street. 6d. Cycling, walking, and driving routes are noted; intending visitors to the Forest should by all means procure a copy.

Speedwell. A Text Book for Everybody. 1s. Marcus Ward & Co. An exceptionally choice collection of Bible texts for daily use. The first copy was presented by the publishers to the Princess of Wales during the recent Royal visit to Belfast. The little book is profusely adorned with artistic reproductions of the flower which gives it a title.

Gordon: The Christian Hero. A book for the young. By Abraham Kingdon. Partridge & Co. A very well-written little book, containing the principal points of interest in the life of the hero of Khartoum. There is nothing told that is specially new, but the young people for whom the book has been written will be interested in the stories and anecdotes re-told.

The House Hunter and Apartment Seeker, of which we have received the first number (27. Paternoster-square (6d.), gives full and minute details of residences to be let or sold throughout the metropolis. Judging from portions, the accuracy of which we can vouch for, we should deem it a reliable guide, and an immense boon to all who take to the unenviable occupation of "house hunting." The introductory remarks deserve careful study.

The Church of England Book Society send us the following: The Sacraments of the Church. By Rev. H. Elliott Fox. 6d. Thoroughly sound in all points, this pamphlet, with its clear enunciation of the true meaning of the sacraments, and especially that of baptism, is likely to do much good.—The Revival of Necromancy. 4d. In these "few words upon Spiritualism" Rev. Horace Noel affirms that true Spiritualists repudiate all connection with Christianity. An outspoken little tract.—The Efficacy of Prayer in Connection with True and Fictitious Science. 4d. By late Rev. T. R. Birks. A spiritual and logical paper on the validity of prayer. The bold heresies of "science falsely so-called" are met by the demonstration of four important truths. This is a valuable contribution to the literature of truth.—The Doctrine of the Atonement. 1d. By W. Sandford, B.A. Admirable in every way; a tract for the times, ably written.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Byker, Newcastle.—For four weeks tent services have been held in this suburb, organised by a working man named James Steward. They have been attended by hundreds of people. Numbers have signed the pledge, and many have heard the Gospel who never attend any place of worship.

Richard Weaver in Belfast.—This evangelist is addressing crowded gatherings in the Circus, Belfast. At each meeting there are many inquirers after salvation. Though not at all strong in body he is vigorous in mind, and the Word is with much power. He has been cheered by the testimony of many who state they were brought to a saving knowledge of the truth through previous visits. He continues to labour in Belfast till July 6.

Rev. W. Haslam.—Mission services have been held by Rev. W. Haslam at St. Peter's Church, Congleton, Cheshire, which have proved most successful. His practical and eloquent discourses have created a great interest in the town, and the services have been largely attended. Much good has been effected, and a widespread feeling of thankfulness is being expressed. The mission concluded on Monday last. H. H. Phelps.

St. Peter's Vicarage, Congleton.

Soughgate, N.—The first anniversary of Mr. C. Wickerson's Gospel work in this village was held on the 17th ult. A large number of friends belonging to Southgate, and also from different parts of London, sat down to tea, while the chapel was filled in the evening. Mr. C. Haywood, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, presided, and there were a goodly number of speakers. One of the pleasant features of the evening was the presentation to Mr. Wickerson, by Mr. Fremlin, the treasurer, of a handsome Bible, subscribed for by the members.

Evangelistic Mission.—Tent meetings have commenced in several places with encouraging results. From Wareham, in Dorset, the evangelist sends details of earnest work with enquirers and help to believers. The tent is now removed to Corfe Castle. About 150 assembled on Mr. Pelham Stokes' rectory lawn to witness the removal; the opportunity was taken for an open-air meeting, followed by an indoor after-meeting, where several decided for Christ. From Reading Messrs. Hurditch and Spurr report good meetings, not without visible blessing to souls. The tent was at first some distance outside the town, but ten of the workers arose one morning at 2.30, re-erected it in the cattle-market by 5.30, where it is hoped to gather in increased numbers of the careless.

CHRISTIAN COMMERCIALS.

THE members and friends of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association went to Broxbourne for their twelfth annual excursion last Saturday. A happy day's outing was well begun by a short devotional meeting, at which the Hon. Sec., Mr. Henry Holme, presided. Mr. G. Clement Davies, Mr. G. H. Haines, and other friends took part.

After a season of recreation a business meeting was held. The Hon. Secretary read a brief report, in which it was stated that the half-year's receipts amounted to £566 10s. 5d. The balance in hand was £92 13s. 8d., and the only liabilities were those for the current month, and which amounted to about £30. Ten hotels had been supplied with Bibles for the bedrooms and new libraries had been set up in five, whilst one library had been renewed. Fourteen cases had been helped by the Beneficient Fund, which was established to assist Commercial Travellers or their families in sudden distress.

A beautiful copy of the Revised Bible, and a richly-bound volume of Sacred Songs and Solos, were presented to Mr. Henry Holme, the hon. sec., and Mr. P. J. Whitaker, the treasurer, also received a fine edition of the new Bible. This presentation was intended as a token of the love and esteem in which these two officers are held for their long service, and for the efforts they have put forth on behalf of the Association.

The Secretary, Mr. J. W. Thatcher, imparted the pleasing intelligence that he had, during the past fortnight, collected £259 11s., from various City gentlemen for the extension of the work of the Association.

In the absence of the esteemed Ex-President, Mr. Henry Lea, of Reading, through family affliction, the chair was occupied by Mr. W. Hull-King, one of the first supporters of the Association. A telegram of sympathy was sent from the meeting to Mr. Lea.

In spite of the occasional showers that fell during the day everyone enjoyed the outing greatly; the beautiful gardens attached to the Crown Hotel were much admired. As the party moved for home in the evening, general expression was given to the feeling that Broxbourne should be again visited on some future occasion.

FRENCH PROTESTANT CHURCH, BAYSWATER.

THE twenty-third anniversary was held on Monday week by a conversazione in Westbourne Hall. After refreshments the Chair was taken by Mr. George Williams. Rev. Dr. Pontet de La Harpe read the annual report, a most interesting document. The work undertaken by the mission embraces a church, Sunday-school, day schools, medical mission, home for foreign governesses, society for befriending servant girls, scholastic agency and registry offices, young men's club, evangelistic services, visiting, &c. Several letters were read which showed, not only the character of the work, but how varied are its opportunities of doing good. It is proposed, next October on the anniversary of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, to commemorate that sad event by raising a fund to build a new church. £6000 will be the amount required. Mr. Williams, Rev. Canon Fleming, Rev. Dr. Borrett White, Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Rev. Dr. Thornton, all spoke in turns of their appreciation of this evangelical work, to which they wished continued prosperity.

SUNDAY REST IN AUSTRIA.—The Vienna correspondent of The Daily Telegraph wrote to that journal in a despatch dated Monday week:—The Viennese have had to miss their accustomed morning paper to-day. Not a single journal appeared this morning. This will henceforward be the case every Monday. A new law decrees that on Sunday all trade labour should rest. Not as a Church celebration of Sunday, but as a day of recreation for the workman, has the legal Sunday rest been decreed. Its duration is fixed from six a.m. on Sunday till six a.m. on Monday. The law has been well received in the industrial and working circles. The public has not taken umbrage to-day at the non-appearance of the morning papers; but in stirring times, when important events occupy the attention in a higher degree, the newspapers will have to think of some plan to satisfy the curiosity and interest of the public on Mondays.

WEST INDIAN MISSIONS.

A MEETING was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Quintin Hogg, in Chandos-street, Cavendish-square, last Thursday afternoon, in aid of Christian Missions to the Heathen Races in British Guiana and the West Indies. The attendance was not large, but the interest manifested was considerable. Mr. David Howard presided, and strongly urged the claims of the Mission on the ground of England's indebtedness to the poor toilers who are brought from India to labour on the sugar plantations, the produce of which we enjoy. It lies largely with ourselves as to what the future of these races shall be.

The meeting was then addressed by Rev. J. Keelan, Colonial missionary to the Aborigines, who gave information as to the need of these efforts. He had laboured for seven years among a population composed of negroes from India and Barbadoes. He considered British Guina to be, perhaps, the most important mission field next to China and India. The large number of emigrants serve also to provide a field of labour, which is scarcely equalled in any other part of the world.

Rev. D. Brodie, of the Bible Society, said he recently spent four months in travelling through some parts of the West Indies, and could therefore speak from personal knowledge. The existing Church in those parts was most active, but more labourers and money are needed for the evangelisation of the one hundred thousand heathen whom at present the Churches are unable to reach. In St. Vincent, Granada, and other islands there is not a single Christian teacher. £50 would furnish one at either place. So far as missions existed, they had been very successful, affecting, manifestly, the social as well as the spiritual life of the converts.

The Bishop of Antigua said missions to the heathen outside are the great need, especially in Trinidad and British Guiana. In George Town a good work is being done among the Chinese settlers. Rev. G. M. Clinckett, who has a charge among the natives and settlers, said his mission had been under God a great success, and, though somewhat feeble, was growing. He regarded the black man when truly converted as furnishing as good a specimen of a Christian as was anywhere to be found. Canon Castell said he had a large church in George Town, but had also visited many of the mission stations, and was able to bear testimony to the value of the work done. He also testified to the munificence of their worthy host, Mr. Hogg, to whose generous aid the maintainance of the work in British Guiana was mainly indebted.

OBITUARY.

MR. JAMES BENHAM.

THE sudden death is recorded of Mr. James Benham, of the firm of Benham and Sons, Wigmore-street. Like his brother, the late Mr. Augustus Benham, the deceased had for many years taken great interest in the various agencies connected with the Baptist denomination, rendering to them both personal effort and generous pecuniary aid. Throughout the ministry of the late Rev. Dr. Brock at Bloomsbury Chapel, Mr. Benham proved himself a warm friend and zealous worker; and the present pastor, the Rev. J. P. Chown, has also had from him hearty co-operation. For some years past he has filled most efficiently the office of Treasurer of the Baptist Building Fund, and has rendered good service on the Committee of the Baptist Missionary Society.

CANON WILBERFORCE is improving in health. Sir Joseph Lister and Mr. Butt, who visited him on Saturday at Richmond, report decided progress.

WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.—An extension of "Woodford House," in Duncan Terrace, Islington, was formally opened on Friday afternoon last. Provision is now made for sixty-two young women who can be boarded and lodged for 7s. to 8s. 6d. per week. This extension has cost for the alterations, furnishing, &c., about £1400. £1100 of this has been provided, which sum includes the following donations:—Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., £250; Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, £100; and Mr. James Spicer, J.P., £100. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Samuel Morley, and a statement concerning the Homes was made by Mr. John Shrimpton, Honorary Director. An address was given by Rev. E. A. Stuart, Holloway. During the last year 1658 young women made use of the various Homes; since they were founded, in 1878, 4411 young women have enjoyed the provision made.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

THE JORDAN.—The first bridge ever built across the Jordan was opened to the public on January 26. From remotest times it has only been crossed by means of a ford. This bridge is near the mouth of the river, where it flows into the Dead Sea.

A GOSPEL FOR THE CONGO.—To Sweden has fallen the honour of printing the first book in the language of the Congo. Its title is Nsamu Wambote a Yoane, and it is a translation of the Gospel of John. It is the work of the Swedish missionary Vestlind, who has laboured for many years in Equatorial Africa, under the Swedish Missionary Society.

AN EVANGELICAL JOURNAL IN AUSTRIA.—Pastor Kotschy, of Attersee, in Upper Austria, is known to many in this country. For some years past he has published a monthly paper, Das Evangelische Vereinsblatt, to promote the advancement of God's kingdom. It contains varied and interesting news of the churches and schools in Austria. The price for the year is 1 mark 60 pfennig, and the profits from the sale are devoted to the establishment of the Evangelical Union for the Inner Mission in Gallness-Kirchen, in Upper Austria.

PRIESTS IN FRANCE.—Mons. Eugène Réveillaud gives some very interesting details about those priests of the Romish Church in France who, having become convinced of the errors of that body, are anxious to leave it altogether, and enter life again as civilians. They desire to get free of the bondage of Rome, and to profit by that glorious liberty wherewith Christ has made them free. As tutors in liberal Catholic or Protestant families, some of these men, whose renunciation of the errors of Rome is well known to be thorough and genuine, would maintain themselves in honour and respectability. Mons. Reveillaud is extremely interested in several cases well known to him, and is about to put out an appeal to Protestants respecting them and their interests in general.—Le Chrétien Belge.

THE GOSPEL IN INDIA.—Referring to the remarkable work of grace at a recent native festival, when 248 persons were baptised, the majority of them Brahmans, The Indian Witness says:—"We cannot believe that this extraordinary movement will end with the dispersion of the people who attended the fair. A hundred thousand busy tongues will tell the story over and over again, and by this time it is known to ten millions of people in North India that Brahmans and other high caste people are accepting Christianity freely. The effect of this will be to break the spell which has so long held the masses of the people. They will see, and quickly realise, that a power greater than Brahmanism is at work in their midst, and however reluctant they may be to accept the Christian religion, they will begin to regard it with a respect, a reverence, which they have never known before."

MR. C. KING has on several occasions addressed large audiences in Cooke's Circus, Greenock. At one meeting of men some 380 signed the purity pledge.

BRIXTON.—Messrs. Mateer and Parker's twelve days' mission at Gresham Chapel, Brixton, has proved a time of great blessing to many. Over 100 of the unconverted went into the inquiry-room. The members and officers of the church also bear testimony to the good they have received.

KINGSLAND, HEREFORDSHIRE.—A week's tent mission has been conducted here by Rev. Walter H. Purchase. Notwithstanding the unfavourable weather, the people assembled in crowds to hear the Word, some of them walking many miles through the pouring rain. The Spirit's power was manifestly felt, and great blessing experienced.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—The monthly meeting of the Western Board of Directors was held in Glasgow on Monday week. Amid some anxiety in connection with the growing demands of foreign fields, the directors were cheered by receipt of two anonymous donations for £500 and £602 4s. 5d. One of the translators of the Old Testament into Japanese reported that work to be now so far advanced that its completion in the spring of next year may be anticipated. Much sympathy was expressed with Mr. Robert Burnet, one of the Society's agents in China, who was grievously ill-treated at Lu Chow Fu in April. A most interesting report was received from the Madrid pastor who was employed by the two British Bible Societies to distribute New Testaments among the sufferers from the recent earthquakes in Spain. The hearts of the people had been softened by their sufferings, and they were prepared to welcome the Book of hope and consolation.

Notes on Daily Readings.

JUNE 25.—I CORINTHIANS XV.

v. 2.—“By which also ye are saved.”—The present nse of the verb would be better rendered “ye are ing saved,” as in “The Speaker’s Commentary.” lvation is not complete till the Lord’s coming.

v. 17.—“If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; are yet in your sins.”—We can happily reverse l this, and say: “Christ has been raised; our faith not in vain, we (i.e. believers) are not in our sins.” e a parallel statement in Col. ii. 13, as to the esurrection being a proof of the believer’s forgive-ss: “hath He quickened together with Him, aving forgiven you all trespasses.”

v. 22.—“For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ all all be made alive.”—The article before each roper name suggests more than our translation nveys. Canon Evans says: “Rather ‘in the dam’ and ‘in the Christ.’” They are, as in Rom. . 14 to end, each considered as covenant heads their respective families, and the “all” in each se refers to those under their respective head. he resurrection of “the rest of the dead,” Rev. x. 5, seems not under consideration here.

v. 29.—“Else what shall they do who are bap-zed?”—Or “being baptized” present tense, de-oting a continuous administration of the rite to ew converts. What shall these new converts do, there is no resurrection? It is “for the dead” —“on behalf of,” casting in their lot, as it were, ith the dead—“if the dead are not raised at all. hy are they then baptized for them?” This simple ppeal to the meaning of baptism—death and esurrection—and the pointed question raised ereon, Why should people be baptized for the ead? (i.e., with a view to joining the dead and no ore) is the view taken by the oldest Greek expo-itors. Canon Evans justifies from the Greek this ense of the preposition “for.” The modern view hich supposes a custom of being “baptized for the ead” introduces great confusion, and makes the assage one of the most difficult in Scripture, in-tead of being what it really is, most simple. The mistake has arisen from wrong punctuation.

v. 56.—“The sting of death is sin; and the strength f sin is the law. But thanks be to God, who giveth us he victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.”—Vic-ory over a threefold enemy—death, sin, and law, must be threefold too; and such we have in Christ, “who was made unto us wisdom from God” (i. 30): “righteousness,” victory over “law;” “sanctifi-ation,” victory over “sin;” and “redemption” (of he body), victory over “death.”

JUNE 26.—I CORINTHIANS XVI.

vv. 13, 14.—“Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, uit you like men, be strong. Let all your doings be one with charity”—(“Let all that ye do be done n love,” R.V.). Canon Evans traces an interesting onnection between these clauses and certain exist-ng evils in the Church of Corinth, against which hey are aimed. “Watch ye,” or, “Be ye wake-ful,”—“against the drowsy infection of bad xample” (xv. 33). “Stand fast in the faith”— “against the clamour of no resurrection.” “Quit you like men, be strong”—against effeminacy and profligacy. “Let all that ye do be done in love,” R.V.—against factiousness and party spirit.

v. 22.—“If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema, Maran-atha.”— “Endorsement of the Epistle’s contents by the Apostle’s autograph. St. Paul now takes the place of his amanuensis, and himself sums up, like a judge, with a terrible brevity. Apostolic judgment takes the form of a solemn statement—no imprecation in it: ‘If any one does not love the Lord, let him be devoted to destruction.’ Not ‘may he be anathema,’ but ‘let him be.’ There is no help for him. Maran-atha, ‘the Lord cometh.’ Compare Rev. xxii. 10, 11: ‘The time is at hand: he that is unjust, let him be unjust still, and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still.’” “This sentence is a stern epitome of the whole Epistle: ‘If anyone by profligacy, by contentiousness, by covetousness, by idolatry, by arrogance, by heresy, evinces an utter lack of love to the Lord Jesus, he must abide the consequences of his moral status; there is no outlook in the future for such a man, but the perdition from the presence of the Lord at his coming.’”—Speaker’s Commentary.

This closing appeal to “love,” as the test of genuineness, throws back an interesting light on chap. xiii., the well-known psalm of love, and shows that the love spoken of there is no love in the abstract (much less “charity” in the popular sense), but definite love to the person of the Lord Jesus Christ, showing itself to others for his sake. “We love, because He first loved us” (1 John iv. 19, R.V.).

JUNE 27.—2 CORINTHIANS I.

v. 1.—“And Timothy our brother.”—In the first Epistle to Corinth, an approaching visit from Timothy was alluded to, and the Apostle evinces considerable anxiety as to his being well received (see iv. 17, xvi. 10, 11). It would appear that he was not well received, and so returned at once to St. Paul to report his failure, and to make known the existence of a successful rebellion at Corinth against the Apostle’s authority and message. This view, which is worked out with great ability by the Rev. Joseph Waite in the “Speaker’s Commentary,” throws much light not only on the whole tone and scope of this Second Epistle, but especially upon this opening chapter, for he supposes, and almost conclusively proves, that “our trouble which came to us in Asia” was nothing else than this overwhelming blow to the Apostle, a report of the triumph of the enemy in the rejection of his authority and influence at one of his most beloved churches. Afterwards came Titus, whom he had sent later, and his report reversed all, and showed that the Gospel had triumphed, and that the cause of Christ was saved at Corinth. This is the “comfort” which in one form or other of the word occurs ten times in five verses in this chapter (3—7), and which re-appears in vii. 4—6, directly connected with the return of Titus. This view is far more satisfactory than those which explain “the trouble in Asia” as an illness or as a tumult: though to a sensitive man, like the Apostle, such a shock might well bring on illness, and so partly account for the language of verses 8, 9.

v. 20.—“For how many soever be the promises of God, in Him, is the yea: wherefore also through Him is the Amen, unto the glory of God through us,” R.V.—He passes from the charge of fickleness, “yea and nay,” brought against him by his enemies, to the contemplation of the Gospel he had preached having had nothing fickle or uncertain in it, and the reason is that “how many soever be the promises of God,” Christ is the yea or fulfilment of all, i.e., we have their fulfilment in Him, through Him, by Him. Wherefore also through Him be (this is better than “is”) the Amen unto the glory of God by means of us. That is, let our lives be a responsive Amen to his having thus made good God’s promises.

JUNE 28.—2 CORINTHIANS II.

v. 3.—“I wrote this same unto you.”—This refers probably to a letter sent through Titus, announcing a change of plan from that intimated in his first Epistle (xvi. 5), owing to Timothy’s report of their rejection of his authority. This change of plan his enemies had attributed to fickleness. He here explains its real cause.

vv. 12, 13.—“Furthermore, when I came to Troas, &c. . . . I went from thence into Macedonia.”—He here describes the anxiety he had felt about the result of the mission of Titus, and when just about to describe the meeting with him in Macedonia on his return from Corinth, he breaks off into an enthusiastic burst of thanksgiving to God for the success of the cause of the Gospel at Corinth as elsewhere, and this leads him aside for four chapters to give one of the most interesting accounts of the nature of Gospel ministry which the Scriptures contain. This remarkable parenthesis, from ii. 14 to vii. 4, is the gem of this second Epistle. At vii. 5 he resumes the subject dropped at ii. 13, in almost the very words he had used before.

v. 14.—“Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ” (leadeth us in triumph, R.V.)—Greek scholars seem generally agreed that “causeth us to triumph” cannot be sustained, and that the meaning given in R.V. is the correct one. A Roman triumph was chiefly a display of the glory of the victor, shown forth both in his victorious army and its spoils, and in the vanquished soldiers led in triumph, many of whom were put to death on the occasion. The odour of the incense which marked the conqueror’s way had therefore a double significance. It spoke a message “from death to death” to those about to be killed, and “from life to life” to the spared ones. The course of the Gospel is compared to such a triumphal procession, including not only those who live, but also those whom the Gospel assigns to death for rejecting its command. It is in reference to his insisting upon this solemn side of his message, that the Apostle says: “We are not as the many corrupting the Word of God,” R.V., or “adulterating” it by weakening its solemn threatenings.

JUNE 29.—2 CORINTHIANS III.

v. 6.—“The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life.”—The common application of these words to Scripture shows a thorough misconception of their meaning. Paul is not speaking of Scripture, but comparing the old covenant “of letter” with the new covenant “of Spirit,” and it is in reference to the essential difference of these covenants—one of death, the other of life—that he says, “The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life.” The context which follows expands this difference, and exhibits the law as “a ministration of death” (ver. 7), “a ministration of condemnation” (ver. 9), and “that which passeth away” (R.V., ver. 11). Whereas the Gospel is “a ministration of the Spirit” (ver. 8), “a ministration of righteousness” ver. 9), and “that which remaineth.”

v. 17.—“Now the Lord is that Spirit.”—This refers back to ver. 6, “The Spirit giveth life,” all between being parenthetic. It is not so much the identity of the two divine Persons of the Trinity that is here asserted, as the fact that the Lord Jesus is the sum and substance of the new covenant.

v. 18.—“Beholding as in a glass,” or mirror, which being of polished metal would reflect back upon the face of the beholder any rays of light which might fall upon it. So Christ being the mirror in which is reflected the glory of God (see iv. 6, “The glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ”) we cannot gaze thereon without this glory being reflected back on our faces, and this is how the Spirit transforms the beholders into the image at which they are gazing.

JUNE 30.—2 CORINTHIANS IV.

v. 5.—“We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord.”—It had been well had the Church always followed this Apostolic example; but alas! the so-called “Fathers” soon left preaching Christ, and took to glorifying the Church. As we read in Rev. xviii. 7, “How much she hath glorified herself.”

v. 7.—We have this treasure in earthen vessels.” —A plain reference to Gideon and his pitchers with lights within. As the breaking of the pitchers exhibited the light within, so the trouble, perplexity, persecution, and casting down which the Apostle and his friends endured, all tended to cause the light within to shine forth. He calls this persecution and suffering “the dying” (or “mortification”) “of Jesus” bearing it about “that the life also of Jesus may be manifested in our mortal flesh.” The mortification of Jesus—that conformity to his death which He enjoins—is like the breaking of the pitcher, that the light within—the life of Jesus—may be manifested.

v. 16.—“Though our outward man perish” (is decaying, R.V.).—The contrast is not merely “our inward man is renewed,” but “is being renewed.”

v. 17.—“Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.”—The “Speaker’s Commentary” well renders the first words “The momentary lightness of our affliction,” and further on, “worketh for us in a surpassing manner to a surpassing result, an eternal weight of glory.”

JULY I.—2 CORINTHIANS V.

v. 1.—“For we know that if our tent-dwelling upon earth should be pulled down, we have an edifice from God,” &c.—This translation (“Speaker’s Commentary”) brings out more clearly than either A.V. or R.V. the contrast between the present and future body, as given in the Greek. “‘Edifice’ denotes a durable and stately building, and is applied to the splendid structures of the Temple.”

v. 3.—“If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked.”—This parenthetic clause is intended to explain the phrase in the last verse, “clothed upon” or “put on over.” It might make the meaning clearer to take it thus: “Clothed upon” (I say), “if so be that we shall be found clothed, not divested of clothing”—that is, alive, not dead—when the Lord comes.

v. 5.—“Now He that wrought us for the selfsame thing is God.”—“What God wrought him to was the inward groaning for superinvestment. . . . It was in fact part of God’s design in committing the treasure to earthen vessels, that the inadequacy of the vessels to their contents and their service should generate a strong desire for a better vehicle and organ.”—Speaker’s Commentary.

v. 14.—“If one died for all, then were all dead.” —This latter clause is misleading, and suggests to many the universal spiritual death in which man is involved by Adam’s sin. But it plainly means what the R.V. now renders, “one died for all, therefore all died;” that is, in Christ’s death considered as a substitutionary measure the “all” whom He represented died too. There is an article in the Greek before “all” which should not be omitted. The “Speaker’s Commentary” renders it, “One for all died, therefore the all (for whom the One died) died.”

Mission and other Appeals.

THE HACKNEY Y.M.C.A. make an earnest appeal for gifts of suitable books to form a reference and circulating library in connection with the branch. As they are only a young institution they are not rich enough to provide a library from the funds. The secretary, Mr F. L. PORTER, Y.M.C.A., The Grove, Mare-street, Hackney, E., will gladly receive either books or donations.

BATTERSEA.—The mission conducted by Mr. D. Cameron among working men in this large and growing neighbourhood continues to prosper. A site has been secured for a new place of worship at a cost (with a large house) of £1100. Half that amount has yet to be raised, and the help of Christian friends is earnestly solicited. Dr. DUNBAR, sen., 2, The Cedars, Clapham-common, S.W., is treasurer of the building fund.

FUNDS are greatly needed to assist in establishing a reading and coffee room on Temperance rules for the remote and very poor village of Combe, Oxfordshire, numbering 700 odd inhabitants entirely of the labouring class. The labourers beseech in the most touching words that some other place of resort may be got for them than the public-house taproom, particularly as many already are total abstainers. Will those who have a Christian's work at heart send a donation to Miss ADELA BROOKE, Combe, near Woodstock, Oxfordshire?

REV. MR. FORD, senior curate of Stepney Parish Church, has been appointed to the incumbency of Holy Trinity Church, Bristol. Mr. Ford has been a most ardent and indefatigable worker in the East End, and will be greatly missed.

JEWISH TEA MEETING.—The annual social gathering of Jews, convened by Rev. J. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission, took place in the grounds of the Conference Hall last week. The main object of the meeting was to tell of Christ's blood-bought gift of eternal life for Jew and Gentile. The attention was manifest as Mr. Adler read slowly in the Hebrew tongue the story of Him who was led as a lamb to the slaughter. Mr. Noble related to the children the narrative of the little Jewish captive girl, who told her Syrian master of the prophet of Samaria, and other speakers followed in a similar strain. Cheers were given for the doctors, the deaconesses, the teachers, and other helpers ministering to the bodily and spiritual comfort of these children of Abraham. With a few closing words from Mr. Wilkinson, the meeting broke up till another year. Such meetings as these tend more than anything else, perhaps, to break down the mutual prejudices of Jew and Christian.

BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—The number of bouquets, with texts, sent out during the past month, amounted to 52,816; this includes 230 scrap or other ornamental cards; but this month has opened with so great a dearth of flowers, when compared with the increase of demand, that 1850 ornamental cards were taken from our reserves last Saturday to supply the deficiency, which seems a pity, when we consider how valuable these cards are in the winter. Both flowers and time might be spared if the size of the bunches were always uniform, and the stems made to slip easily into the card. We feel obliged to call attention to the increased expense caused by some of our friends sending hampers and boxes of flowers unpaid, and also by our being asked to return small hampers by Parcels Post. When the latter is employed, cardboard boxes should be used, which need not be returned. We shall be very thankful to receive any contributions of money, as our funds are quite exhausted. ANNE DOVE, Hon. Superintendent.

PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND, Author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," says:—

"I have come to think of Boll, since visiting it, as in many ways one of the most interesting places in Europe—interesting not only for its natural loveliness, its past history, its warm fellowships and cherished memories, but for its noble testimony to Christian faith, and for the problems in the deepest things of life and truth which it leaves for after years to solve. And certainly no holiday could be better spent than with the little colony of God's people, who are always to be found gathered round the old pastor, whose life work all these years has been this beautiful and mysterious ministry of prayer.

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

REMARKABLE CASE of ADVANCED CONSUMPTION at CONSETT, DURHAM.

The case to which I am about to refer was far advanced when application was made to me. There was little hope, humanly speaking; yet the patient recovered. The correspondence extended over two years, and during all that period she steadily continued my treatment.

The patient (M. S. SISTERSON) resides with her father at 6, BUDDLE-STREET, DELVES-LANE, CONSETT, DURHAM.

At the time she commenced, the doctors had declared her to be in the last stage of tubercular Consumption. The father describes her as "mere skin and bone; in a state of prostration heartrending to see. The cough terrible, and on some occasions three pints of corrupt matter vomited in the twenty-four hours." To this he adds, "the neighbours shook their heads, and thought the end would quickly come."

On referring to my books I find that forty-three letters of advice and instructions were sent from Coombe Lodge. In five months the local doctors pronounced her lungs to be fast healing. "It took a short time (the father writes) to bring her up from the brink of the grave, and the rest of the time to bring her to perfect health." Her recovery was slow, but sure.

The patient recovered so far as to discontinue my medicine at the close of this year. Being desirous to publish her case, I wrote recently to the father to know if she had continued well, and in a letter, dated May 18, he writes me: "By God's blessing your treatment has proved a thorough success. She is now stronger than before her illness, and in better health than she ever was in her life. Most people think that consumption is incurable, but we have proved it not so."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to GOD, their own FATHER and MOTHER, and true BIBLE Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d., contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables PARENTS to teach one child or a family of twelve children, TEACHERS to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, EDUCATED LADIES to teach all ages, or MINISTERS without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the

MANNA CAKE.

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. HAYWARD, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION, 10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. SHERRARD, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

"ALL ISRAEL SHALL BE SAVED."

BY

ADOLPH SAPHIR, B.A., D.D.,
Author of "Christ and the Scriptures," &c., &c.

With Preface by Professor Delitzsch.

Demy 8vo. Price SIXPENCE.

"'All Israel Shall Be Saved.' This, then, is the end—the consummation of the history of Israel. After a long period of unbelief and of guilt, there will at last be conversion and renewal. After a long period, during which they are scattered and under the chastisement of God, there will at last be national restoration and glory. Ichabod, the glory has departed. But at last the glory will return, never to depart again; and the name of Jerusalem shall be 'Jehovah Shammah,' 'The Lord is there.' The God of glory appeared unto Abraham; and the God of glory will appear again to the seed of Abraham. All Israel shall be saved!"—Extract.

A CRY FROM THE EAST TO THE WEST.

ON the last night of the Mildmay Conference, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe gave, in he closing address, a most solemn and heart-earching word, the burden of which was a cry o the Church to awake from her torpidity, nd do her Lord's bidding to "evangelise the vorld." Brief allusion was made, by the way, o the indifference of immense numbers of the opulation of London to the Gospel; but, robably for want of time, there was no etailed reference to the manifest duty of the hurch towards the masses of our home eathen. The Zenana and its need of Chrisan and devoted women; China, India, and frica, with their need of devoted men and vomen, were dwelt upon with thrilling arnestness, that moved me almost to tears; ut, while I listened, my heart wept tears lso for London, and especially for the East-nd of the metropolis, where the need of abourers is more deep and urgent than many t that Conference had any conception of. Ir. Radcliffe showed but one side of the hield; let me lift up the other for a moment.

I declare it to be an undisputed fact, exlain it how we will, that it is easier to get host of educated women, gentlewomen by irth, breeding, and education, for the enanas, or to go out to China, than it is to et one really cultivated woman to live and bour for God in East London! The same ay also be said as regards the opposite sex. ducated men, gentlemen, whose gifts and aining, if consecrated to Christ's service, ould give them an almost irresistible inuence and a vast power for good among the iling masses who fester in the East-end, are ot to be found there. I do not count Toynbee Hall," Whitechapel, where of late me Oxford men have been spreading the ospel of Broad-Churchism, and whose tempts to educate and civilise the masses em to me to be upon a merely human asis, that at once ignores the deepest needs sinful hearts, and God's only remedy for e disease of sin. But of truly converted d evangelical men, having time, leisure, eans, education, and other gifts, who are illing to leave all, and for Christ's sake to ve and to labour in the East-end, there are ot a dozen outside of the clergy of different nominations, and those professional men hose callings keep them there.

I know at least half a dozen valuable issionary undertakings, and as many rnest, all-alive churches, calling for just ch personal service as godly ladies and ntlemen can most efficiently render. Mr. oody's visit brought shoals of West-end lk, "Christian workers," to the East-end r a season; but where are they now? one, to a man, and to a woman. I have doubt Mr. Radcliffe's stirring words will nd out many devoted souls to the foreign ission-field. God grant they may. But at about East London, and its two millions of souls, in which only too few godly ministers are labouring, and these longing in vain for such co-operation with educated men and women in personal service as I have described—a priceless boon to the dense masses of our home heathen, as yet practically unreached by the Gospel. What about these? Have they no claims upon us?

I do not like to utter one word of despair; but, judging by past experience of all such movements, I fear these East-enders must remain as they are, unhelped, and their cry continue to go up to God unheeded by all, save those few who are already working among them, and who are being crushed by the overwhelming burdens they are compelled to bear almost alone.

For there is nothing in East London that looks heroic, whereas India, and even China, are "really too charming." Surely a call to Africa is much more likely to be Divine than one which comes only from the crying needs of poor common-place folk who speak our own tongue, and live so very near to us that for one shilling we can traverse the whole distance, and see for ourselves the case of the multitudes living without God, perhaps only because He is not seen moving about among them, in the consecrated lives of his own people. Down in East London it appears to be all dull, uninteresting drudgery, and the sentimental garments of a petty evangelicalism will, now that Mildmay is over, be gathered all the more tightly round the persons of "dear believers" who go to "delightful conferences," hear "precious truth," and then are off to the Highlands of Scotland, to the Lake district, or even abroad, while the Lord's poor among the masses of our fellow-citizens still hunger in their deepest heart, yearning to have the bread of life brought to them.

No philosophic systems, no infidel teachings, have ever accounted satisfactorily for the life Christ lived down on earth; that is altogether an inscrutable mystery, if Divine love be not the key. How, then, can we condemn those of the East-end who have never seen the Christ in self-emptying Christians, if immense numbers of them regard Christianity as a fair theory, indeed, but something in which they have no interest, and which is not anywhere, in their experience, "in touch" with the absorbing problems evolved in the struggle for existence, the fierce fight for daily bread? Preaching alone will not fill up the gap, or satisfy this heart-hunger. God wants men and women who will hear his voice saying: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Who will respond: "Here am I, send me: not alone to the foreign field of missions, but to the millions of our home heathen, living and dying around us, without any true knowledge of the better life"?

Surely, if the heathen field abroad now sends up the Macedonian cry, calling us from Western Europe to Eastern Asia, and thus reversing the order of things in Apostolic times, the same cry at our own doors calls aloud to West London Christians to cross over the boundary that so narrowly and yet widely separates them from East London heathen. God give them grace to hear and to obey! A LAYMAN,

THE PRAYER OF FAITH.*

THE lives of Dorothea Trüdel and of Pastor Blumhardt are well known to many readers, but the unprecedented attention now given to the subject of Faith-healing will lead many to study for the first time these simple yet startling records of supernatural healing in modern times; and a careful study of these records, which are supported by abundant reliable testimony, will tend at once to establish the conviction that the prayer of faith still saves the sick, and to prevent the extravagances which, in many minds, and in the teaching of not a few, are associated with this belief.

For thirty years the work begun by Dorothea Trüdel in the little Swiss village of Männedorf has continued to grow. She died in 1863, while the second house for her patients was in course of erection. There are now ten houses under the management of her successor, M. Zeller, who was formerly her helper, and who is also largely engaged in the work of an evangelist. The antecedents of Miss Trüdel bespeak confidence in her character and work. Her mother showed her the way of faith by a life of the most beautiful devotion and trust in circumstances of great and manifold trial. Sickness among her workpeople, and her own sympathy and prayerfulness, occasioned the first experience of the "gift of healing," and from this time her prayers were constantly and increasingly sought, with the result, in many of the most desperate cases, of unquestionable cures.

Persecution, which was intended to destroy her work, only subjected it to the most searching examination, with the result of justification by the Supreme Court, and some of the highest personages, including Professor Tholuck, testified to its genuineness and value.

The work of Pastor Blumhardt was equally unsought. The great institution of Bad Boll was distinctly the result of the village pastor's prayers for the sick, who crowded about him, more than 100 towns and villages being represented in his congregation on a single Sabbath morning. He was even more noted for his discernment of spirits and wise counsel than for his power in sickness, and nothing in the story of his steadily growing work, or in his placid and genial countenance, will allow the suspicion of fanaticism. Blumhardt died in 1880, but Bad Boll continues to be a house of prayer and healing, under the management of his two sons.

We note the important points on which these divinely accredited healers differed from the faith-healing teachers who are mostly followed among us. None of the three regarded healing as a right which should be claimed by every Christian. "It is not professed to heal all," says the author of Miss Trüdel's biography; "it is not even expected that the answer to prayer will be immediate."

* DOROTHEA TRÜDEL; or, The Prayer of Faith. Translated from the German by D. M. P., 1s. PASTOR BLUMHARDT AND HIS WORK, by Rev W. GUEST, 1s. Morgan & Scott. THE MINISTRY OF HEALING; or, Miracles of Cure in all Ages. By A. J. GORDON, D.D , Boston. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton.

Of Blumhardt we read, "he possessed a keenness of spiritual insight that judged, with rarely mistaken accuracy, whether the removal or the continuance of disease would be in accord with the will of God." We are also told that on one occasion "the pastor and his wife were deeply anxious: they were watching the sick-bed of their youngest child, not six months old." Of Zeller we are told, "He does not hold that all sickness is the result of sin, or unbelief, nor does he ignore that holiness is intended to be worked out through chastening, and that in this, as in all ages, God gives grace to rejoice in suffering."

In accordance with this we have failures frankly acknowledged, while in some of these cases the fact that great spiritual blessing was obtained by those who went away unhealed in body was evidence that the physical boon was not withheld on account of the lack of spiritual receptivity. Faith did not prevent typhus fever from attacking the Homes at Männedorf on two occasions, and on the first of these Miss Trüdel died, at the age of 48, having in the course of her illness made the same mistake as Oliver Cromwell, for, feeling "free from fever, she asked for her clothes, remarking, Now I am well again I must get up and acknowledge that all my illness was only a trick of the devil's!'"

The difficulties and achievements of prayer for the sick are suggested by the following extracts from the record of Zeller's work: "No disease is found to be more obstinate than epilepsy;" "perhaps there is hardly any disease which resists believing prayer for such a long time as epilepsy;" "we have had many wonderful answers to prayer for poor drunkards and epileptic persons." Such extreme cases as cancer, almost unapproachably offensive, and illness judged by physicians to involve mortification of the bowels, are attested to have been cured, the latter immediately, though death was confidently expected before morning.

The third volume named above is, as far as we know, the fullest examination of Faith Healing yet given to the public.

It is a candid, thorough, and highly intelligent inquiry, in which the author considers, in successive chapters, "The Testimony of Scripture," "of Reason," "of the Church," "of Theologians," "of Missions," "of the Adversary," "of Experience," and "of the Healed." The chapter on the testimony of the Church is specially remarkable, as furnishing evidence which will be new and surprising to most of the prevalence of Faith cures throughout the first three centuries, and in connection with all great revivals of evangelical faith afterwards. The author truly observes that the worldly age of Constantine is a significant date at which to fix, as some have done, the termination of the age of miracles. The evidence which Dr. Gordon had collected seems to have inclined him, in one or two of the later passages of his book, towards an extreme conclusion, but his position is, on the whole, that of Blumhardt, Trüdel, and Zeller, as appears from the following extract: "It is as true here, as in any other field, that God acts sovereignly and according to his own determinate counsel. He sees it best to recover one person at the instance of his people's prayer, and He may see it best to withhold such recovery for the time from another."

MANCHESTER Y.M.C.A.—Mr. Newett, secretary of this Association, has sailed for America, intending to utilise his vacation in visiting different parts of Canada, in order to add to his list of suitable people to receive young men adapted for farm life. This branch of his work has been for the last two years helpful to many.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

NOTES BY A MINISTER.

ANOTHER Mildmay Conference has come and gone. Another time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord to many souls, gathered from distant places and differing ecclesiastical organisations, who yet can gather on the common ground of "One body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, through all, and in you all."

The prominent thought connected with this Conference was the service of the "One Lord." The three days were successively devoted to the contemplation of the Preludes to, and Principles of, his Service; Himself the Pattern of Service, and his teaching as to the Pathway of Service; and, lastly, the Privileges and Prospects of his Service.

These well-arranged subjects were handled ably, and to edification, by the appointed speakers, and the feeling at the close seemed to be that, if there had been previous Conferences which had excelled it, through the exceptional power of some specially gifted teachers, yet to none did it yield in quiet, calm and holy influence, and that of a kind likely to be both practical and permanent.

One well-known feature of Mildmay was well maintained; a spirit of love and forbearance characterised all that was said, and when one saw how many difficult ecclesiastical systems were represented, from the Bishop of the Church of England to the rank and file of the Salvation Army (of which not a few of the well-known bonnets and uniforms were to be seen), it was plain that grace was needed and that grace was given to avoid what might offend, and to act out the good advice of Joseph to his brethren, "See that ye fall not out by the way."

If one might note any feature which specially distinguished the teaching of this Conference, it would be the tendency to keep to the old ways and old paths of truth as the safest and most profitable for the soul. Although the afternoons of the first two days were occupied in the large hall by the well-known brethren who specially plead for holiness and the deepening of the spiritual life, there was nothing in what was spoken that could be accused of divergence from Scripture truth, and, indeed, both in these and in the general meetings, in both the addresses and prayers, one could trace, at times, the expression of a wish to be kept from being led away into paths of extravagance, and a desire to speak nothing but "words of truth and soberness." It may be that late excesses in the teaching of some of those who would connect holiness with faith-healing have led to this. Certainly the effect that such teaching seems to have produced was one of reaction from, rather than of assent to, any doctrinal peculiarities.

We believe that this Conference will be fruitful in spiritual profit to those who have attended it, as well as to those who may read the report of its teaching. The subject considered was an eminently practical one, and we pray that much practical result may follow both in consecration and fresh consecration of many of the Lord's children to his service.

BY A LADY-WORKER.

Blessed foretastes of the gloryland beyond. Milestones of the past twenty years, each one recording the faithfulness of the covenant-keeping God.

The large-hearted William Pennefather, who first devised the thought of giving joy to our Blessed Lord, in thus gathering together his saints of every name and creed, is now with Him, but the sweet savour of his gentle, loving spirit still remains, both in and upon the assembly. And carefully do his successors carry out his every wish and way.

Several years have passed, owing to the duties connected with a busy life-work in our great city, since we had mingled with these hallowed scenes. Standing on the grounds, how deeply interesting is the scene! What holy interchanges of brotherly greetings! We just imagined the beloved originator once more walking amongst these brethren and sisters, as was his wont at Barnet, his arms around two fellow-disciples, asking them to hold him up in prayer, for in the body or out of the body he could not tell, for he had been, during the three days, into the inner presence of his adorable Lord.

We pictured his delight beaming upon yonder company of well-tested evangelists, warriors, weather-beaten, pausing here a brief moment in their fight with sin of every kind amongst our drink-ridden masses.

None would have touched William Pennefather's heart more than this little group of Bible women who work down, down, in courts and alleys where no eye but the Master's sees them. They, too, were getting an inspiration. As one very devoted friend said to us, "This feast lasts me all the year to dwell upon."

Here comes the director, linked with a bright young saint from India, radiant with his love for souls, and on his other arm the leader of our holy songs, just returned from an evangelistic tour in the States. Workers, rich and poor, young and old, labouring among Jew and Gentile, exchange their experiences, and, as one said, "All ends of the earth are here united to give Him all the praise. No 'isms' here; all one in Christ Jesus."

Friends filled the hall to everflowing, as John Wilkinson poured the Holy Spirit's light upon Scriptures bearing upon the Jews. Then, again, the hall is filled to hear of far-off lands from brethren amongst us for a brief season. How definite their purpose—souls for Christ: foretaste of the gathering-time when every crown shall be cast at his blessed feet.

Then we picture the loving heart meeting on that sward with kindred poet spirits. Here comes one—the writer of asking if we recognise the old visitants o these happy reunions.

> "Lord, we hear of showers of blessing"—

The songs of praise composed by one whose very soul at such seasons seemed to breathe "the grand and blessed music" of our heavenly home, still express the thoughts of those who assemble, and lead them into the very vestibule of heaven. So simple and pure they are, the thousands find it easy and natural to pour forth in them the praises of their hearts.

Sweet were the refrains all around the building from the various crowds waiting for the opening of the doors—touching symbol of that time when we shall sing the one song, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain."

As the hundreds were slowly ascending the stairs, step by step, one would be heard saying, "This reminds us of the tribes going up to Jerusalem."

Recognitions were being made; eyes meeting that had not beheld each other for long years; in the crowd hand grasped hand with a smile or a sigh, and a look upward expressing that we shall meet soon at Home, when the meetings and the partings shall have all passed by.

Our dear leader started with the keynote from Nehemiah: "Even so must we labou on, with trowel and prayer till the Maste comes." It was but a brief season for th sharpening of our every power, to renew the attack upon our mighty foes, with fresh ingathered grace and light upon "Go ye, therefore, into all the world and teach all nations, and lo, I am with you." As we were enjoined: "Let myriads of courts and alleys feel your presence, as you go forth with renewed strength from having received the food of God."

How the sainted originator, and the loving heart who still, amid seasons of weakness of body, carries out his wishes for the glory of the Lord Jesus, would have rejoiced, could they but have seen the commingling of Christian friends on the lawn between the meetings—warriors from the far-off fields, of all ages, colours, and climes; young noblemen soon to be off, laying their gifts of language and education at the feet of Him who alone is worthy to receive, not only our gold, but ourselves, and who "is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."

Many a student from the Church Missionary Colleges and from Harley House, and many of Mr. Spurgeon's young men, are here with quickened appetites for the words of life that shall be to them food for years to come. As we gaze upon these untried soldiers of Christ, we can but hear in our inmost soul the voice from the throne, saying, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life." One asked, "What is to be after all this power and presence of God?" We could but feel that the answer must be, scattering, to spread the glorious Gospel to all ends of the earth. If this fruit follow every Conference held in 1885, here and in America, how the heart of our Lord shall rejoice!

The teaching was throughout most practical and helpful in bringing out things new and old from the Holy Scriptures. Twenty years ago, at Barnet, such a season sent forth hundreds of devoted men and women who are still in places of testimony, and able teachers of Bible-classes among all sorts and conditions of men. Let these thousands go forth afresh, filled with the Holy Spirit, teaching hearts about the meek and lowly Jesus. We need not fear that our country shall be betrayed back to Romanism, even though thousands of ecclesiastics are training the people to forms, instead of lifting up a real, living, crucified Christ, who alone can draw all hearts to bow to Him alone.

The closing issues were very solemn, and hundreds of young Christians in the galleries seemed filled with the grave responsibilities they had been led to consider in the preludes and privileges of work for God. We felt assured this great and wicked city would be the more blessed, as each went away "Looking up unto a loving Father's face as they went forth to save." Most cheering was this, as we heard valiant men expressing themselves bowed down in the fight with our debasing city drunkenness, their hearts torn with its never-ending miseries, and forced, by inability to secure sleep, to retire for a season. We could but cry to the living God for power for the young workers to continue true to their Lord and their ribbon of blue, teaching the young everywhere to abominate intoxicating drink—pure for Christ, for such He is willing to bless.

One most prominent feature of this most profitable time has been that, almost without an exception, every speaker and leader in prayer honoured the Precious Blood as our foundation truth. There was no Cain's offering, but the Lamb verily was in our midst, lifted up for cleansing and power for service for God.

Many students and women missionaries will soon be away to gather spoils; let us continue to bear them up in prayer, for the time is brief, when sowers and reapers will have to render their account and receive their crowns of life, righteousness, and joy.

Absent toilers in the great vineyard, and sick and aged members of the body were frequently upborne to the Throne of Grace, and earnest petitioners pleaded that they might be filled afresh with Holy Ghost power and become strengthened with all might in Christ Jesus.

BY A FREQUENT ATTENDER.

Amongst the many excellencies of the Mildmay Conference may I, as an old habitué, venture to make a suggestion, learning a lesson for the future from the past. I remember that in these columns, not long ago, were quoted the words, "He made known his ways unto Moses, his acts unto the children of Israel." God spake face to face with Moses as with a familiar friend, and could talk with him of his secret ways and purposes. But the people generally could not enter into these, and they, for the most part, were taught by the outward acts of God. Their whole history was a series of object-lessons, not only to themselves, but unto us on whom "the ends of the ages are come."

Instead of shaping our course according to this manifestation of the wisdom of God, we multiply sermonic discourse, and minimise its illustration by the story of work done. We have just had eighteen expository, hortatory, or didactic addresses, in the large hall, ineffectively, because insufficiently illustrated by three brief missionary narratives, in one of the downstair rooms, and by the concluding address of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe in the large hall. Yet not altogether inefficiently, for in these was condensed the influence of the Conference. Indeed, with myself, and, I doubt not, with many more of the comparatively small number who had the privilege of hearing him, the words of the silver-haired veteran of the South Seas, Rev. J. G. Paton, from the New Hebrides, will abide as containing the very essence of the week's utterances. How could it be otherwise, when in that intense half-hour was concentrated the force and feeling, the personal experience of seven and twenty years among savages, a large number of whom have been by his and others' ministry, transfigured into followers of the Lamb?

I am not unaware of the difficulty of arranging for the Conference, but every year ought to show, in improved plans, the result of twenty years' experience. But things were more elastic in Mr. Pennefather's time. If he had a man of mark upon the platform, he gave the audience the benefit of hearing him. I think, if he had had this saintly flame of holy fire at his side, he would have let him be heard each day. A friend of mine told my son, if Mr. Paton were speaking within a hundred miles, not to lose the opportunity of hearing him.

My suggestion is that at least half the speaking in the large hall should be of work done or needing to be done. John Wesley's method was a shrewd and wise one. Of two preachers one expounded and the other exhorted, one taught and the other applied the teaching.

> "Men of thought, and men of action, clear the > way!"

The men of action are as needful as the men of thought; and there are always in the country men who have fought the Lord's battles in the high places of the field, at home and abroad, who would hail the opportunity of appealing to such an audience, and who would be welcomed by that great congregation.

There was, doubtless, a necessity for a change as to the representation of Christian work in the afternoons. Room could not be lent to an unlimited number of missions, home and foreign, for the exposition of their work, and selection was always difficult and might sometimes seem invidious. But, if it be remembered that the first consideration is due to the visitors, the difficulty is at once to a large extent removed.

These hundreds of Christian workers from the provinces naturally wish to learn something of work in London, and the most representative operations should be placed before them. I venture, therefore, to suggest that the afternoon meetings, discontinued two years ago, should be recommenced, with this difference, that the Directors should retain control of them, and make such arrangements as would present as large and as varied an amount of experience as possible on each of as many subjects as should be found convenient. There are many important missions of which we should like to hear, and many prominent workers we should like to see, at Mildmay. Justice to itself and the desire of the people would combine to require that the manifold beneficences in town and country, connected with Mildmay itself, should have a foremost place.

One last word with regard to the discourses. Is it not possible that God may have specially spoken to some men during the year, on subjects which might very profitably be discussed at Mildmay? If some means could be devised for the hearing of such messages from God, they might advantageously take the place of discourses which must more or less have the character of being made to order. For the more methodically and geometrically the subject for consideration is arranged by one mind, the more difficult is it for another mind to adapt itself to it.

If it would not be deemed profane, I would even ask for a Mildmay Free and Easy Conference, confining it, however, to the freedom and ease with which the Holy Spirit speaks through men of his own choosing, and whom He is certainly able and willing to make known to wise men who, like the Directors of the Mildmay Conference, desire to give the opportunity to inspired men to speak.

NEW YORK.—In the report of the American Bible Society it is stated that in three years nearly 400,000 families had been found without Bibles.

THE INVENTIONS EXHIBITION.—Lord Shaftesbury has presented to the Executive Council of the Inventions Exhibition a memorial from 700 English exhibitors against the Sunday opening of the building as suggested by the Sunday Society. These signatures were collected in one week, and many of the exhibitors have expressed by letter to Mr. Charles Hill, Secretary of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, their strong disapproval of Sunday opening.

Y.M.C.A., MADRID.—A branch of the Young Men's Christian Association has been recently inaugurated in the Calle de la Ballesta, Madrid. The purposes of this Association are, instruction in the Holy Scriptures, the spread of the pure Gospel, the acquisition of useful knowledge for advancement in life, mutual edification in the struggle against evil, brotherly aid in temporal things, and the making of the Institution a common centre of honest recreation and lawful pleasure. The Association has no denominational or ecclesiastical colour. While the temptations for young men in this country are very numerous and powerful, they are much greater in Spain, where there is no Sabbath, and where immorality of every kind is so widespread. The management of the Madrid Young Men's Christian Association will be glad of books in English, Spanish, and other languages, of such a character as will conduce to the moral and spiritual benefit of the readers. Just at the beginning of this new work financial help is greatly needed, and contributions will be gratefully received by Mr. F. A. Atkins, 8, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.

Notes and Comments.

OUR present Double Number contains the whole of the morning and evening addresses at the Mildmay Conference, together with those on the first and last afternoons in the large hall. The remainder will be given in our next. Our readers can do very much to extend our circulation; and we shall be greatly obliged if they will use every opportunity of introducing the paper to the notice of their friends.

Such a strange story of human perversity and diabolical wickedness has very seldom seen the light as that which Mrs. Ellen E. Dickinson tells in New Light on Mormonism, published by Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls, Fleet-street. From perfectly unimpeachable sources she has collected a body of evidence showing that the Mormon system was born of fraud, trickery, and deception; that it has grown and flourished through a combination of these, added to ruthless despotism, and crimes of the reddest dye. The fact that the system has attained its present proportions is a singular illustration of human credulousness and deceivability, and a strong witness to the truth of the Scriptural predictions respecting the last days. If the facts collated in Mrs. Dickinson's book could be proclaimed on the housetops wherever the Mormon missionaries go, the Satanic imposture would surely receive its death-blow.

The American Government seems to have woke up at length to a sense of the evils with which they are threatened through the growth of Mormonism. It has become so thoroughly organised, however, that its suppression now will be no easy task. The 'Edmunds Law' against polygamy is being enforced, in spite of the difficulties thrown in the way of its application, and we observe from the most recent American news that several prominent Mormon leaders have disappeared, fearing lest they should fall into the hands of the authorities.

The earth gives up its secrets to confirm the faithful, and to authenticate for a sceptical age the Word of the Lord. Modern research has not done so much for the book of the Acts of the Apostles as for other parts of Scripture. Confirmations are now, however, forthcoming in this direction. The excavations at Ephesus, on the site of the Temple of Diana, are showing how real was the conflict of Christianity there with an imposing and magnificent idolatry. The researches make manifest that Diana was the patron goddess of the city; that her worship was predominant; that the town clerk was a functionary identified with her homage; that the orders of her hierarchy were numerous, and that the goddess claimed a worship far and wide. All this wondrously accords with the narrative of St. Luke.

Ephesus occupies a prominent place in subsequent books of the New Testament. As Dr. Lightfoot has pointed out, after the destruction of Jerusalem the centre of gravity of Christendom was transferred to this Asiatic city. But nowhere have we ampler proof that it was Christianity in its complete testimony, and its sublime spirituality, that won this triumph over a most corrupt, sensuous, pompous, and popular idolatry.

It is not good for man when wonders are counted as common things. Startling are the shakings of the earth just now. In Java volcanos have poured out fiery eruptions, and 500 natives are reported as having perished. In Cashmere the loss of life from violent shocks of earthquake is said to have amounted to more than 3000 persons, and to the destruction of tens of thousands of dwellings. Strong shocks of earthquake, with damage, have alarmed Switzerland, and indications of the shaking have, we are informed, been observed in our own city of York. It would be a marked sign of the last days should transient excitements and agitations make men insensible to the voice of the Lord as to the instability of the present order of things.

Mere denominationalism does not seem to be in favour. Mr. S. Morley recently spoke of being "sick" of it, at a chapel opening in North London; the Bishop of Winchester declared, at a recent meeting of the Home Reunion Society, that he was receiving "many applications from Nonconformist ministers for priests' orders;" while The Record, in a late number, had an article against the new Ritualistic position taken by Canon Liddon; and a Churchman, who is a D.D., asks in the same paper for national humiliation on account, among other reasons, of "the deplorable state of the [Established] Church." The mere shibboleths and human arrangements of the past produce restlessness and dissatisfaction now. Men want the essentially divine.

The abominations of Monte Carlo are becoming intolerable. The Association formed for their suppression has received expressions of sympathy from the Governments of Italy, Germany, Great Britain, and the United States. Better still, Mr. Henry Thompson, the President of the Association, has received a letter, containing the following words, from a French Senator, who is Reporter to the French Committee that has been sitting on the subject:—

> "The Committee is 'unanimous in thinking that the honour of the country and respect for general morality compel our Government no longer to tolerate the criminal enterprise which disgraces a fragment of French territory;' that 'there is no doubt the Senate will manifest the same feeling;' and, finally, that 'there is every reason to hope that the French Government is about to take the matter in hand.'"

"The worse the better" is a proverb that justifies itself sometimes in relation to wickedness. Its culmination becomes its destruction.

We have always sought to maintain that practical English Christianity should touch the roots of prevalent social evils. We observe with great satisfaction that the Subjects Committee of the next Church Congress at Portsmouth have given prominence in their proposals to many burning social questions, and are soliciting in reference to them, speakers from both sexes who have made these subjects a special study.

One may again ask what has become of the Romish doctrine of the infallibility of the Pope? The Irish bishops have returned from Rome, and have been busily engaged, with the accompaniments of bands and fireworks, in addressing their flocks, and in receiving purses of sovereigns. Yet they have carefully abstained from saying anything calculated to strengthen the people in the seemingly old-fashioned belief as to the infallible judgment of his Holiness. As a rule the utterances have been less political than usual, much warning advice with respect to agrarian and other crime having been given.

The Archbishop of Cashel has been an exception; but, even in his ultra-Nationalist speeches, there was no statement of the old doctrine. On the contrary, there were some singular admissions and statements. The once infallible Pope can "now no longer be imposed upon by interested parties as to the aims and necessities of Ireland," he is "the best judge," and he has "enlightened wisdom and discretion," Dr. Croke asserted. He urged the need for the appointment to Rome of a representative ecclesiastic from Ireland "with a plentiful purse," to be furnished by the Irish people. Such a representative, with ample means, "would be of immense service to the Irish cause in the Eternal City." This is plain speaking, but it points to back-stairs influence rather than to infallibility.

Bartholdi's famous statue has just arrived at New York. Visitors to the Paris Exhibition in 1878 may remember seeing the gigantic head of a female figure emblematical of Liberty, which figure was to be made in bronze and offered as a gift by the French Republic to the Republic of America. The bronze plates forming this huge statue have just arrived at their destination, and, when mounted on the granite pedestal prepared for their reception, will form the largest statue in the world. The female figure has a crown on the head, the points of which will at night be lighted by electricity, and in her right hand she holds a huge torch, which will also be covered by a mass of electric lights.

The light from the statue shines over New York harbour, and the designation of the whole is "Liberty Enlightening the World." Strange assumption of human pride, when the Word of God has declared that Jesus Christ is "the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Himself said, "I am the light of the world." Had the Church been true to her trust, then would have come to pass the fulfilment of the Lord's other words, "Ye are the light of the world," and of the injunction of the Apostle, "Among whom shine ye as lights in the world, holding forth the Word of life."

One device of the enemy is to banish the Scriptures as much as possible from the eyes and minds of the people. In a large number of Sunday-schools in America, where the International series of Sunday-school lessons is taught, a Bible is rarely seen. Each scholar is supplied with a Lesson Leaf, and each teacher with a Quarterly Lesson Book. On the former is the passage of Scripture selected for the day, in the latter a series of questions and observations for the use of the teacher. The effect of this is that neither teacher nor scholar becomes familiar with the place in the Bible that the lesson occupies, or with the context of the lesson. It is impossible to refer to any parallel passages, so that the amount of Bible teaching given is reduced to a minimum. Moreover, the temptation to many teachers to forego much preparation is very strong, as they can find a certain amount prepared for them. Lesson Leaves and Teachers' Helps should be banished from the Sunday-school room, and the whole Bible, applied by the Holy Spirit, substituted.

We cannot possibly give space to the numerous letters we receive for a share in the Day in the Country Fund, but we earnestly press upon our readers kindly to contribute freely and at once, so that we may be able to divide substantial amounts amongst the hundred missions whose children and mothers are eagerly longing for a sight of the fields and woods and a whiff of country air.

At the first session of the Mildmay Conference, Mr. S. A. Blackwood, Chairman, said :—

> “ I feel I may mention, as one not responsible for it myself, the great need there is for substantial help for the work carried on in and from Mildmay. Many of you know a great deal of that work, and put confidence in it. I believe others may not know so much. It needs help at the present moment—needs it very much. I am informed that he treasurer is behind-hand to the extent of not ess than £2000 ; and, more than that, another £2000 will be required by the end of the month. I need only mention this ; the Lord knows the need f his own work, and, if it must be curtailed, He will indicate it. I have been reminded of a verse ; may God teach us what it means : ‘ Sell that thou hast, and give alms.’ Helping God’s work does not consist merely in surrendering superfluities, but very often in the sacrifice of things we deem necessary. This work is great, extensive, blessed, and fruitful. I mention it to you, as authorised o to do, and leave it with you.”

We cannot doubt that the wealthy visitors o Mildmay will adequately respond to this appeal ; nor that those who are not so will espond according to their ability.

The Victoria Institute is to be congratulated on the interest of its nineteenth annual meeting. It has successfully encountered cience on its atheistic side. It has brought ogether an array of learned professors of cience, whose voice is unanimous as to the First Great Cause, and it has won a confidence that is attracting to it eminent persons rom all parts of the world.

Some of the Lord’s children, who are working for Him in the West of London, have been led to desire to meet in his name, o have fellowship in the trials as well as in he joys of his servants ; and then unitedly o seek fresh guidance and strength in the great warfare. All who labour for Him are ffectionately invited to meet on Monday, July 6, at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-treet, S.W. (near Victoria Station), at 4 to 5, and 7.30 to 9.30.

The great interest shown in the meeting held for Germans in the German language t Mildmay, on the second day of the Conerence, has prompted some brethren to have nother meeting on Thursday, July 2 (this ay) in the garden attached to Mildmay Conference Hall. Addresses will be given in English at 6 p.m. to interest English friends n this work. Count A. Bernstorff and Dr. H. . Ziemann will address. Tea and coffee t 5 p.m.

At a time when Christians are thinking much about helping young girls, it is necessary to arouse attention to the hardships and angers consequent on the dismissal of so many under-servants in large establishments, t the close of the London season, when it is enerally impossible to find other situations. A correspondent cites an illustrative case, nd adds :—

> “ I feel sure, if ladies would only think for a moment of the fearful dangers they expose girls to, y thus turning them, homeless, adrift, at a season hen no one else wants to engage them, they would eny themselves in many ways rather than do this rong. I have known such fearful results from it, nd often in the case of Christian mistresses.”
